The Trustees also approved an interdisciplinary Certificate in Asian Studies. This Certificate is NOT a major but is designed to supplement established majors (such as Anthropology, History, etc.) and certify that a student has completed a substantial amount of interdisciplinary study in courses pertaining to Asia in addition to the completion of a B.A. degree. The Certificate requires the completion of twenty-four credits from among the courses on the Asian Studies Course List within at least three different disciplines with a maximum of six credits of language study. Credits applied to the completion of a major may also be applied to the Certificate. The Certificate program is open to all students.

For further information about Chinese and Japanese language study, the Majors, or the Asian Studies Certificate, please contact the Asian Studies Program office in 804 Thompson Hall, (545-0886).

UMass Theater

To Tell 'Tales' In Washington

The UMass Theatre decided Chaucer meant what he said, in context or out, and used that wit to shape a prize-winning play out of Chaucer's poetry in "Canterbury Tales."

As regional winners of the American College Theatre Festival, the cast and crew of "Tales" will put on their play at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C. Friday, May 4. Ten regional winners were chosen from more than 300 college drama groups participating in 13 regional contests.

The UMass Theatre first presented its creative work last May on campus, and reopened in September. One critic called the work "an artistic achievement of great merit." Another said it was "ribald and irreverent without ever being obscene or tasteless." And a third was impressed by the scenery and props: "Especially good is a sequence where umbrellas are used as symbols of all manner of things– doors, windows, limbs, and appendages." symbols of all manner of things–doors, windows, limbs, and appendages."

Stories in the play come from Chaucer's "Prologue," "The Merchant's Tale," "The Pardoner's Tale," "The Wife of Bath's Prologue," "The Clerk's Tale," "The Prioess's Tale," and "The Miller's Tale."

Students and two faculty members--Marya Bednerik and Janet Craft--took Chaucer's poetic stories told by pilgrims on their way to Canterbury, and added music and dance movement, in a style called "dance theater." Some of the movement is choreographed, but much is improvised, changing the play somewhat each time it is performed.

The six cast members, the student technicians, and director Marya Bednerik will present "Canterbury Tales" at matinee and evening performances at the John F. Kennedy Center. Prof. David M. Knauf, head of the UMass theater department, will attend, as will UMass alumni in the Washington area.

Cast members are: Bonnie Bishoff of 55 South Prospect St., Amherst; Charlotte Lettis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald R. Lettis of 31 Ship St., Hingham; David Smith and Bruce Smith, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard I. Smith of Prospect St., Princeton; Katherine Anne Stanton, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Stanton of 376 Robeson St., Fall River; and Patrick Wrynn, son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Wrynn of 63 Lovers Leap Ave., Lynn.

This is the second time the UMass Theatre has won a bid to the American College Theatre Festival. In 1971 the student production of Aristophanes' "The Clouds" was presented at Ford's Theatre, by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and the Smithsonian Institutions.

Claim Convicted Killer Had $40,000 For Release

BOSTON (AP) - A convicted murderer who was released on furlough from Walpole State Prison reportedly had $40,000 to obtain that release, a state legislator told a special investigating committee Thursday.

Rep. William F. Hogan, D-Everett, told the Special Legislative Commission on Corrections that he heard that statement made by a "high corrections department official" at a meeting he attended.

It was not made clear, however, whether the money was actually used.

The commission devoted a long session Thursday to an investigation of how convicted felon Joseph Subilosky obtained the furlough last month from which he never returned.

Hogan revealed the name of his source to the commission and to Norfolk County Dist. Atty. George G. Burke, but he did not make it public.

Burke said that for the first time the investigation had raised the possibility of criminal activity and that "if this bears out, I will have to go to the grand jury."

Commission chairman, Rep. H. Thomas Colo, D-Athol, said that the commission already had tried unsuccessfully to contact the official named by Hogan. He added that the man was still in the state.

Hogan said that he was making no accusation but added, "Subilosky had the use of $40,000 to help him obtain his release from Walpole."

Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, attempted to block Hogan's testimony entirely, saying that it was "hearsy" and "second hand information."

Colo, noting that the statment already had been made public said, "There's nothing really to keep in hiding."

Your Head

Career In 'Plastics'

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q: I really don't know whether this is a psychological problem or not, but I'm a junior and quite confused about what kind of job I want when I graduate. I have a number of interests but the whole idea of choosing a career and working in a plastic job seems depressing to me.

A: Choosing one's occupation is an important aspect of creating that unique personal synthesis and philosophy of life that is one's identity. Freud defined normality as the capacity for love and work. Consequently choosing a career is significantly "psychological."

Today's uncertain economic situation, societal turmoil and rapid technological change make developing an "occupational" identity difficult. These factors have contributed to the breakdown of the "trade school" concept of a college education, where individuals would enter into a "track" he processed and then assume a pre-determined "slot" in the technology of our culture. While this has created a good deal of uncertainty and confusion for the individual trying to plan for the future it has also had the corresponding effect of allowing greater personal freedom to follow one's interests without undue "plastic" stereotyping.

The process of choosing a career begins with fantasy in childhood. Children imagine what they want to do when they grow up and express their wishes in play. Often they are influenced by a significant person in their life such as a parent, other relative or teacher. Adolescence is a period of tentative choice, where the feeling of infinite possibility in childhood needs to be modified to conform to certain realities. Individual assess their capacities (e.g. intellectual, Physical), interests (people, language, business, mechanical and/or scientific), values (aesthetic, economic, political, social and/or human welfare) and determine the level of training they desire. This period of tentativeness, transition from fantasy to real choice, and self-evaluation with its inherent delay of gratification can be quite stressful. Eventually a "workable" choice is achieved. One's occupational identity however does not remain fixed as there is further modification, specialization and shift in the adult years.

We recommend that you contact academic departments in your areas of interest for advice. In addition you can contact the Counseling Center, Mental Health and Career Planning.

If you are interested in health related careers plan, to attend Health Career Night, April 17, Tuesday at 8 p.m. at the Infirmary.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in YOUR HEAD. Send or bring your questions to 303 Machmer Hall.

Civil Liberty In The Philippines Subject Of Sunday Talk In C.C. Aud.

By MARNI ROSNER

The Theatrical Troupe of the National Committee for Restoration of Civil Liberties in the Philippines will give a presentation Sunday, April 15 in the Campus Center Auditorium at 9:00 p.m. There will be a panel on "History of the Philippines, U.S. role;" a slide show: "Prevent Another Vietnam"; a people's theater: "Under Martial Law"; and two guitarists playing national folk music and music from the present movement.

As the young people on the islands of the Philippines once more unite with the peasants in the inevitable struggle for National Liberation they are met with the familiar U.S. response of napalm, bombs, imprisonment and civilian slaughter. Through Theater, music, slides and discussion the Theatrical Troupe of The National Committee for Restoration of Civil Liberties in the Philippines hopes to bring us to an awareness of the present conditions under martial law in the Philippines.

Most areas of the world now suffering the effects of United States Imperialism were initially colonized by some other foreign power. The Philippines has the dubious distinction of American domination from the start. It was with penetration of the Philippines that America ceased to be a Republic and became an Empire. Those who heard professor Aptheker's lecture last week will remember that for more than a century involvement in the Philippines has been a focus for fusion first on anti-slavery with anti-imperalist struggles and later of anti-imperialist with all domestic struggles against racism and capitalist oppression. Those who listened to Professor Aptheker should also remember his quoting an American policy maker at the turn of the century as saying "we want the Philippines, not the Filipinos."

Forced to deal with the reality of a numerous and varied Filipino population, the United States did the next best thing; put more than a century's effort into trying to "Americanize" the Filipinos. Children are taught American history in schools and punished for speaking anything but English. Manilla is flooded with the latest of American culture. Oddly enough, today's Pepsi generation of Filipinos is no more enchanted with the trappings of United States Imperialism, including the dictator Marcos, than have been their forebears for the past century.

Controversial 'Skezag' At Amherst College

Sponsored by the Amherst Drug Education Committee, the event is open to the public without charge.

Considered "in a class with 'Woodstock' and 'Gimme Shelter' " by the New York Post, "Skezag" is a documentary about drugs. Filmmakers Joel Freedman and Philip Messina follow the life of Wayne Shirley, a black hustler, dope pusher, Vietnam veteran, and self-styled entertainer. The devastating results of Shirley's toying with the drug world are portrayed with "stark realism" in the words of the New York Times.

The film has received kudos from all corners. The Whitney Museum of Art summed up "Skezag" in its publication with these words: "Two vets, the ghetto and drug world, its sensitivity, genius and pathos as it has never been seen before."

Bleday Leads Ruggers Past Jeffs, 17-10

By WEBB ELLIS

The UMass rugby team made it 3 and 0 Wednesday afternoon when they defeated the Lord Jeffs 17-10 at Amherst College. Rookie winger Ray Bleday, playing in his first game on the "A" team, led the scoring attack with two touchdowns.

In the early going both teams were stymied by the cold weather and high winds. But after trading field goals with the Jeffs, the UMass offense exploded.

Outside center Nick Abbott scored his first touchdown of the season on a five yard run. Later, Bleday smashed over for his first score, and kicker Rick Scarpignato made the kick after. The score was 13-3 at the half.

In the second half Amherst began to apply pressure to the UMass defense. Their attack began with a field goal and two assaults on the goal line. UMass shored up its defense and held off the attack. This was the turning point in the game.

A sixty yard drive, led by some ferocious hitting and ball carrying by the forwards, set Bleday up for his second score from ten yards out.

In the closing minutes UMass led 16-6, but Amherst made one more drive and scored in the last play of the game.

Along with Bleday, "B" players Wally Elsmore and Matt Clark turned in fine games filling in on the "A" team.

The high winds on Wednesday nullified the kicking attacks in both games. But winger Rick Scarpignato still managed to kick a field goal and conversion for five points to bring his point total to a whopping 24 points. Averaging 8 points a game, he is the team's leading scorer.

In its first season of existence, the Boston University Rugby Club will visit UMass on Saturday. Get on out and see the action.

Rip Sewell, Blooper Pitcher, To Walk Again

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) - Rip Sewell, baseball's famous blooper pitcher of the 1930s and 40s, had both legs amputated in the last year but says his playing days aren't over yet.

Sewell, 64, says he'll be out on the golf course before this year is out, and then hopefully back on the diamond in the Old Timers League of St. Petersburg while at the same time learning to walk all over again with the help of artificial limbs.

Sewell, one of the most publicized pitchers of his time, had both legs removed below the knees because a circulation disease.

"It wasn't hard for me to accept," says the veteran of 12 seasons with the Pittsburgh Pirates. "I look at a lot of other people and they have it 10 times worse than me."

Sewell said he finds learning to walk again "a challenge."

"I'm getting along fine now," he said from a wheelchair at his home in Plant City, a nearby farm community where he has lived since 1939. "I have a lot of faith in the man upstairs."

His famous blooper ball sometimes rose 25 feet in the air before reaching the plate. "The greatest hitters in the world looked stupid hitting at it," he says in retrospect with a grin.

Poll Bowl Proposed

—The idea of a post-season head-to-head college football showdown between the country's first and second ranked teams is expected to be put to a vote at the executive committee meeting of the NCAA on April 26-28. If the executives approve, a mass vote of member institutions would still be necessary in order to make the game a reality. The showdown would be played on January 2 and would match the two highest rated major college teams according to the Associated Press poll as of that date.

—Providence College guard Ernie DiGregorio has been named the winner of the Lapchick Award as the country's outstanding collegiate senior basketball player. "Ernie D" won the honor with the largest margin in the three-year history of the award, beating such notables as Ed Ratleff of Long Beach State and Doug Collins of Illinois State, who finished second and third, respectively.

—Rumors are already circulating that Bep Guidolin will be replaced as head coach of the Boston Bruins before the start of the next regular season. According to stories published in Canada, former Canadien John Ferguson will be the Bruins next head coach.

—Jim Brewer, former Olympian and University of Minnesota forward, will reportedly be the first player chosen in next week's NBA draft. The cellar-dwelling Philadelphia 76ers have first choice and coach Kevin Loughery has indicated that, barring a trade, Brewer will be their No. 1 pick.

—Sprinter Warren Edmonson was offered a $5,000 bribe to throw a race during a professional International Track Association meet. The matter is presently in the hands of the FBI. Edmonson has won two of the first three races on the ITA circuit and is presently the tour's third-leading money winner.

—UCLA coach John Wooden reportedly advised junior All-American Bill Walton to leave school and play professional basketball because of the $2 million offered him by the NBA Philadelphia 76ers. Walton, however, will be ineligible for this years NBA draft as he did not file for eligibility as a hardship case. Among those players who did file and were accepted as eligible were Memphis State's Larry Kenon, former Olympian Dwight Jones of Houston, and national scoring champion William Averitt of Pepperdine.

—Heisman Trophy winner Johnny Rodgers entered the Lincoln city jail in Lincoln, Nebraska Monday to begin serving time on a 30-day jail sentence he received last year for driving on a suspended license.

IN THE DIRT—Amherst first baseman Jim McNitt can't handle a low throw from his shortstop and an unidentified UMass runner sprints to first safely. The Lord Jeffs and the Minutemen played to a 9-9 tie at Amherst yesterday. UMass meets Holy Cross this afternoon at 3:00.

UMass, Amherst Tie in Chiller

By MIKE BROPHY

Amherst rallied from a 3-0 deficit to take a 7-3 lead in the sixth inning before UMass battled back to tie it all up at 9-9 in the top of the ninth, which is the way it ended as darkness was soon to cover Memorial Field.

Tom White started for UMass and was looking fine until he suddenly lost his effectiveness in the sixth. The southpaw had held the Lord Jeffs scoreless while his batters had rallied for three runs off Amherst ace southpaw Don Douglas in the top of the second.

Nine Minutemen went to the plate in that second frame as Ron Beaurivage, Mark Palau, and Dan Kelley tapped consecutive singles to load the bases with none out. Two pop flies followed and with two down Tom White walked on four pitches. Pete Backstrom then reached on an error by Amherst shortstop Bob LaVigne before Eddie McMahon singled to right.

Douglas and White then settled into what looked to become a pitchers' duel. The pitching dominance cracked in the sixth frame, however, when White gave up four singles, a walk, and Tom McDermott was called for interfering with the batter. John Olson came in to give up a sacrifice fly and a single but the damage had already been done. UMass found itself in the position of trailing their cross-town rivals by four runs.

White struck out nine batters in his six inning stint and looked to have the situation in good hand until the cold got the better of him.

UMass committed five errors in the field as their defensive play was not as crisp as usual. Amherst, too, had their share of miscues as the Jeffs tallied four on the day.

Mike Flannagan is expected to start in this afternoon's contest with Holy Cross. The game marks the beginning of a four game weekend series that includes two with Holy Cross and two with Northeastern on Monday.

The Minutemen will be without the services of catcher Bill Ryan for the remainder of the season as he suffered a dislocated finger in the third inning when a foul tip glanced off his right hand.

In the bottom of the seventh, Douglas collected his second double of the day and later scored one of two runs as Olson fired three wild pitches in succession. UMass' pitching made a vain attempt to regroup and finally did quell the Jeff uprisings of the late innings but it would be up to the hitters to salvage any possible respect for the UMies. Mark Palau and Mike Flanagan provided the hitting punch that sent the tying runs across the plate in the ninth. UMass left two runners aboard when Tom Hickey retired the side in relief of Douglas who was lifted after 8-2/3 innings.

Netmen Try Again, at URI

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Maybe they should construct a huge bubble over the 12 tennis courts nearby Boyden Gymnasium. Add a heater and it's all set, because if the weather doesn't let up very soon, the netmen will find themselves winless, not because they'd lost every match, but because they hadn't played any.

Yesterday it didn't rain, it didn't snow. So the weathermen devised something called wind and cold. Apparently Amherst tennis coach Ed Serues was convinced. The result was another cancellation and UMass is still waiting to play their first match. Hopefully they'll be able to meet the Rams of Rhode Island this afternoon. That is, of course, unless the weatherman is planning a tornado for Kingston, Rhode Island.

Preditably today's lineup is the same as yesterday's. In order, from 1st to 6th singles it's Ted Donahue, Robert Schpeiser, Steve Ferber, Don Douglas, Fred Braley and Mike Philipp (then again it might be Mark Brass at #6. As of last check the sixth slot was still up in the air.

Should Rhode Island present problems for the Minutemen? Probably not. The wind is supposedly more ferocious down at Kingston than here at UMass, if you can believe that. But last year's match went to UMass 6-3, and Rhode Island has lost two or three of their top men.

Thus Kosakowski's crew will be looking to make mince meat of the Rams, who are projected as the third best team in the Conference, behind UMass and UConn.

Double's teams are pretty much set, but where they should be playing is still a mystery. The dilemma revolves around the fact that the doubles team's of Donaghue-Douglas, Philipp-Schpeiser and Ferber-Braley keep on beating each other.

The Amherst postponement, pushed up until next Friday, set up a five match in 8 day situation. It'll be Rhode Island today (by the way, they have a new coach who'll probably play a straight lineup. That means good ole Ted Norris, former Ram tennis coach, won't get to futs up his lineup just to knock off Kosakowski) then an away match at Vermont, followed by two home clashes, Tuesday's against Tufts and Thursday's against MIT.

Stickers Host FDU

By HOWIE BLOOM

The youth movement is over. The rebuilding stage has ended. After posting a less-than-impressive 3-8 record during the 1972 season, the stickers from Fairleigh Dickinson University are back. And they'll be here tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.

This year's squad has plenty of experience. Surprisingly, with the wealth of veterans at attack, midfield, and defense, the team which will meet UMass tomorrow has a freshman playing goal. Roger Cozzolino has allowed less than ten goals a game for the visitors thus far, in wins over Clarkson (16-6), Springfield (10-8), and MIT (14-1). The team's only loss was dealt to them by Princeton two weeks ago, 19-5.

At attack, Fairleigh Dickinson will field their three starters from last season, Ron Kaznocha, Mike McCormick, and Bob Reiss. The three placed 1st, 2nd, and 4th, respectively, in team scoring in 1972, and are leading the way again this season.

The starting midfielder for the visitors from New Jersey is almost the same as it was last year, with only one middie, Dave Phelps, having graduated. Mike Basil, Bob D'Amico, and Mark Camelotto, a newcomer to the first line, are an excellent two-way combination. They should give the UMass starting three, Dwight Blomquist, Hirsch Seidman, and Jack Maran, a real workout on offense and defense.

It is better left unsaid what the defense sounds like, because it'll mean more trouble but try these names on for size: Claudio Facchini, Matthew Kryjack, and Donald Ruocco. By the looks of the team's goals against record, this trio has been doing quite a job.

Garber's Gorillas will use the same starting lineup they have used the past couple of games, fielding the high scoring attack of Fred Michels, Pete Connolly, and Frank Garahan, midfield of Dwight Blomquist, Hirsch Seidman, and Jack Maran, and a defense made up of Bill Blaustein, Rich Lally, and John McCarthy. See you there, at the upper Boyden field.

Runners In BC Relays

By EARLE BARROLL

Something pure and simple has happened to New England track. It has just gotten better, period. So much so that a team like Harvard that has preferred the company of Princeton, Penn and Cornell for all these years has decided to join UMass, Boston College, Dartmouth, and Northeastern among others for a little get-together tomorrow afternoon at B.C. Stadium.

"They've pulled a snob job on the rest of New England track" said UMass track coach Ken O'Brien whose Minutemen will be one of the favorites in the ever increasing in stature Boston College Relays.

"They've always felt that Colgate and Princeton were better competition than UMass or Northeastern, but I can guarantee you there are a number of good teams in New England who could knock those teams off week after week. And I imagine that Harvard is finally realizing this."

O'Brien attributes the rise of in New England track to a nationwide trend that has recently been catalyzed by the advent of professional track and the emphasis television has placed on the sports pro or amateur. "More kids than ever have started to take track seriously due to all of this." he said, "and over a period of time it's going to show in the calibre of the competition."

As far as tomorrow's shindig is concerned Harvard is the favorite and should be. "They're rumored to be bringing along some 75 athletes," informed O'Brien. UMass will have 50. "But we're going down there to win it," he said. "This meet is the best indicator in New England as to what team has the best overall depth. And I've organized our talent to the extent where I feel we have a good shot in all the events."

Ditto the athletes. "It should be between Harvard and us," predicted co-captain and volatile spokesman Tony Pendleton whose verbiage is as quick as the legs and piston-like arms that have carried him to the top of New England sprinting.

"It's about time that Harvard finally recognized us," said Steve Levine whose duties range from co-captain to quarter-miles to 220's to mediator for the Pendleton oriented debates (usually with the long distance runners) before, not during ("You'll never find me running 15 miles"), but certainly after practices.

"I'll really feel that this is a good track team we have here at UMass," he went on to say. "No matter what anyone thinks. We're a much better team outdoors than indoors (they scored only one point in the New England's). And I'll guarantee you when the New England's roll around this spring Northeastern (the defending champ) is in for a lot of trouble and their coach won't be walking around this time with that big smile of his."

Faculty Union Poll Blasted

By BOB SCHEIER

The UMass administration over the weekend attacked a poll of faculty on the issue of collective bargaining by two affiliated faculty unions seeking to represent the UMass-Amherst faculty.

Provost Robert W. Gluckstern said Monday there was concern the poll violated a provision of both state and federal labor relations laws that make it illegal "to use coercion upon a faculty member." He also said the administration was investigating the poll and the possibility of legal action.

The poll, which union officials said was conducted over the phone on a random basis, showed 87 respondents in favor of collective bargaining, 87 opposed, 50 undecided, seven refusing to answer, and four non-eligible.

Neither Gluckstern nor staff attorney Sidney Myers would comment on more specific reasons about the administration's opposition to the poll, although Gluckstern mentioned that at the time the poll was taken, those sponsoring the poll were not identified.

However, Myers said even if the sponsor (the Massachusetts Society of Professors and American Association of University Professors) had been identified when the poll was conducted, he felt there may still have been a violation of the labor relations law.

Gluckstern and Myers said they would have no further comment on the poll until more investigation of the case had been done.

Associate professor of zoology Larry S. Roberts, co-chairman of the MSP—AAUP campaign committee which authorized the poll, said the poll was anonymous to assure it would be unbiased.

He said he was "gratified" at the amount of faculty in favor of collective bargaining, and defended the poll as an attempt by the union affiliates to find out where they stood on campus.

He also said he would "welcome" any university legal action against the poll, and said union lawyers were investigating the possibility the administration's blast against the poll were in itself illegal.

The poll, Roberts said, was conducted by the Western Mass. Interviewing Service of Longmeadow, and paid for by the Massachusetts Teachers Association affiliated with the Massachusetts Society of Professors at the local level, and the National Education Association (NEA) at the national level.

Roberts also said the executive committees of the two organizations did not know of the poll, to ensure its secrecy.

According to Roberts, the poll was taken to assess the unions' strength before an informal Unit Determination Hearing to be held tomorrow in Boston with the director of the state director of Personal and Standardization.

The hearing will try to determine which faculty and staff members would be included in the UMass-Amherst bargaining unit. If both sides agree on the unit, an election to choose a bargaining agent for the campus could be held as early as this spring, Roberts said.

Fifty per cent plus one of those voting in the election are needed to elect a bargaining agent. If the two sides do not agree on the makeup of the bargaining unit, a hearing is required before the Bureau of Labor Relations.

The controversy over the poll came as a group called the "Undergraduate Education Conference" sponsored a one day conference on the effects of Collective Bargaining on undergraduate education.

At the conference Monday, which drew approximately 50 faculty members and several top administrators (including Provost Gluckstern and vice-chancellor for student affairs Dr. Robert W. Gage), little was agreed upon as pro and anti-collective bargaining faculty members debated over the needs and effects of the process.

Student Government Association president Larry Ladd, in a morning panel discussion, said collective bargaining would let the faculty union bargain for the faculty, with the administration left to bargain for other groups—such as students.

Prof. Stanley J. Young of the management department, who is also a member of the executive committee of the AAUP, hit what he called the "implication of adversary relations between the faculty and students" in the discussion, claiming that "in the long run, the interests of faculty and students are more likely to be similar then dissimilar."

Professor of Botany Dr. Seymour Shapiro came out against collective bargaining, stating he felt it would reduce the ability of the university to adapt to changing conditions, and that students would be "frozen out when the others sat down to bargain."

He also said that when collective bargaining units negotiated in multi-campus systems, such as UMass, the negotiations tended to move towards the central office. He said this would hurt the Amherst campus.

Professor Howard O. Brogan, a Commonwealth Professor of English and president of the MSP, said he had no illusions that faculty "can get everything we wish through collective bargaining, but we can get more of what we want."

In the afternoon sessions, Ed Robreno, a professional organizer for the MSP, said each faculty contract at schools that had accepted collective bargaining were different and products of "power relationships, the preconceptions of those involved, and local conditions."

Good Morning, Teacher

By DON GLICKSTEIN

Bob Tobin, who teaches at Natick High, turned on a recording:

"Good morning, class. I am your substitute teacher..."

Chaos in the classroom. Kids start screaming and talking and throwing all sorts of things around.

"SHUT UP!" yells the substitute, and it is quiet.

"Thank you," she says.

A few seconds later, more chaos.

"SHUT UP!" yells the substitute once more, and it is quiet once more.

"Thank you," she says.

A few seconds more, and the chaos re-erupts.

Tobin turned his recorder off, and in response to the laughter the recording evoked in his audience of teachers, administrators, parents, and students, he understated, "I take it you've had some similar experiences."

Bob Tobin's introduction to behavior modification, "An Alternative to Punishment", was one of more than 500 lectures, discussions, demonstrations, films, and happenigs held during the University of Massachusetts School of Education's Marathon, April 9-13.

This Spring, the Marathon attracted 10,000 participants and presentors, from as far away as Minnesota and Dallas, Vietnam and New Zealand, to as near as Amherst and Hadley, Springfield, Worcester and Boston.

Dean Dwight Allen, always controversial and colorful, opened the Marathon by ascending with Associate Provost David C. Bischoff in a hot air balloon.

Holding a brightly-painted sign that read "Quality Education or Bust!", Allen observed that "serious educational efforts can be pursued light-heartedly."

Despite the Dean's words, the ethos of the Marathon was one of serious educational efforts being pursued seriously. For the teacher, confronted at one end with the ideals of open classrooms and affective curricula, and at the other end with hard realities of finance, illiteracy, and inability to cope or teach, Marathon events had a peculiar orientation.

What are the alternatives? What are the strategies for survival and education? The trends for solutions seemed to be less ethereal than in years past.

"Why is it always the humanistic teachers who get fired?" asked UMass Associate Professor Ken Blanchard. "Because they are stupid. So you are interested in being a change agent? What else do you know besides feeling strongly?"

To achieve a competence in instituting change, many Marathon speakers pointed out the need for stating the desired goals in behavioral terms, or as one speaker put it, "operationalizing fuzzy concepts."

"Pinpoint the behavior you want," argued Bob Tobin, "record the behavior, ignore disruptive behavior, and reward desired behavior."

Marathon speakers agreed that change involved more than "touchy-feely" and good intentions. But change was not impossible.

John M. Adams, for many years a teacher in Colorado told of how he introduced collective bargaining into his classroom by having his students set up a union. The students negotiated with him on matters such as grading penalties for tardiness, and length and number of assignments. One time, they went out on strike and picketed his classroom in protest of a grade he had given a student.

The American Bar Association presented several examples of how they had helped to make the classroom more reality-oriented, and how they had inculcated democratic values in their students by being democratic.

In New Jersey, the Bar is supporting the Multi-District Institute for Political Education (NDIPE). NDIPE works with 500 students in 19 schools as they are taught the fundamentals of legislative lobbying, political campaigning, and consumerism by actually working for bond issues, specific bills, and candidates. The students, selected at random, receive 6 social studies credits for their efforts. They are excused from other classes when they go off for days and weeks to the legislature and local communities, but must make up the work they miss in other subjects.

Not surprisingly, students share responsibility with teachers not only in the actual projects, but in the teacher training and the local community advisory boards. The whole program is run for a modest $78,000 annually.

The alternative schools, public and private, are continuing to grow, and their presence was loud at the Marathon.

Worcester, Pasadena, Springfield's SASSI Prep, Harlem Prep, New London, Cambridge, Philadelphia, Berkeley: the alternative schools are beginning to articulate the questions of evaluation, teacher training, financing, and curriculum which Psychologist Jim Bowles spoke on drug abuse last Saturday at the Room to Move Drug Symposium. He said that the problem of drug abuse is a many faceted one, and its solution lies in an understanding of society as a treatment for the causes of drug addiction.

How To Help An Addict

By PAM PERRY

Noted psychologist and drug counselor Jim Bowles, speaking at the closing session of the Room to Move Drug Symposium on Saturday, said, "The key to a drug free society is the ability to tie our yesterdays into our tomorrows in order to understand today."

Bowles, the Director of Minority Training Programs at the Eastern Pennsylvania Psychiatric Institute in Philadelphia, viewed drug abuse as a many faceted problem and said people of various cultures are different and therefore require different counseling experience. In the area of minority groups, Bowles uses history and a sense of cultural awareness to help the addict to return to a normal life in society.

"If you're black and can't understand the roots you can't blossom into the flower you're supposed to become," he said. By helping the black addict to understand and take pride in his race's history Bowles feels he will be better able to see himself as a worthwhile person.

The inferiority a minority group addict feels, said Bowles, is the direct result of a societal brainwashing process which began hundreds of years ago. He cited language, music, media, and education as prime examples of this deliberate process and said that to belittle someone's history is to destroy the most important aspect of his personality: his sense of self. The purpose of Bowles' cultural awareness program is getting people to feel better about themselves.

Speaking about the actual counseling of minority group drug addicts, Bowles stressed the distinction between rehabilitation and prehabilitation. Rehabilitation, he said, is phony. He cited cases in which he's gotten addicts into a job and then above him back into society to be solving the problems, he continues, the addict needs education as prime examples of

Southwest Still The Winner

In contrast, 36 or 10.8% of the conclusions occurred equally from 12-4 a.m., with 14 or 4.2% of the total between. Burglaries were equally high at 6 or 10.0% from 12-4 a.m. and 6 a.m. The most assaults, 6 or 10.0% were committed from 7-8 p.m.

Within the numbered areas into which the campus has been divided, area eighteen containing of Prospect, Maple, Lincoln and Washington had the highest crime rate. The greatest number of larcenies, 16 or 17.0% occurred here.

Areas 17 and 6 which take in the rest of Southwest had the second and third highest crime rates. The greatest number of assaults, 5 or 26.8%, occurred in area 16 containing of Prince, Cottage, Hawthorne, Patterson, John Adams and John Quincy Adams.

Coming fourth was area 1 - Sunderland, Hatch, Chadbourne, Greenough, and Orchard Hill. Here, here was reported the largest number of burglaries, 8 or 14% and vandalism, 10 or 17%.

In the residential areas the best amount of crime occurred in the East or Northeast Residential area, with this North and South and Berkshire which comprise area 1, very close behind.

Showed no rapes or attempted rapes were reported during these periods. A Dept. of Public Safety officer explained that most rapes occur off-campus although students may be abducted on campus or when hitchhiking.

These cases were handled jointly with the Police Department of the area in which the actual raping or attempt occurred.

With roughly starting traffic accidents during this period, it was seen that most accidents involving personal injury or property damage occurred between 4 and 8 p.m. and most hit and runs occurred almost evenly from 8-4 a.m.

A representative of the Dept. of Public Safety explained that the figures used in the charts are very rough and not 100% accurate. Violations or crimes occurring this semester year will not be made until July.

C.C. Dedication Honors Murray Lincoln

By MARK VOGLER

Nationwide Insurance officials presented is a ceremony Saturday at the University of Massachusetts a Murray D. Lincoln portrait to the campus center complex which bears his name.

Lincoln, who died in 1966, founded the Nationwide Insurance Companies of Columbus, Ohio and was a UMass alumnus from the class of 1934.

He also was a founder of CARE, the worldwide relief organization, and served as its president from its beginning in 1945 until 1957.

In addition to this, Lincoln was very active in public affairs. He served as chairman of President John F. Kennedy's "Food for Peace" task force and was a member of the national advisory council of the Peace Corps.

Dean W. Jeffers, Nationwide general chairman and chief executive officer, presented the portrait to Dennis Crowley, a member of the Board of Trustees.

John E. Fischer, president and general manager of the Nationwide companies, presented an accompanying bronze plaque to Hampshire Nation, student member and chairperson of the Campus Center. The portrait, which measures 40 by 48 inches, will hang permanently in the third floor lobby.

Also in attendance were: R. Richard Ball, vice president for public relations of the Nationwide Insurance Companies; F. Richard Harmon, vice president and regional manager of the New England Region of Nationwide Insurance Companies and members of the Board of Trustees, Building Authority, Alumni Board of Directors, Class of 1934 and the Student Union Governing Board.

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, in his introductory remarks, elaborated on Lincoln's accomplishments and said that the cheerfulness and dedication was "referred over and over again throughout his life."

"It is fitting that this building is named in honor of him. Because it offers such a wide variety of services and activities to a vast number of people, it is a valuable resource center of the University," he said.

"Murray was an energetic and innovative idealist. His belief that people can work together to help themselves characterized his long business career and his personal philosophy."

Labeling the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center "one of the finest facilities of its kind in the country," Bromery said that it is frequently used by student and faculty organizations and that it attracts numerous business and civic organizations for conferences.

UMass Buses - Something Right

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass experimental no-fare bus system, the only one of it's kind in the nation, has been called "fantastic" by Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Pittsfield.

But Conte isn't exactly unbiased, since he used his power as ranking minority members of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee to gain the $400,000 plus grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration necessary to set up the service over a year ago.

Conte, during a visit to UMass last week, said he was proud of the system because "perhaps for the first time college students in this area have a daily example of the Federal government's efforts to be something right."

And project director and UMass Professor William F. Lyons has announced that one of the goals for the future of the transit system is to expand its routes and integrate it with the Five-College bus system linking UMass, Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire.

The system has been called a success because on at least one route, it uses one seventh the amount of gas it would take to transport a comparable number of people by car. It has also been carrying more people, on the average, than the seats provided on the buses, and project administrators think that by the end of the semester it may reach capacity (all seats plus standing room full.)

The system operates eleven buses, which circulate around the campus and also to an apartment complexes along Belchertown Road, Sunderland Road, and in South Amherst. Another Route, south of Amherst along Rt. 116 and west along Rt. 9, is in the planning stages.

Anyone along the routes, except for children on their way to public schools, may ride the system indefinitely free of charge. They are identified by their green and red stripes, and an artistic rendition of "UMass" on each side.

During Conte's visit last week, project director Lyons cited statistics pending for the apparent success of the project:

-about 18 per cent of the normal bus passengers would be hitchhiking if the buses were not running.

-about 40 per cent of the riders are former auto drivers.

-about 31,000 people ride the buses weekly, more than any other transit service in Western Mass. on a per bus basis.

-raw, analyzed data seems to indicate that there has been a reduction in peak traffic conjestion around the campus.

-there are more empty spaces in outer-core parking lots around the campus.

Still under discussion with the UMass transit authority is what will happen to the service when the Fueling/gas crisis eases or the fall of 1974. UMass has already indicated that it would pick up much of the tab, which would probably be less than the present $700,000 because the research phase of the project would be completed.

It is hoped by administrators in the program that the tab will be picked up by the town of Amherst, and perhaps the four colleges.

Rep. Silvio O. Conte, in foot, on campus Friday for a ride on the free UMass buses now serving the campus and off campus areas. He joined the feelings of many students who he herself the service "fantastic."

"Quality Education Or Bust!"

traditional schools have not yet adequately answered.

The initiator of the Marathon, and perhaps for somewhat education itself, was set in Grace Allen in their lectures delivered during the week.

"We have a mission," Allen said. "To take a responsibility to enhance the quality of human life. Education must have to get on top of the process of change. We have to help people accept change as the paradox of their life."

Allen urged educators to recognize the complexity of the environment. "It is no longer possible," he said, "to have a paradoxical body of content everyone can be responsible for."

"The two basic skills of society should be reading and human relations," he emphasized. "Everything else is optional, because the option that you can't do anything."

Personal enrichment, a skill competency, and social service should be essential motivations for education, Allen continued.

Challenging the tradition of having neutral, objective teachers, Allen argued that schools should teach partisan values. "Let all values be represented," he said, "and let parents decide which values they want their kids to encounter."

"Everybody knows when 8th grade English is over," concluded the Dean, "because it's June. Educators should build a bigger dream. It can that credibility, society would simply let parents do the education of its children. We must seek to give society a higher vision than it has given itself."

addicts. The solution to the problem is to understand society and treat the causes of drug addiction.

Prehabilitation, Bowles continues with a recognition of the problem by the addict himself. His anger should be directed towards society and he and Bowles could be reason a collective concept. The addict, the family, and the community then this anger in constructive ways that will avoid the drug use for true expressed into another type of high.

In concluding, Bowles said that drug treatment must have a humanistic perspective. An addict must be given help from many sources, but the most important factor is making him aware of his society and how it has affected him.

S. Viets Raid Cambodia

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

TINH BIEN, Vietnam (AP)—South Vietnamese armored vehicles and helicopters swept back and forth across the Cambodian border Monday.

Sharp fighting was reported deeper inside Cambodia between government troops and Communist command forces east of Phnom Penh. Thirty-two Cambodian soldiers, including three top officers, were reported killed.

Dispatches from Laos reported a heavy outbreak of fighting on the strategic Plain of Jars. A combined force of Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese overran three government positions, the Defense Ministry in Vientiane said.

U.S. Attacking Communist Positions

In Washington, Pentagon sources reported U.S. warplanes had launched air attacks on the positions taken over by the Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese forces.

The informants said B52 bombers and F111 fighter-bombers hit near the town of Tha Vieng, south of the Plain of Jars. American air strikes in Laos ended after the two sides in that conflict agreed to a cease-fire on Feb. 23.

Earlier, the Pentagon said the attacks in Laos were "a major violation of the cease-fire."

American warplanes are being used in Cambodia where enemy troops are closing in on Phnom Penh.

About 25 South Vietnamese armored vehicles wheeled across the South Vietnamese border near here into Cambodia following reports a Communist division had moved into a cluster of hills.

Border Closed to Newsmen

Despite witness accounts to the contrary, some local commanders and Saigon command spokesmen deny their forces have crossed the frontier. The border was later sealed off to newsmen.

U.S. Bombers Hit Laos

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—North Vietnamese and Communist Pathet Lao forces overran a town in Laos Monday, prompting the Pentagon to order U.S. bombers to hit targets in that country for the first time in six weeks.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said the bombing was in response to "a major violation of the cease-fire."

Communists Control Tha Vieng

The Pentagon spokesman said Communist forces led by tanks and supported by heavy artillery had rumbled through and taken control of Tha Vieng, south of the vital Plaine De Jares region in central Laos.

"There has been a considerable fire fight there for a couple of days," Friedheim said of the battle between Communist forces and Royal Laotian troops for control of the town.

Beyond that, he could provide no details on the size of the North Vietnamese or Pathet Lao forces, or casualties suffered by forces under the control of Laotian Premier Souvanna Phouma.

A Pentagon source said American B52 bombers and F111 fighter-bombers were hitting Communist troop concentrations around Tha Vieng, but nowhere else in Laos.

American bombers have been hitting targets in Cambodia for about six weeks.

There has been no bombing by Americans in Vietnam since the cease-fire was signed Jan. 27.

Constitutionality of Bombing Questioned

Congressional critics have attacked the Cambodian bombing campaign as having no constitutional basis and the new attacks are sure to draw more of the same kind of protests.

A Brief announcement from headquarters of the U.S. Pacific Command in Honolulu said, "At the request of the Royal Laotian government, U.S. aircraft including B52s . . . conducted operations over Laos."

Citizens Begin Tax Reform Action

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Citizens groups raised the banner of tax reform in major cities throughout the nation Monday and drew an immediate salute—if little prospect of satisfaction—from sympathizers on Capitol Hill.

Though the demonstrations, rallies, picketing and petition-signings in some 31 localities generally produced small turnouts, organizers vowed it was just the beginning in a grass roots show of force aimed at closing loopholes for the wealthy and reducing the burden of the average taxpayer.

In New York, national director Fred Harris told a "Tax Action Day" crowd of about 1,000 that "we will turn this country around. We will take the rich off welfare."

The former Oklahoma senator, speaking at a rally near the New York Stock Exchange, attacked capital gains as "one of the biggest loopholes" and named several corporations as "tax avoiders" who force the working man into paying an unfair share of the cost of government.

In Washington, Sen. George S. McGovern, D—S.D., urged the House Ways and Means Committee to attach tax reforms to the trade bill sought by President Nixon. Chairman Wilber Mills, D—Ark., had previously indicated that a tax bill would have to await clearance of the trade issue.

"We must enact both bills," said McGovern, adding that it is "interesting that the urgency the White House has given to trade legislation has grown in direct proportion to the threat that the Congress might pass meaningful tax reform."

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D—Maine, told the panel that "tax preferences that cost us many billions of dollars each year must not be allowed to remain" in the tax code.

Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D—Wis., declared "the indignation is heightened because we are told that our federal government cannot do what needs to be done in education, in health, in housing, in the redevelopment of our cities and countryside, in the environment, because it lacks the revenues to do it."

Ellsberg Wanted Congress To See Papers

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Daniel Ellsberg testified on Monday he copied the secret Pentagon papers because "I wanted to get those copies to Congres."

Ellsberg, 42, appearing relaxed as he testified in his own defense, made the comment in testimony about how he enlisted his friend Anthony Russo to help reproduce the documents.

"I went to the home of Tony Russo and reminded him of the studies." Ellsberg said of the Pentagon study of the Vietnam war.

"I told him it was marked classified. . .that I had a copy of it and that I wanted to get those copies to Congress and I needed to copy them."

Ellsberg told how Russo arranged with a friend to use a copying machine at her advertising office. "That night I took the copies into the . . . .advertising agency, having been given the address by Tony," Ellsberg said, "and we proceeded to copy some of the documents.

Ellsberg's attorney tried to get testimony from his client regarding his motivations in copying the study, but the judge sustained a defense objection to prevent the move.

U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne said, "I don't know of any crime where the question of why did you commit it was material or relevant."

Ellsberg's attorney said, however, the defendant's "intent" was relevant to the question of whether he planned to commit a crime.

Nixon Asks To Sell Defense Stockpiles

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress Monday for authority to sell $4.1 billion of the government's stockpile of metals and raw materials no longer considered vital to the nation's defense.

By selling in the open market supplies of such commodities as tin, platinum and copper, Nixon said, "we can strike a critical blow for the American consumer."

But the administration indicated that the impact on the rate of inflation generally would be small. They said the stockpiles would be sold gradually over several years.

The President has already announced plans to sell $1.9 billion of the stockpiles, a move he can make without going to Congress.

If Congress approves, and the administration should sell the entire additional $4.1 billion, the government would have left $700 million in its strategic stockpiles.

This would be enough to cover material requirements for the first year of a major conflict in Europe and Asia. Nixon said. And if there were a longer conflict, it would give enough time to build up the supplies.

Deputy Defense Secretary William Clements told newsmen "this is a long-term project. These stockpiles are going to be carefully drawn down. I would look at this in terms of a several-year effort."

Dr. Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said he would not give an estimate of the impact on prices.

"If the result is small, we can use that. We can use a lot of small effects," he said.

Clements said the National Security Council felt a one-year contingency was sufficient, adding, "We just feel like the atmosphere in the world today is vastly different than it was in the years gone by."

In the past few weeks, the administration has sold increasing amounts from the hoarded supplies, including zinc, lead, and cadium.

But there are more than 90 different commodities in the stockpiles, including metals, minerals, rubber, industrial diamonds, feathers, and silver.

Ervin Demands Testimony

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Watergate investigating committee Monday backed its chairman's insistence that all witnesses, including White House aides, give sworn public testimony.

Chairman Sen. J. Ervin, D-N.C., said there have been recent "feelers" from the White House on a possible compromise but that "no deals" have been worked out.

The committee voted to begin hearings about May 15, open them to public and press and have all witnesses testify under oath.

Ervin said the seven-member panel also approved a set of guidelines governing the hearings. They will be issued publicly later, he said.

"The committee is agreed on these guidelines so the White House aides will know exactly how to testify, or if the President permits them," Ervin said.

Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., committee minority leader, said the panel's support of Ervin's position and agreement on the guidelines would not have much bearing on the executive privilege issue.

"We are putting down these guidelines so call witnesses will know what's expected of them," said Baker, who, like Ervin, has insisted White House witnesses be accorded no special privileges.

Ervin's statements, however, appeared to dash persistent rumors that agreement was close between the White House and the committee on an arrangement permitting aides to appear.

Ervin has said he is prepared to ask for the arrest of any person who refuses to testify, including high ranking White House staff members.

U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst recently declared the doctrine of executive privilege permits Nixon to forbid any of the nation's 2.5 million federal workers from testifying before Congress.

Ervin said of the White House aides: "We've been praying to the good Lord they will come and testify" without a constitutional confrontation with the Congress.

He again rejected a White House suggestion that the aides be questioned through a series of written questions and answers.

Ervin said live television would be allowed to cover the hearings except for possible "extraordinary" circumstances which he said he can't foresee.

He commented at a news conference following a closed committee session.

Meanwhile, there were these other developments:

—Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., said he would support the arrests referred to by Ervin if all other means failed to produce the desired witnesses. "They know that this thing can't be just kissed off as a mere caper," he told newsmen.

—It was learned that the Justice Department may receive this week a new General Accounting Office report alleging that President Nixon's re-election campaign failed to account for money spent on political spying.

Mass., R.I. Hardest Hit —

WASHINGTON (AP) - Massachusetts and Rhode Island will be hardest hit by the Defense Department's closure and cutbacks at military bases around the country, congressional sources said Monday.

BROOKE MET WITH RICHARDSON

Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., met for more than an hour with defense Secretary Elliot L. Richardson. He said Pentagon plans call for a complete shutdown of the Boston Naval Shipyard and Chelsea Naval Hospital by the end of next year and sharp cutbacks at Westover, Otis and Hanscomb Air Force Bases. The cutbacks will reduce Navy expenditures in the state by $24 million annually, Brooke said.

Westover will have its civilian payroll reduced from 982 employes to 573. Military personnel at the base will be cut from the present 4,900 to 578. Hanscomb is slated for reductions of 237 military employes and 536 civilian workers. At Otis, where a phase out has already begun 377 military and 297 civilian jobs will be eliminated.

Other Navy facilities being colsed in the Boston area include the naval support activity, the audit service, the Navy Post Exchange, and the Navy Band.

Uneffected by the cutbacks are the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, the NAVY Resources Center, the Armed Forces Examining Center Navy ROTC at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the crew aboard the historic U.S.S. Constitution docked in Boston Harbor.

Also apparently unaffected are any military installations in Maine or the Navy's submarine base at Groton, Conn.

Congressional sources who were briefed by Pentagon officials earlier Monday said Rhode Island would lose the cruiser-destroyer headquarters at Newport, Quonset Naval Air Station and a Naval Air Rework Facility also located at Quonset.

In Base Shutdowns

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressmen say the Pentagon notified them Monday it will close down or cut back 274 military installations by the end of next year in the biggest base cutback since 1970.

The closure will eliminate 21,172 civilian and 16,640 military jobs, a reliable Senate source said after a Pentagon briefing. A 3-inch thick cuback list obtained by The Associated Press shows two major shipyards in Boston and San Francisco, two naval bases, two Air Force bases and at least seven Naval air stations are to be closed down.

But Fort Dix, N.J. - the major Army recruit training center that was widely rumored to get the ax - will not. The Army will reportedly suffer separate cutbacks this summer when the six U. S. Army commands are reorganized.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R—Mass., quoted Pentagon officials as saying the base closings and cutbacks will slice $275 million off military spending the first year.

Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson has so far accepted former secretary Melvin R. Laird's figure of a total long-range $1 billion savings from the cutbacks. The Pentagon said the cutback is the biggest since March 6, 1970, when it announced cuts at 371 installations eliminating 68,000 civilian and 35,300 military jobs.

Chavez, UFW Fight Teamsters

By LEE MARGULIES
Associated Press Writer

COACHELLA, Calif. (AP)—Cesar Chavez' farm worker followers launched a new struggle Monday to represent pickers in the heart of America's table grape country.

With pickets and a threat of a new nationwide grape boycott, Chavez' United Farm Workers Union took the offensive against the Teamsters Union, which announced Sunday it had signed field labor contracts with 85 per cent of the growers in the grape- rich Coachella Valley.

UFWV contracts with the growers, reached in 1970 after two years of boycotts, strikes and some violence, expired Sunday.

Several hundred UFWU workers picketed about 40 vineyards owned by about 12 ranchers Monday. Union officials said twice as many would turn out Tuesday.

The pickets urged workers to come out of the fields, where they were thinning vines in preparation for the May harvest. A few did.

The Coachella Valley produces about 80 per cent of the nation's table grape crop during May, June and July.

In a news conference Monday, Chavez called a boycott against "scab-picked" grapes, even though the crop won't be picked until next month.

He said the boycott would last "just as long as it takes" to win over the growers who have signed with the Teamsters.

The Teamsters contend they have the support of 4,000 of the 5,000 field workers employed seasonally in the valley. Chavez disputes the figures, saying only 1,800 workers are now employed in the Southern California valley and that 95 per cent support the UFWU.

The Teamsters say they have signed field worker contracts with 15 growers calling for an immediate pay hike from $2 to $2.30 an hour, climbing to $2.70 in four years.

Chavez said his union has renewed its contract with a group of five growers. The one-year contract provides an immediate raise to $2.40 and, for the first time, a paid holiday, unemployment insurance and a pension plan, Chavez told newsmen.

Chavez conceded that the Teamsters have signed contracts with at least 80 per cent of the growers in the valley and said one or two growers haven't signed with either union.

State Reveals Plans For Med. Education

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts plans to educate 104 students at its own medical school next year at a cost of $50,000 each and 93 students at the University of Vermont Medical School at $5,000 each.

The 1,000 percent differential was disclosed in Gov. Francis W. Sargent's budget for fiscal 1973. The budget was filed in late January but details are just now being made available to the legislature.

The governor omitted the traditional "request" column from his printed budget. However, information made available by various institutions of higher learning indicate the GOP chief executive cut requests from the five boards of trustees by $37.5 million-15.8 percent.

Although the governor didn't recommend all the funding the boards sought, he has recommended an overall increase for the schools of $33.7 million-about 20 percent-over the figures of a year ago.

The educational establishment normally campaigns hard for restoration by the legislature of funds deleted by the governor. The debates rarely focus on budget increases which are largely attributable to expansions and inflation but rather on things the governor failed to recommend.

The medical school is an obvious exception to the subsidy pattern for higher education. It's still in its embryonic stage and will be graduating its first class of physicians next year. The enrollment is increasing gradually and the per student cost should drop sharply in a few years when a new hospital is constructed which should produce patient revenue.

Get 'High' On Agape

Over 200 people showed up for an Agape Feast last Wednesday night at the Folklore Center in Amherst. The evening included a free dinner, singing, speakers, and the talents of guitarist, composer, and singer - Chip Hayes. It was such a good time that it's going to happen again.

The Christians on Campus would like to extend a warm invitation to their brothers and sisters to attend this Wednesday Agape Feast, as well as anyone interested in joining this time of fellowship. The speakers this week will include Renny Scott, Bill Updike, Paul Monfils and special music by Chip Hayes. Hope to see you at the Folklore Center on Wednesday night at 6.

The Phi Beta Kappa chapter at the University would like to do what it can to create a climate on this campus providing the time and space for people to explore ideas. It therefore — as a start — offers to any interested dormitory the willing participation of graduate-student and faculty members in such activities as discussions, seminars, and lectures on current or traditional issues. On behalf of numerous undergraduates, it particularly welcomes inquiries (to any of the members of the Executive Committee listed below) by any dormitory contemplating quiet-dorm status.

Local Professors Receive Awards

By BILL DENSMORE

Two Amherst College and one UMass professor are among 339 scholars nationwide to receive awards totaling $3,852,600 from the John Simon Gugenheim Memorial Foundation.

Gordon N. Ray, Foundation President, said the fellowships were awarded on the basis of "Demonstrated Accomplishment in the Past and Strong Promise for the Future."

The Amherst-area profs were among 2416 applicants including 27 from Massachusetts. Seven Harvard and five MIT Professors received fellowships, which average at least $10,000 for a year of study on some particular project.

The awards were announced publically last Friday, but some recipients have known that they were selected for several weeks. Applicants were required to submit a 1200 word statement of what their project would be, a list of their publications, and recommendations from other scholars.

Hugh G. J. Aitken, 51, an Economics Professor for eight years at Amherst will study the "Relationship between Science and Technology around the turn of the century," according to Aitken himself.

He plans to concentrate on the translation of the concepts of radio into practice, particularly during the time of Marconi's experiments. He will remain in Amherst but will have no responsibilities at the College for the Academic Year beginning next Fall.

William H. Pritchard, 40, an Amherst English Professor for 15 years says he will take a year off beginning next Fall to write a book on English Fiction and Literature between World Wars I and II."

The English Prof. has specialized in Modern Literature and Poetry while at Amherst and has signed a contract with the publishing firm of Faber and Faber to write the book. Pritchard will live in London while he is conduction research for his book.

Paul S. Boyer, 37, an associate professor of history at UMass has also received a fellowship which he will take during the spring of next year. During the fall semester he will be on sabbatical leave with pay from UMass.

Boyer, who has taught at UMass for six years, will live in Amherst but will be doing research at Harvard's Widner Library in Cambridge.

Reign Of Death

Once again American planes are reigning death down upon the peasants of Southeast Asia. According to knowledgeable Western diplomats in Phnom Penh, Cambodia, an average of 60 American B-52 bombers are dropping up to 1,800 tons of bombs on Cambodia every day in an attempt to stall the Communist assault on the Cambodian capital. According to the same sources this bombing is being done on the basis of inadequate intelligence information and is resulting in high civilian casualties. One diplomat was quoted as saying "The Americans are throwing air support around like a mad woman. They don't know what effect it's having.

In view of the devastating effects which U.S. bombing had in North and South Vietnam such statements carry a high degree of credibility. Politics aside, the United States has already caused so much suffering in Southeast Asia that we can only regard America's reinstitution of bombing in Cambodia with horror and dismay.

Wounded Knee

By BILL LATTRELL

In the anticipation of the Wounded Knee Rally on Wednesday, April 18, at 1:00 p.m. where Vernon Bellecourt, the National Director of the American Indian Movement (A.I.M.) will be the main speaker; it seems apprpriate to bring the readers of the Collegian up to date on what's happening in South Dakota.

Since the Wounded Knee takeover on Feb. 27, the situation has been, to say the least, tense. At times it looked as if another Wounded Knee Massacre was going to take place, but after a multitude of Government-Indian settlement talks an "agreement" was finally reached more than one month later. The A.I.M. people and the Oglala Sioux gained only the slim hope of some future legislation after Russell Means, A.I.M. leader, testified before the Congressional Interior Committee. The Government, once again, sacrificed nothing. The main stipulation of the settlement was that the Indians give up their position at Wounded Knee, surrender their arms to federal authorities, submit to federal processing and arrest, and at that time the leaders would be allowed to have a press conference and meet with a legislative committee. The Indians (and others) occupying Wounded Knee were not granted amnesty, nor the demand of the suspension of the Oglala Sioux tribal chairman, council, and constitution until a new tribal government system more appropriate for reservation life is established, nor the demand of the removal of federal troops surrounding Wounded Knee.

Not all the Indians left Wounded Knee and some kept strong the occupation. This was done in just fear of the probable reoccurence of the 300 unkept treaties instituted by the U.S. Government. Russell Means did leave, submit to arrest, and travel to Washington to meet with a Congressional Investigative Committee, where he has gained little fround and has been subject to much verbal abuse by "distinguished" U.S. representatives of the Congressional Interior Committee.

Most recently, Clyde Bellecourt, Vernon's brother, has left Wounded Knee so that he can work on the outside to gain needed understanding and support for the occupation. Apparently A.I.M. has taken an advisory capacity at Wounded Knee, and let the Oglala Sioux leaders there assume command.

So, as can be seen, the Wounded Knee takeover is far from over. Many people at Wounded Knee vow to "fight to the death" until their demands are met. The unmet demands are reasonable, especially considering the immense problems which have been facing the American Indian in rspect to living conditions, social problems, and the right of self determination, and the fact that little has been done to counteract these problems. It comes right down to the plain and simple fact that the Indians cannot wait another 300 years.

Come to the rally, on April 18, at 1:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. It will be interesting as well as educational. We can only help solve the dilemma of the American Indians through understanding. This can be your start.

Current Nihilism

In the middle and late sixties what was broadly characterized as the youth movement, was believed by many people to portend vast and dramatic changes in the American political scene and it is true that during those few years the youth of America emmersed themselves in the political process in greater numbers and with more vigor than they had ever done in previous decades. Yet in retrospect such predictions seem premature and in the 1970s one searches in vain for the lasting effects which this movement was supposed to have had on American politics. McCarthy lost the Democratic nomination to Humphrey and the "youth candidate" of 1972 received only 52% of the under 21 vote.

Now, in the first several years of the 1970s, we have seen a precipitous drop in the political and social consciousness of many college students. Most students regard politics with a gaping yawn and show more interest in, among other things, the myriad religious sects which have been proliferating on college campuses during the last several years.

Many students give one of two reasons for their estrangement from politics. Either they claim to be disenchanted with the effectiveness of one individual's contribution to the affairs of politics or they take the view that the world of politics is an unreal one which bears little relation to the more meaningful questions confronting human beings. It is this latter position which is the more interesting and, in the final analysis, the more dangerous of the two and is one which may be characterized as nihilistic insofar as it denies, either explicitly or implicitly, the importance of morality.

The argument against this modern form of nihilism should begin with a consideration of what it means to be human. Now one may either regard man as an autonomous being, distinct and inherently separate from his fellow human beings, or as a being who stands in a state of relatedness to other humans. The nihilist stands on firmer logical ground if he takes the former view and while neither position can be empirically validated there are powerful arguments against the nihilistic stance. Human beings, by nature, share many things in common. They can think, they feel similar emotions, they are made unhappy things such as physical pain and mental anguish, and they all must confront what often seems a miserable, purposeless existence. If at this point the nihilist continues to deny the relatedness of human beings the argument grinds to a halt but if he agrees to this on logical premise the discussion may proceed to a further level.

There are two ways in which one may relate to other human beings, in the concrete and in the abstract. Both are equally important. Relating to human beings in the concrete involves entering into interpersonal relationships in the context of which one strives to attain Martin Buber's famous I—Thou relationship built on the demands of what Karl Jaspers called "authentic communication". But to be fully human one must do more than merely engage in personal relationships. One must also relate to humanity in general. One must participate in history and one of the only ways in which one may do this is to take a stand in regard to the important political issues of one's time. Thus in denying the importance of politics and of political action one either denies the importance of being human or relegates the notion of what it means to be human to a level of superfluousness and meaninglessness. At the very least the nihilists must come to recognize that their stand in regard to the relevance of politics is also a stand in regard to the question of what it means to be a human being and is not one which should be taken on the basis of mere capriciousness.

Politics Of Spring

Today I realized that spring was nearly here. I checked over my last few days, the first and second of April and noticed the clashing within the change of the world.

On April first, I had planned two weeks before during bright sunny weather to have a picnic. And for two weeks in anticipation the weather was pretty good and very close to what I wanted. On April First! Voila! April Fools! Tripped up and smiled at by mother nature. Rain, rain, rain! Nonetheless, I wandered out and had my bread, cheese, and wine, while listening to the rain drum on the windshield of my car. To all of this I could say that at least it was a direct confrontation between me and nature.

But good old mother nature was not through. Winter makes me stiff. Even when I am outside a great deal during the winter; it usually comes down to retreating indoors, if I want to talk to someone. This can be comfortable, but it is containing after a couple of months. Well, in the last couple of weeks, time has plunged into an empty sky. I have found myself more than once sitting and contemplating a sunset, talking to a friend as he puffed on a cigarette, or just watching the traffic pass by. (Visions come to mind of me sitting on a front porch in a rocking chair, but unfortunately I have neither rocker nor front porch.) When I have no walls surrounding me, bouncing my words back and forth making any room some sort of super-eardrum; when I really start to get outside I feel that everything is listening. The earth, the sky, the trees, everything is listening and not bouncing back reflections of myself. So when this process begins, I relax and just sit and chat with anyone and everyone.

Alas! Mother nature was not satisfied. Her April fools trick wasn't enough for her so she started to get subtle and cunning. On the second of April I wandered into an office to wait my turn in an educational roundhouse, and as I was loosening with the spring's lubrication, so were the people in this office. I met one Joany, a beautiful woman feeding "The Portable Jung", a withdrawing from a heavy scene. She was truly a beautiful person with whom I had the best conversation that I have experienced in the last year. Not that it was all-important, all-everything or all-nothing, it was just extremely fine. Now we return to the academic complications worked out we parted company and I discovered that Joany had no last name, at least to my memory. This takes the proportions of a true tragedy. Springtime spacyness strikes, as I am the victim, again.

As I have been told by some of my all-American degenerate goodliving friends: "life is bitter-sweet!" Taking that as wisdom I smiled at good old mother nature, first for the little that she gave me, and secondly, just to wake her mad. You have to admit she is really trying.

Oh, through all this thrashing and crashing, earth-moving and time-soothing, the world spun around. Ah-ha! Time for me to be political and editorial and generally quite opinionated. Not today! All I can do is look around and rumage in the dusty attics of the past. In the remembrances, the mud within the snow, are splendid splashes of war and peace. Horror and dismay, wrenched people as well as false jubilation. The eloquent rhetoric now falls no longer with the graceful trails of snowflakes into the frozen ruts of the fall, but steadily thrum with the dumb reality of drisling rain and muddy pools. Dimly one can remember the lowering of the value of Democracy and the raising of the cost of living. The rain is as a curtain to these assertions, and the polemics of winter take the form of manure under the snow which you accidentally step in. And in the hole that you left, as the snow melts to the rivers and rises into a mist, pretty soon grass is going to grow. Maybe even flowers, blue or red, or a black-eyed susan will pop up, quite accidentally mind you, but the universe is big enough for accidents.

The politics of spring are now in session as it is time to get out and talk and be with the people that you have been with all year. What's that old song? "If you're not with the one you love, love the one you're with." There is a world about us all of clashing polarities and we can either be rigid and suspicious, or smile and decide it's time to be a little crazy. It is my feeling that together we can fool mother nature into thinking: "This rain is making them smile. My little burners are making them laugh. I'll show them; I'll send them some good-times and wild sunshine!" I've got to try and even up the score a little bit.

Obviously, this whole piece has not been about the cut and dry mechanics of man; this editorial had been devoted to revealing the funky conspiracy of sun and earth. It is worth nothing more than a bit of sunshine and a little hope. And maybe, just maybe, beautiful Joany might hear about my dilemma and get in touch with me. I'm always one to give mother nature a turn for the better. What else is worth doing?

Whatever!

It is a time to forget—a time to grow. Everything is new, baby, everything! Possibly, out there this might start someone up into thinking. Then someone might start a campaign. Slogans might ring across the green grass commons and a letter war would sound its dull cannons. Boom! Boom! There is more to the world than the blood and guts of our winter anxieties. If you're out in the blue grass and you're bumped by mother nature, complain to the media! Go tell a neighbor, a friend, a lover, a stranger; climb a mountain and tell the sky; get yourself moving and let people know that you dig existing. Boom! The best campaign being waged is going to be by spring itself; so love the one you're with! Pssst!

HAVE A HAPPY SPRINGTIME!

Classic Example Of Hypocrisy

To The Editor:

At their meeting of April 11, 1973 the Undergraduate Student Senate displayed what many people feel is a classic example of hypocrisy. While claiming to exhibit liberalism and professing to be believers in "academic freedom", 31 senators and Senate Speaker David Booker (whose vote broke the tie) voted against recommending to the trustees of the University that credit be given for ROTC courses. It is apparent that to those senators academic freedom consists of allowing other fellow students to receive for only those course which those senators deem worthy, regardless of whether or not learning takes place. In making that decision those 32 senators may well be requiring their own constituents who are in ROTC to sign up for an overload of courses every semester.

When the Senate made that decision, it certainly intended it as a bold strike against the military complex in this country. But in reality the only people offended by such a decision are those students who want to learn what ROTC teaches. The Senate may be shocked when it discovers that it will never have the slightest effect on the U.S. military. If the University ever decides to abolish ROTC on campus, it stands to lose some $250,000 in government scholarships.

To further demonstrate the apalling closed-mindedness of some student senators, the following example allowing petty politics to inhibit academic freedom must be made public. When a bill similar to the one previously defeated (in effect a request to reconsider the question) was presented to the executive committee for placement on the agenda, the executive committee refused to place this bill on the agenda by a five to three vote. The three people who voted for placement had previously voted to give ROTC credit; and four of the five negative votes came from senators who had voted against the previous bill. How the fog of petty politics and the guise of liberalism produce clouded decisions and warped judgements.

I would never take an ROTC course; I do not chose to learn what ROTC has to offer. But neither can I, with a clear conscience, decide for other students that they may not study what they choose. Interests vary widely among the students at this University, and the governing body of "representative" senators must be sensitive to all of those diverse interests. In view of the Senate's recent action, however, it is obvious that there is little sensitivity and much selfish, egocentric coldness in the body. It is also noteworthy that the Senate, during its consideration of the question of ROTC credit, voted against placing the question on a referendum for a decision by the student body. Is this the kind of body you want to make rules for your?

Hospitals Campaign

To The Editor

Dear Faculty,

Now that the war in South East Asia seems to be ending, it is a time for Americans to rejoice. We feel, however, that it is also a time to consider all the destruction we have brought to the people of Indochina. We feel that one of the best ways for us to show our support for these people, one of the best ways to help them rebuild what U.S. bombs destroyed, is to contribute money that will be used to provide much needed medical supplies.

Bach Mai Hospital was the largest hospital in the Democratic Republic of Vietnam until, as you know, it was totally destroyed in the "Christmas" bombings on Hanoi this past December. Bach Mai's destruction was not an isolated incident. Between April and October of last year 56 hospitals and clinics were destroyed. The Nguyen Van Troi Hospital campaign was initiated by the World Federation of Democratic Youth at the request of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam. This hospital will be built in the summer of 1973 by youth from all over the world. It will be the largest childrens hospital in Vietnam. The money you contribute will go to build and supply these facilities. We are asking university faculty to try to contribute a days pay to rebuild the land we have devastated. Please make checks payable to the Hospitals Campaign and send them to Hosp. Campaign, Box. 546, Amherst.

"DoonesBury"!!!

To the Editor:

Everyone who is reading this letter, can with the simple flick of the wrist, turn the pages of this paper to the comic section. In this section, there are three comics. "Peanuts," "B. C.," and "The Wizard of Id." This selection of comics is good, but what do the students really want to read? "DOONESBURY"!!!

Doonesbury is a daily comic strip written and drawn by Garry Trudeau and appears in such papers as the Boston Globe and the Springfield Republican. Garry is in his twenties and his comic strip usually deals with a contemporary issue.

Wouldn't it be better to read a comic strip dealing with contemporary issues such as the President, the Vietnam War racism and sexism rather than about Charlie Brown's first win in a baseball game.

I am sure Garry Trudeau would be proud to know his strip is appearing in New England's Largest College Daily, an audience to which he appeals.

So, all you Doonesbury fans, let's get together and demand to see Doonesbury added to the Collegian.

To The Editor:

I was appalled to read the comments of your columnist, Joyce Kosofsky, in her article entitled Meat Junkies. She stated "if McDonald's never existed, then they couldn't have given half a million dollars for the Nixon re-election campaign." Nothing could be further from the truth. The campaign contribution in question was given personally by Ray A. Kroc, Chairman of the Board, and founder of McDonald's Corporation. It is sad that in today's society where there are champions for virtually every cause and abuse of people's rights is front page news, that an individual can't contribute to the candidate of his choice without a stigma being attached to his business interests.

It is also sad that journalists like Ms. Kosofsky are allowed to make whatever remarks they like under the guise of "Freedom of the Press' and that McDonald's reputation must suffer because of her irresponsibility.

From Suds To Streets

To The Editor:

Well kiddies it's that time of year again. The Robins have arrived, the blackbirds are staking out their claims, and once again the flowers in Cambodia bloom into the acrid, smoke filled air of South East Asia. Yes, Tricky Dick is up for another Spring Fling.

You all remember the Spring fling of 1970, when U.S. troops headed into Cambodia to further escalate our involvement in the area. You also remember, how we met the challenge with the now legendary Spring Strike. Well, with the talk of shipping in more military supplies and the traditional B-52 Spring plowing session on the Cambodian rice paddies, perhaps it's time to pull another strike.

Of course we've heard all this talk about how conservative the campuses have gotten since those "hell raising days", but the pollsters forgot that last sacred bastion of Left Wing leadership, the Blue Wall. I've seen them there, lurking in dark corners waiting out the wave of apathy and the 8 year reign of the Huns, keeping their spirits high on the cooling suds of booze.

But hibernate no longer ye mighty minds of the Blue Wall! It is time for The Blue Wall Brigade to burst from its foamy cocoon and lead the Umies on to the streets to stand against the forces of tyranny and give our fearless leader another royal boot in the ass.

I Thought About Hitler

To The Editor:

I was thinking the other day about what to think about, and I thought about saviors. Saviors, Gurus, Prophets, Holy Men, and the ever-popular Apocalypse.....they're all the same to me. And I thought about Hitler. People for years now have put him down, damned him as a sick genius, and crucified his image to the point where the very mention of his name brings out a bit of hate and vengeance in us all, whether we're Jews, Goys, Niggers, Fags, Ginnies or Americans. Everyone hates Hitler. The man is dead, and everyone hates him. They've said for years that Hitler was inhuman, a monster, a political Frankenstein. That bit about Frankenstein is weird, because the beast Dr. Frankenstein created was a Polish-Jew. I know this because I saw him in a movie once go to a restaurant and order a ham on rye. Polish ham and Jewish rye specifically. But that's not my point.

My point is that everyone's missed Hitler's point entirely, so great and subtle was his genius. We've been way off base in our historical and moralist interpretation of Hitler. You see, Adolf Hitler was an ecology freak. One of the first. He saw ahead. He took a lot of speed and saw ahead. Sort of the prophet thing, you know. He knew there was going to be a power shortage someday in the future. He knew there was going to be the inevitable "energy crisis" we hear so much about today.

Hitler also knew that Jews were superior, so that meant everything about them was superior to all other human life, including their bones. You hear it said, "How awful he was to ruthlessly kill all those Jewish people and bury them in piles."....right? Fuck that shit. Hitler was planning ahead, for all of us. He knew that in a few hundred years, or at least a thousand, all those Jewish bones he buried underground would turn into high quality coal someday, which could and would be used to alleviate the "energy crisis". Now, that's genius for you. None of that "ruthless" and "inhuman" crap. This guy Hitler was planning to save our lives someday. He lived for posterity, you know. The real Savior, and I bet not very many people ever thought of him that way, except for a few junkies and Arabs. So with everyone waiting around these days for their various "saviors", the truth emerges that He already came, with a plan for saving Mankind and everything, and do you know what happened? We

Immature Men

To The Editor:

In trying to understand the Women's Liberation Movement, to distill its many ideas into a brew capable of assimilation, I have come to a rather unexpected conclusion. I'm not positive that women in the movement will agree with what I've decided, but here goes: What women really want and need to be liberated from is IMMATURE MEN. It isn't strong men that they want to be liberated from, but rather weak little boys who today go around disguised as men. Immature men abound in our culture, and men being men they do all they can to shape and form women into what they most desire. In the case of immature men,they try to change women into MOMMIES, that is, surrogates for those wonderful ladies who satisfied their every need when they were little baby boys at the breast. Such men (convention so names them) put pressure on women to fill their every need, to fulfill FANTASY ROLES rather than to be THEMSELVES in their own beautiful way. Hence women feel pressured, dominated by role expectations, expected to perform, etc. Strong men (and I mean strong inside, not machismo) on the other hand have learned not to depend on mommy's breast anymore, and they will try to treat a woman as such, seeing there the real person, not just the potential pleasure she may eventually indulge him in. Thus he won't put any pressure on her to be any other than who and what she is deep down inside. Yes, he will want her to be beautiful and lovable, but the difference is this: to a mature man, beautiful and loveable is a woman BEING HERSELF; whereas to a boy, beautiful and loveable is a woman being his very own surrogate mommy. . .he wants to go back to the protective, all providing mommy of his youth.

Swap Tales

To The Editor:

I have followed with delight your stories on the library, the Alumni Stadium, etc. (They are sinking, you know!) And I have begun to gather as many of them as I can for a semester project.

I would like very much to swap tales: tales about buildings -- in Amherst and other localities--that are sinking, cracking, or swaying; about libraries that can't hold books; about hotels whose swimming pools can't hold water; about buildings with strange names or ghostly inhabitants.

Did you know, for example, that the sixth tower in Southwest was completed. . .but it sank. All we can see is the top in the form of Hampden Dining Commons. And only the janitors have a key to the eighteen floors below!

In any case, the way we react to the architecture around us is of interest to me. I would love to talk to anyone who can share some time. Please come to 307C Bartlett Hall any morning from 9 to 11:30 or call 545-1882 and ask for me.

Thank you so much.

I am presently serving a prison term of twenty-five years to life. I am twenty-five years old, and seeking to get together with anyone wishing to maintain a correspondence relationship with me. I seek to meet new people of my own age, or not younger than eighteen years old, and to learn about life in other states. Whether you be a resident or non-resident student, I would like to hear from you. If you are desirous of corresponding with me, then please answer when you have the opportunity. Before I can reply to your letters, there will be a short while before the prison authorities send you a correspondence form to fill out. Please be patient! Thank you!

Who Are The Terrorists?

To The Editor:

Almost everyone opposes terrorism per se. And all humane people deplore the recent assassinations of diplomats in the Sudan by the Arab guerrillas at least as much as does President Nixon (see his statement by AP at Beirut, March 2, 1973). The primary exceptions to this view are the criminally insane, or those who support terrorism as an antidote to much greater forms of terrorism, such as wars of imperial aggression and as a defense against the greater terrorism of imperialism for centuries. And the so-called Arab terrorists have recently been using terrorism, rightly or wrongly, against what they consider to be the terrorism of the Israeli for the theft of their homes and other property.

What most humane and informed people cannot understand is why President Nixon supported, before becoming President and has practiced since, the terrorism of aggressive imperialism. He supported Truman's illegal and imperial war in Korea, 1950-52; urged Eisenhower to support French imperialism in Indochina before France was defeated in Dien Bien Phu, May 1954; and supported fully the imperial wars of Kennedy and Johnson, while criticizing them vigorously for not intensifying terrorism to a much greater extent upon these peasant people. His objection to terrorism, therefore, seems to be based primarily upon his personal political interests.

A truly humane person could and would have, I believe, saved the lives of the two U.S. diplomats recently killed in the Sudan by freeing the convicted assassin of Senator Robert Kennedy. A call to Mrs. Joseph Kennedy or her son, Sen. Edward Kennedy--both exceptionally compassionate people--would have, I am confident, gained their support for such action. Hewing implicitly to the cold hard Law and Order line, so characteristic of Mr. Nixon, was, in my opinion, a grievous blunder. No humane and informed person can forget the far greater acts of terrorism inflicted upon American boys and the Indochinese people by continuing the illegal, immoral and genocidal war of aggression fo four long years as President, especially in view of the fact that he could have ended the war, as he told C. L. Sulzberger of the N.Y. Times, the day he became President.

What the American people need to be told again and again is that the excuses given by successive Washington administrations for their involvement in Asia since WWII have been proven completely false; that the Truman administration reversal of Roosevelt's policy of International Cooperation was an imperial policy for world domination; that this imperial policy has been pursued by every Washington administration since; and that a return to a policy of International Cooperation is the sine qua non of human survival in the thermonuclear age.

Skylab Launch Planned In May

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - The mammoth Skylab space station, packed with enough provisions to support nine men for a total of five months in orbit, moved to its launch pad Monday to be prepared for launching May 14.

A large tracked vehicle slowly carried the station, under a protective shroud atop a Saturn 5 rocket, over the 3.5 - mile course from assembly building to pad. The trip took six hours.

Skylab, as large as a five-room house, is to be rocketed into an orbit 270 miles high. The next day, May 15, the Skylab 1 crew, Charles Conrad Jr., Paul J. Weitz and Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin, will be lofted into space to link up with the laboratory. The astronauts are to live and work there for 28 days, conducting medical, scientific and earth resources experiments. In August and November, the Skylab 2 and 3 crews are to visit the same station, each for 56 days.

Stored in freezers, compartments and tanks on Skylab are 2,400 pounds of food and 6,000 pounds of water to sustain all three astronaut teams.

Also aboard are comforts not enjoyed by earlier U.S. spacemen. Included are food heating trays, a wardroom, a small library, separate bedrooms, changes of clothing, a shower, a medical laboratory and recreational equipment such as a dart board and playing cards.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration hopes Skylab will determine how well man can perform in space for long periods.

A Music Review
Strong, Black, Vibrant

By ANNE SAUNDERS

The Black Musicians Conference kicked off Monday, April 9, 1973. It has proven to be one of the most productive conferences held to date here at UMass. The mornings begin with a lecture being presented by brothers who are giants in Black Music.

Monday morning's lecture was given by a dynamic brother from the UMass Black community, Brother Max Roach. On Tuesday another great Black Musician from the UMass Black community, Brother Archie Shepp, leading the morning off.

On Wednesday morning Sister Louise West, a lawyer from the D.C. community, started the ball rolling for the day. On Friday Brother Clifford Thornton's topic was "Drugs and Penology or a System of Oppression of the Black Musician." Brother Thornton is presently teaching a course at Wesely University. After the morning messages and a lunch break the conference continues its energies in afternoon workshops dealing with Music as a transmitter of culture, politics and the economic direction of the country in which the music is being created. After the dinner break, MUSIC. BLACK MUSIC. STRONG, BLACK, VIBRANT MUSIC.

Monday night SUN-RA AND FAMILY. Hey words cannot always express what the eye and ear will contain for a lifetime. The Sun-Ra Family is Black music in both its natural and ultimate forms! Forms which can never be copied by they money hungry because not even money can bring about a duplication in nature.

On Tuesday night. Man Oh Man. A Black music treat. Sister Betty Carter and Company. The sister is in top form. Whether standing silently at the mic before bending her knees to hit a HIGH note or bebopping across the stage to the bass player to deliver one of her clear low notes the sister was smoking. So was the pianist, the Bassist and the Drummer. Together the sound was wonderful.

Following Sister Betty was the 360 Degrees Ensemble. Vibration music. The vibes were bouncing off the walls. Roland Alexander, Archie Shepp and the beautiful Zane Massey surrounded by African beats made by drums and piano tones floating through space, and the magic sounds of bells and gongs and tambourines. The music was strong people, the music was strong! Then Joe Lee. Joe Lee Wilson and the Band. Sax, Drums, Bass, Percussions and the voice of Joe Lee. Tender, sweet tones which swell to deliver the most masculine sounds that the ear can hear. Love sounds by Joe Lee. Hey, What can I tell you?

The Revolutionary Ensemble. Moving. First flying then diving next Jumpingorely to fly off again. Great, great Black Music.

Revitalizing vibrations which just might make our load seem a little lighter over the next two months.

"Von 73" Offers Reward For Painting

The student, Von Volungis, says the untitled picture was valued at $1,000 and was uninsured. The reward is offered for information leading to the return of the picture to him, in its original condition.

The picture, which measures two and a half feet by ten inches, is on canvas, multi-colored, with silver and black tubes surrounded by a green "Yin-Yang" symbol, and hills on the top and bottom. It is signed "VON 73."

Anyone with information about the picture may call the student at 586-3571, or the Program Council at 545-2351.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

"I recently discovered the works of Sherwood Anderson, especially Winesburg, Ohio." I know this is a landmark in American fiction. Can you tell me something about the horoscope of Anderson?" Tom Reagan, Dallas, Texas. Answer: Sherwood Anderson was an American author who was a close friend of Gertrude Stein and who influenced the work of Ernest Hemingway. Anderson was born under the zodiacal sign of Virgo and had Pluto in Taurus in his Ninth House—these are "signatures" in the horoscope of a writer. He was warm and earthy and his writings changed the structure of the short story in America. He was born Sept. 13, 1876, with the Moon in Cancer in the Eleventh House of his Solar chart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Concern indicated with household costs. Desire is for more comfort, beauty. But budget could represent an obstacle. You can gain cooperation of family member. This is necessary. Taurus and Libra are in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are right to be cautious. One who wants you to rush is not familiar with facts. Take your time. Plan and observe. Accent is on marriage, partnership, public relations. You may not be seeing too clearly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you stick to specific project, the odds are that you can succeed. Rewards are not obvious at this time. But you can build for future security. Member of opposite sex is involved. You will be rewarded.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One you are attracted to talks of faraway place. Key now is to get perspective into focus. Don't be animated by circumstantial evidence. Your own creativity is strong enough to serve as reliable indicator.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Blockbuster events could occur which spotlight your originality. You get chance to break from restrictions. You are elevated to higher position because of past preparation. Another Leo plays prominent role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Dealings with relatives detract much of your time. Discussions tend to center around home, property values, long range loans and plans. Key now is to be versatile without scattering your forces. Aquarian is in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be spending too much in varying areas. Key now is to consolidate, to be flexible without being weak. Be familiar with liabilities and assets. Open lines of communication. Deal with Sagittarian.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Cycle is such that you can be more independent, original. You can set your own pace and others will follow your lead. You also can tear down in order to rebuild. There no longer is a need to stick with outmoded concepts, methods.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): One who tells stories behind your back will be exposed. Maintain calm, dignity. Sense of humor could be your best weapon. Be analytical. Find reasons why certain events have taken sudden turns.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spotlight is on work fulfillment. You are likely now to get what you ask for—be sure it is what you really need. Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently. Now is time to invest in your own abilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take aim toward goal. What you want is available. Be selective. There is no need for you to accept second rate product or assignment. Maintain self esteem. Go directly to source. Don't be discouraged by one who has little or no imagination.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with ability to reach more persons, to articulate ideas and to reach beyond what appears to be your capacity. Financial standing improves. You are rewarded for accepting responsibility.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have ability to take care of yourself under crisis or pressure conditions. You draw many to you who were born under Capricorn. December will be one of your most significant months of 1973.

Dark Horse Wins Boston Marathon

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Jon Anderson of Eugene, Oregon, virtually a forgotten dark horse in a whopping field of 1,384, returned the Boston A.A. Marathon laurel wreath to the United States Monday with a smashing victory in the 77th annual Patriots Day classic.

Anderson, a 23-year-old Cornell University graduate whose father is mayor of Eugene, sprinted into the lead with six miles to go and hit the finish all alone, becoming the first American winner in five years.

Despite balmy weather and a blistering sun, Anderson covered the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2 hours, 16 minutes, 3 seconds, nearly five minutes off the record set by England's Ron Hill three years ago.

Anderson wore down defending champion Olavi Suomalainen of Finland on the second of three hills and pulled away to win by a comfortable 500 yards.

Tom Fleming, a 21-year-old student at Wayne, N.J., closed strongly to take second in 2:17.46.

Suomalainen was stricken with a cramp in his right side in surrendering the lead, but gamely shook it off to finish third in 2:13.31. Ironically, it was on the same hill that the Finn pulled away to victory in 1972.

Bernard Plain of Wales, England was fourth in 2:23.41, and Jeff Galloway of the Florida Track Club fifth in 2:23.27.

Anderson became the first American winner since Ambrose Burfoot's victory in 1968.

Asked about his race strategy, Anderson said he tried to stick with Galloway because "I knew he would run a sane race."

"All I could think of the last couple of miles was to finish the damned thing," he added.

Tigers Hold On; Sox Rally Falls Short, 9-7

BOSTON (AP) - The Detroit Tigers had an 8 - 1 lead over the Boston Red Sox at the end of four innings Monday and it looked like an easy victory.

"It looked like a laugher, but it wasn't," said Detroit Manager Billy Martin after his club had hung on for a 9 - 7 victory before a Patriots Day crowd of 29,006.

"You can never get in front in this park," Martin said. "I remember once we were playing the Sox here and they were leading 9 - 0, but we beat them 15 - 16."

The Sox scored two runs on a Reggie Smith homer in the sixth, one on a sacrifice fly by Dwight Evans in the seventh, another on a solo homer by Smith in the eighth, and two on Carlton Fisk's homer in the ninth.

After Doug Griffin grounded out, Evans and Tommy Harper walked. However, Luis Aparicio and Danny Cater were retired and the Tigers were victorious.

Powerful Willie Horton had made the score 8 - 1 in the fourth when he slammed his first home run of the year, connecting with two on.

"I got a slider," he said, talking about the last pitch thrown by Boston starter Marty Pattin. "I made up my mind I was going to hit the ball hard. I pulled it."

Horton's drive, his first homer of the season, followed an intentional walk to Gates Brown after Al Kaline and Norm Cash had rapped consecutive doubles in the fourth inning. It climaxed Detroit's second four-run outburst against Marty Pattin, 1 - 1, and enabled the Tigers to offset four Boston homers, two by Reggie Smith.

The Tigers had tagged Pattin for four runs in the first inning on run-producing singles by Cash, Brown, Aurelio Rodriguez and Mickey Stanley.

A Grand Old Ballpark

By BOB ESTELLE

Yankee Stadium is probably the most famous of all the stadiums that have existed throughout the years. In the past ten years, other, more modern stadiums have been constructed that make the "House that Ruth Built" seem antiquated. No championship ballclub has called it home since 1964, but this ballpark is still one of America's monuments.

Sunday, the Yankees celebrated the golden anniversary of the stadium. A lot has happened in the fifty years of its existence. The Yankees played in twenty five World Series' there, capturing twenty of them. The famous Joe Louis-Max Schmeling fight of 1938 was held there. The football Giants have played there since 1956, playing in three championship games there: the 47-2 rout of the Chicago Bears in '56, the sudden death classic of '58 and the '62 clash with the Packers. Religious conventions have been held there and Pope Paul VI said mass there in 1965, the only mass said by a Pope in North America.

But still in all, the place is old and needs modernizing badly. If you're sitting in a box seat, you get a fine view of the game but the reserved seats are all behind the beams which can impair your view. The stadium is located in one of the worst neighborhoods of the city. The parking facilities are filled quickly, as they are poor and small. The access roads are few and are crowded.

But all this will change. Yankee Stadium will be closed at the end of this season for a two year renovation project. The city has acquired the stadium and the surrounding area for this purpose. The mezzanine and upper level will be raised. Parking decks will be built and access roads improved. A new, modern scoreboard will be put in, as will an upper level over the bleachers.

This renovation will take two years. In the meantime, the Yankees will move to Shea Stadium and share it with the Mets and football Jets. The Giants will play two games there this fall and will find a temporary home until their new stadium in New Jersey is ready.

A lot of famous athletes have called Yankee Stadium home. The likes of Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra, Casey Stengel, Frank Gifford, Sam Huff and Y.A. Tittle are some of the more prominent athletes who have played there.

The Yankees are a class organization, despite what Jim Bouton has said. The Old Timers Day they hold every year is a perfect example of this. And this class was further exemplified during the pre-game ceremonies held last Sunday before the Yankee-Red Sox clash. After the band finished boring the crowd, former Yankee broadcaster Mel Allen conducted a ceremony which included the placing of wreaths at the monuments in centerfield, the pitching of the first ball ever used at Yankee Stadium by Bob Shawkey (the first pitcher to pitch there-going all the way to beat the Boston Red Sox 4-1), to former centerfielder Whitey Witt (the first Yankee batter in the stadium), and the singing of the National Anthem by entertainer Pearl Bailey, a longtime Yankee fan.

Yankee Stadium may be old but it still has class. It will be renovated, true, but it still will be the place it has been: the mecca of outdoor sports in America.

Minutemen Make Weekend Sweep

The UMass guns exploded for twenty-eight runs yesterday as they swept the Patriots Day doubleheader from the Northeastern University pitching staff with wins of 17-11 and 11-5. The wins culminated a four game weekend series that also included two games with Holy Cross taken by the Minutemen 2-0 and 7-1, respectively.

So the Minutemen came into the Monday twinbill with a respectful

8-4-1 record that includes an undefeated 3-0-1 record against New England ball teams. When the afternoon was over their record was boosted to 10-4-1 as the UMie batters clouted NU pitching for 28 hits in downing them twice, 17-11 and 11-5 while Tom White and Steve Merrill struggled to victories for the hometowners.

Freshman Pete Collins stole the hitting show late in the second game as he clouted a game winning grand slam home run in the fourth and returned to the plate in the fifth to blast a solo shot out over the right field fence. It's not often that a rookie comes in and belts two homers in as many at bats. Collins had come in to replace Dan Esposito who has been platooned sparingly this year by Coach Bergquist.

Steve Newell had two four-baggers on the day also as the NU pitching could not be helped. The wind was gusting out to straight away center for a perfect "hitters" day."

The double header started at 1 p.m. and the second game was called for darkness at 6:40. That made for long afternoon for the Minutemen and Coach Bergquist has A.I.C. coming into his ball park today and then the team will journey to the city to play Springfield." This is going to be a long stretch.," according to pitching coach Arland Barber.

Mike Flanagan was the one bright spot for the UMass pitching staff this weekend as he came in against the Cross to hold them hitless through eight consecutive innings before yielding the only hit of the game to a pinch-hitter for the pitcher in the top of the ninth. He then settled down to retire the rest ofthe side in order.

First baseman Ron Beaurivage singled home Eddie McMahon for the game winning run and the insurance tally was brought across in the eighth frame when Dan Kelly singled to right and later scored on Pete Backstrom's Sacrifice Fly to center field.

Game Two with Holy Cross was played in Worcester and John Olson came through with a three-hit performance while striking out eight Crusaders. Meanwhile the UMass hitters pounded out eleven hits including doubles by Steve Newell and Dan Kelly. After Olson's performance Coach Bergquist said, "Maybe our pitching is starting to come around. I was also very pleased with out defensive play both today and Friday. Koperniak, McMahon, and Healy were especially sound on the defense."

The latest development in the health of catcher Bill Ryan is that the cast will be coming off his finger next week. Ryan feels that he will be playing within a week after removal of the cast.

Netmen Rack Up Two Wins

The UMass Tennis team swept two Yankee Conference matches over the weekend to open their season with a 2-0 record. The netmen downed Vermont yesterday by a 7-1 score and beat Rhode Island on Friday, 8-1.

Tufts is in town today for the Tennis team's home opener at 3:00 on the Boyden courts.

See tomorrow's Collegian for details on the weekend matches as well as today's contest with Tufts.

Amherst - Right now the UMass Golf team is an even, 2-2 on the season. But that's just about where Coach Fan Gaudette wants his linkmen.

"I think we're playing well to date and we're right where I want us to be with the Yankee Conference championships coming up a week from Friday," said Gaudette. The second year mentor was obviously pleased following yesterday's 393-396 victory over New Hampshire at the Hickory CC in South Amherst. Junior transfer Jim Duane was low man in medal play with a fine round of 77.

Last week the linkmen split stepping Wesleyan in match play 5-2 before dropping a triangular match to Yale and Williams on Thursday. In medal play UMass totalled a high score of 414 as cotrpared to 412 for Williams and a 400 net by a winning Yale seven.

At the Edgewood CC in Cromwell, Ct. against the Eghman of Williams, cpt. Frank Agostino had his day. The senior golfer shot a sparkling 74 as the Minutemen copped match play 5-2. But like any other sport, it's so true of golf. The home team has the advantage and it was to Yale's favor this past Thursday.

Crew Wins All 8-Man Races

By MDC STAFF

HARTFORD, Conn—Before a crowd of approximately 200 spectators last Saturday, the UMass Crew team swept all three heavyweight eight man with coxswain races to win the Tenth Annual Mason-Downs Cup Regatta.

Once again, the Minutemen rowers were on the Connecticut River rowing against the current, but instead of breezing by the front of their own boat house, they were 30 miles downstream in Hartford and on Trinity's home course. The weather was sunny with temperatures in the fifties (the same as the previous Saturday when UMass skunked W.P.I.) and consistent with the spring weather, the three UMass eights each won their second straight race.

The 1600 meter course, which is about a mile, was transversed quickly by a varsity crew, consisting of Peter Berg at stroke, along with co-captains Jeff Allen and Bill Moran, Al Flanders, Rich Clair, Tony Joneck, Bill Fitzpatrick and Paul Gowen, and with the aid of coxswain Roger Bonsell. They outdistanced the Trinity eight by two boat lengths and Ithaca by eight lengths.

The JV eight had almost three lengths on its closest competitor, while the freshmen managed a two length margin.

Another shell entered by UMass was the four man with coxswain, and it trailed two shells from Browne and Nichols, but finished ahead of a Trinity four.

Coach Mike Vespoli said this afterwards about the varsity eight race, "I anticipated a much closer race with Trinity, but we drove right away from them at the start. We rowed at a higher cadence than we did all week. We rowed at 34 (strokes/minute) for the main body of the race and we didn't have to sprint at the end."

Results:
Varsity Eight: 1. UMass, (6:12.6); 2) St. Vin. (6:19.6.3.) Ithaca (6:43.6.)
JV Eight: 1. UMass, (6:37.6.2.) Trinity, (6:40.3.3.) Ithaca, (7:11.8.)
Freshman Eight: 1. UMass, (6:49.9, 2.) Trinity, (6:57.5.)
Varsity Four: 1. Browne & Nichols "A", (7:46.1.1.) B&N "B", (7:52.7.3.) UMass, (8:07.2.4.) Trinity, (8:25.0)

Bobby Adamson led UMass to a third place finish in the triple jump. UMass finished fourth overall in a strong field in Saturday's BC Relays. The Minutemen won the 440 relay en route to 25 total points which placed them behind Harvard (36 1/2), Northeastern (36), and Dartmouth (29 1/2). See tomorrow's Collegian for further details.

Gorillas Dump FDU, 13-5

By BOWIE BLOOM

You know, they almost had a chance to win. After all, the score at halftime was tied, 3-3, and UMass was drawing so many ridiculous penalties that Fairleigh Dickinson had every reason to believe it could win if it could capitalize on just a few of the Gorillas' errors.

What fools! Whatever kind of pep talk their volatile coach delivered to his charges during the halftime break, it backfired. Garber's Gorillas turned a two-quarter tie into a 13-5 slaughter before 300 UMass Saturday sun-worshippers.

It was obvious to everyone at the game last weekend that UMass was going to win if it would only stop drawing so many penalties. In the first half, 12 were whistled against the Gorillas. UMass' three goals during the two quarters were the product of inspired play by the midfield. Dwight Blomquist had two scores, and linemate and co-captain Hirsch Seidman connected for the other tally. Fairleigh Dickinson's three goals were garnered by attackmen Ron Kaznocha (two), and Bob Reiss.

The third period was a completely different story, as UMass came out flying offensively and defensively. While holding the visitors to no shots on net during the quarter, the Gorillas netted six of their own to turn the game into a party for the home team.

The first score came after almost four minutes had elapsed in the stanza, and it set a few people who were worried about what the Gorilla's fate was going to be on the beautiful afternoon straight. It happened when Frank Garahan scored the first of his five goals by gathering in a pass from midfielder Jackie Moran, at 3:50. A couple of minutes later, it was 5-3, as the transfer from Long Island combined with freshman Andy Scheffer on one of the crowd-pleasingest plays of the afternoon. Scheffer had the ball somewhere between midfield and FDU's goalie, and after avoiding several misplaced checks, he worked his way toward the right of the visitor's goal. At that point, he fired a pass over to Garahan, who was waiting in front of the crease, and the lead was two.

The period ended with the Gorillas leading, 9-3. The penalties that had limited their effectiveness in the first half were non- existent during the third stanza. Garahan scored one more time, while linemate Pete Connelly, Freddie Michels, and Hirsch Seidman tallied the other three goals.

In the fourth quarter, the visitors regained some measure of respectability by scoring a couple of goals, both by Gerry Hall, who was by far the best FDU player on the field. But no one person or act that occurred on the field on Saturday matched the play that made the score 10-4. At 7:33, middie John Martin had the good grace to feed to Garahan, who, with his back facing the visitor's net, fired the ball over his left shoulder between the FDU goalie's left leg and the left goalpost. Even some of the sun gods and goddesses thought the play suspicious enough to interrupt their tan-getting sessions to acknowledge its brilliance.

After Garahan finished off his scoring for the afternoon at 11:33 to make the score 11-5, unheralded Bob Gormley upped the count to 13-5. Gormley started the season playing on the third midfield, worked his way up to the second line, and has even seen some action as a starter.

Finally, on a play he started and finished, Joe DeRiso capped off the afternoon of lacrosse action with an unassisted goal at 13:15. After winning a faceoff, DeRiso raced down the center of the field through three FDU defenders and fired past the surprised visitor's goalie. It was an enjoyable end to a tremendously enjoyable afternoon.

Piri Thomas Speaks— And Raps UMass

By HUGH OWEN

Puerto Rican author Piri Thomas spoke last night in Hasbrouck Auditorium on drugs, cities, and the Third World last night, and in a coffee hour after his speech said he was disturbed by the lack of faculty and administration at the coffee hour.

"I am very, very offended that there are no members of the faculty or the administration here," said the author of Down These Mean Streets. "To me, this is only a reinforcement of the neglect by the administration of the minority groups on college campuses," he said.

"Wherever I go," he continued, "people will hear about the poor reception I was given by the administration and faculty at UMass."

Thomas, a guest lecturer sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program, said in his speech "One thing I have always carried in my heart despite racism, poverty, and drugs is love. No one can take that from me."

"No child is born a criminal," continued Thomas. "The oppressed are molded so as to react in any way to get what free Americans have coming them," he said.

"Puerto Ricans and Negroes cannot share what America is all about. In all schools across the United States oppressed people are being denied their rightful heritage," Thomas said.

Thomas also cited the need for bilingual schools in Spanish speaking areas. The reason many Spanish students never make it through school, said Thomas, is that they cannot understand the teacher.

"The whole American revolution was about taxation without representation. We pay taxes but we get screwed every which way. Where is our representation?" said Thomas.

"There are a few token Puerto Ricans and Negroes in respectable jobs, but they make sure there are plenty of porters, junkies, and prostitutes," he said.

"Before any human being can know where he is going he must know where he has come from. We learned about them, now it is time they learned about us," added Thomas on the subject of Puerto Rican culture.

"We are not afraid any longer. We want our rightful share by birth. If we haven't got a right to share neither does the white man because they took it from the Indians," Thomas said.

Answering questions from the floor Thomas said that as long as societies like the United States exist there will always be a need for prisons. Thomas also said prisons are as racist as the outside world. Whites, he said, get all the soft jobs while the Negroes and Puerto Ricans get all the tough jobs.

"People get sent to prison for cold-blooded crimes and come out cold blooded monsters," added Thomas.

Society, he said, must stop fooling themselves by calling prisons rehabilitation centers when they know prisons are used only for revenge.

Thomas, who grew up in New York's Spanish Harlem, has written and made a film about Harlem entitled The World of Piri Thomas. Part of this film was shown last night as part of Thomas' presentation.

Coffee and doughnuts were served in the Colonial Room following Thomas' speech, and Thomas was on hand to talk with interested listeners.

Amherst Selectmen

More Bus Stops Pondered

By ED FOGARTY

At the Amherst Selectman's Meeting last night William Goss, of the Student Senate Transit Service spoke of problems with the Transit service and possible improvements.

In other business the Board passed a dog restraising order, heard the pros and cons on private rubbish collection in town and moved to extend the operating hours of the Amherst Landfill Area to seven P.M. on Mondays.

Robert Godding, Assistant to Goss, told the Selectmen that there have been no major problems with the transit service. "There has been only one minor accident, which occurred when a bus attempted to back up in the Puffton Village Complex."

Godding said that from information received in a recent study, he had located a number of locations where it would be desireable to locate two additional bus stops: at the intersection of East Pleasant Street and Strong Street, and an additional stop for the Sunderland Route near Puffton to allow students to get off near Puffton.

Godding added he had received a number of requests to add a stop at the Swiss Village Apartment Complex on Route 9. He said nothing could be done until the complex is finished and there is more room for the buses to make a stop.

"There have been some problems with the traffic and parking along the roads causing safety hazards. But these have been minor," said Godding. Both Godding and the Selectmen pointed out that Eastmen Lane causes a severe hazard to the buses due to the number of illegally parked cars.

The Board passed a resolution calling for dog restraint from April 23 to Sept. 30 to keep dogs from "running at large."

Under the new restraining law any dog may be picked up at any time for running loose. At present a written request is required to have a dog placed in the dog pound.

Allen Torrey, Amherst Town Manager, said the penalty for a stray dog in not determined. "The present penalty is payment for board and the dog pound."

Threats Continue On Faculty Poll

By MDC STAFF

Members of the UMass administration today continued to decline to specify the reasons for their opposition to a poll taken of the faculty on collective bargaining, while the administration and the union traded threats of legal actions over the poll.

The poll, conducted anonymously of about 240 faculty members, was criticized over the weekend by the administration on grounds it may have violated a section of labor relations laws making it illegal to use coercion on a faculty member.

UMass officials say they are investigating the possibility of legal action regarding the poll, but staff attorney Sidney Myers said last night that he would not comment further until he conferred with Provost Robert L. Gluckstern.

Union officials have defended the poll as an attempt to determine the strength of the combined MSP—AAUP (Massachusetts Society of Professors and American Association of University Professors) before collective bargaining hearings scheduled for today in Boston.

The unions are seeking to represent the UMass-Amherst faculty.

Associate professor of zoology Larry S. Roberts, co-chairman of the MSP—AAUP campaign committee that authorized the poll, said he would "welcome" any legal action by the university, and said the union was itself investigating the legality of the administration blasts of the poll.

The poll showed 87 faculty members responding favorably to collective bargaining, 87 opposed, 50 undecided, seven refusing to answer, and seven ineligible to answer.

Some observers have said the university blast at the poll may have been an attempt to disassociate the university from the poll.

When the poll was taken, the observers say, some faculty members may have felt the administration was conducting the poll because the sponsors of the poll were not identified when it was taken.

Former CC Head Praised

By SHARON HUGHES

Former Chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors, Richard C. Nelson, was praised for "providing the Board with a great deal of assistance and leadership" by Student Government Association (SGA) President Larry Ladd last night at a Board of Governors' meeting. Ladd praised Nelson and former Vice-Chairperson Frank Cotter, calling their leadership "very, very crucial in getting the Board started."

Nelson and Cotter resigned from their chairmanships and from the Board altogether during an executive session meeting last Thursday night. Jim Lindsay was elected as new Board chairperson in an unscheduled election at the same time.

Upon resigning, Nelson said, "I think I've been a very effective chairman and the things I've done have been positive." Vice Chancellor of Administrative Services, Thomas Campion said he "completely agreed". Board members volunteering comment (including new chairperson, Jim Lindsay) also concurred.

However, the Board voted 7-5 to replace Nelson and in a method Nelson calls "constitutionally questionable and probably appealable".

Board members cite a lack of communication, the need for a different style of leadership and different methods for attaining the Board's goals as reasons for Nelson's replacement. One member complained that Nelson "ruled the Board" and excluded most members from important decision-making.

Nelson while admitting the method used, showed he lacked the Board's support, said, "disagreements could have been settled in a different way." Also, he said that the problem of information flow had been already settled by the Board.

Nelson said, "I question their motives. There were no real substantive problems with my actions as chairperson. He called the Board's action a "power struggle among members".

Nelson criticized the Board for changing leadership in the middle of the year because it may result in a change in continuity of the Board decisions and make negotiating for change with the Administration "less plausible".

Vice Chancellor Campion commented on the leadership shuffle. "I've been very happy with Board improvements this year. I just hope the change in leadership will continue to advance the causes of the Campus Center."

Nelson was a member of the Student Union Governing Board before it was dissolved and the Campus Center Board of Governors was created by the Student Senate last fall. He was appointed as official chairperson in December and his position was confirmed in executive session but never regular session in January.

Board members are appointed by the Student Senate, Graduate Senate, Area Govt.'s, Commuter Service and Greek Areas. Under the Board's purview are the major departments of the C.C. (Food Services, Building Operations, University Store, and Program Council). The Board also determines the Campus Center Fee.

Black Music Conference "Total Success"

By GARY GOMES

Several participants viewed the Black Musicians Conference last week, which was sponsored by the Institute for Pan African Studies and turned out to be a great success.

Dealing with the conference as a whole, several coordinators had thoughts on the meaning of the five-day series of workshops, panel discussion, and concerts. Bill Hasson, who is a member of the Institute, and acted as one of the prime coordinators, termed the conference a "total success...It was a shot in the arm for the music on this campus."

Archie Shepp, one of the keynote speakers, and an associate professor in the Department of Afro-American Studies, was "greatly impressed that it took place...Musicians recognized that they thought the same way." He called attention to some of the information that was gathered at the conference, citing specifically the refusal of Antioch College to renew Cecil Taylor's contract, as a sign of the refusal to accept Black music as a viable art form, and said that this was "indicative of what is required to be done. We need direction." Mr. Shepp praised Mr. Hassen for the job he did in coordinating the conference.

Professor Max Roach, who teaches in the Afro-American Studies Department here, and as well as a keynote speaker for the conference, also praised Mr. Hasson for his efforts. He stated however, that although he was pleased with the physical resources offered to the conference participants, he felt the Administration could have done much more financially for the conference than they did. He felt a need for another conference next year, possibly to be held in a location other than UMass.

Citing institutional bias regarding Black music, Dr. Frederick Tillis, who teaches in the Department of Music, cited the conference as being good in that it "showed alternatives" to established music.

Acklyn Lynch, who is an Associate Professor in the Department of Afro-American Studies, and also one of the conference coordinators, called the conference "very historic, very successful...It provided us with a clear understanding of what is involved in the creative process of the musicians, and problems in the industry in the context of their exploitation by the capitalist process."

Nelson Stevens, an Associate Professor at the Institute for Pan-African Studies called the neglect of music, "racism on a cultural level." He stated, "Everyone knew that the music was cool, but people didn't know what the musicians themselves thought, till now."

Lafferty Begins Series Tonight

Jeanne Lafferty will speak on Marriage and the Family, tonight at 8 in the Berkshire Room. This is the first in a series of three forums on feminism and socialism sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance.

Engels referred to the family as one of the three pillars of class society. Marx added to this that the family contains within itself all the antagonisms that later develop on a wide scale within the society and the state. The word "family" itself comes from the Latin word meaning slaves belonging to one individual.

Today, the questions of the basic character of the family, its role in the oppression of women and children, its history as a social institution, and the alternatives to family life are hotly debated in the feminist movement. Jeanne Lafferty is a founding member of Cell-16, and Female Liberation in Boston and the 1972 Socialist Workers Party candidate for Congress against Louise Day Hicks.

Four Seniors Divide Up Senior Committee Budget Cut

By MARK CITRON

A meeting of the Senior Day Committee last night brought a turnout of four dedicated students who began the division of the $800 cut from their budget by the Senior Committee.

$350 of the total amount was cut in the following areas: $200 for musical groups, $300 for beverages, and $150 for advertising. Whether further cuts are needed to meet the budget was unsure. Sarah Chadnofsky, Committee Chairperson, said the Senior Committee had decided that they would cover Senior Day expenses in their last meeting, but her committee's purpose was "to cut as much as we can."

The musical group cut would allow Senior Day three bands and the beverage cut would mean no wine, though beer and soda would still be served.

Senior Day is planned for Friday, May 25, with ticket sales beginning the first few days in May. Ticket prices are planned at $1 for seniors and $2 for their guests.

McInerney Assesses Need For Athletic Fee

By JOAN FASSNACHT

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney told the Senate Rents and Fees Committee last night that he was "absolutely not working toward getting rid of the athletic fee at this time. Without the fee there would be no athletics."

For the next hour, lively debate ensued between the Committee members and McInerney over theneed for the mandatory athletic fee which all students must now pay.

In defense of the fee, McInerney stated, "Even for those people who detest sports, the Athletic programs benefit them by adding to the University's impact and prestige. We are a better University because of that fee." replied Committee Chairperson Mike Gregory, "Shouldn't the students be allowed to decide that?"

In reply to that question and to another posed by Senator Joe Smith as to why students are forced to pay the arbitrary fee, McInerney said, "The fee of $15.00 per semester per student was established in 1960 by the Board of Trustees. It is only through this Board that a change in policy can be initiated. Students can and already have tried to effect changes by letting their feelings be known in the Collegian," for example when they protested the basketball games held at the Springfield Civic Center."

McInerney went on to explain the uses of the Athletic Fee, "Next fall the Women's Programs and Intramurals will enjoy a substantial increase in funds. Our major commitments remain with football, basketball, and hockey, because they offer "income production"."

Concerning football, McInerney hopes to increase outside participation by promoting the Minutemen. The use of billboards, and TV, and radio spots have been suggested to promote Minutemen football to areas such as Holyoke, Springfield, and Chicopee. The added income from increased ticket sales could then be used to fund other sports. In a final statement, McInerney said, "I am bounded by the constraints of my job. For now, the Athletic Fee must stay. Once the money situation has stabilized, we can move into other directions." replied Senator Joe Smith, "The Athletic Fee is not necessary for the survival of this University. Your program exploits students. It is no easier for us to get the money than for you to. It's a hyprocisy."

In other business, the Committee defeated a motion to reconsider increasing the funding of Sylvan's Business Budget from $17,500 to $22,000. A motion was passed to approve the $17,500 fund with an additional $4,500 if full occupancy is achieved and the unappropriated surpluses are there in the Building Authority.

SGA Candidates Debate

By STEPHEN FINE

The Commuter Assembly heard yesterday the election platforms of Nick Apostola, Henry Rigan, Elliot Sherman and Roy Perdue, the candidates for Student Government Association President.

The meeting which was held at the Commuter Lounge in the Student Union, was attended by a small group of commuters. Apostola, Rigan, Sherman, and Perdue were alloted ten minutes to speak, with a short question and answer period following.

The election will be held on Monday, with the Student Senate having 48 electoral votes, the Commuter Assembly with 9, and each area government plus the Greek Council with 6.

Apostola, Chairperson of the Senate's Academic Affairs Committee, saw the areas of student affairs, Student Services, and Academic policy as needing improvement.

Apostola said that the administration should consult students more ofies in the area of student affairs. He also suggested that the student bus service increase operations, and the Student Senate start to build a larger financial base to start a record shop that would have low prices.

In academic affairs, Apostola saw a need for the administration to seek out more of what students think. He cited examples of student working to improve academic policy but the administration delaying the results of this work.

Rigan, a member of the Southwest Assembly, said student government was mired in bureaucracy and the best way to remedy this was by making the Student Senate Office into an opium den. "I think the Student Government President's office should be set up in the Bluewall," he said.

"If you want to restore lutacy to student government vote for Henry Rigan," he maintained.

Chairperson of the Student Senate Matters Committee Elliot Sherman said that he saw the purpose of student governments as providing services that the University does not, such as a credit union and a job bank. "Student Government should defray taxes students have to pay," he said.

Sherman also said that students should also establish a relationship with the town. "Students should have a voice. I think projects like Paprarazzo should have been stopped," he said.

Roy Perdue, ex-President of Orchard Hill Area Government said that the main point of student government should be as an educator.

Perdue gave as an example his own experiences as editor of the Orchard Hill Area paper Sage in his freshman year and as Area Government President of the Hill last year.

"Responsibilities must be diffused to students, and I haven't seen this done in student government this year," he said.

Perdue discounted any doubts about his experience in dealing with administration by saying the government of Orchard Hill was more complex than possibly the Math or English Departments.

In the question and answer period each candidate was asked his view of the effect of faculty unionization on students.

Apostola saw the move as a faculty reaction to the rights students gained over the years such as sitting on evaluation and personel committees. He said that anything students did to oppose a union would encourage faculty to form it, since "if the students say something good, to the faculty this means it's bad."

Apostola suggested that a student union might be the outcome. "We'll get 30% of the students to sign union cards and we'll sit at the bargaining table with the administration," he said.

Rigan saw the problem as two-fold. He believed that while the cause of unionism should not be set back by students, they should at the same time "make sure they weren't stepped on".

Sherman said he opposed faculty unionization and that some way should be investigated to make sure that students were recognized as a bargaining power.

On this issue Perdue said he was "not that paranoid by faculty unionization." He said however that a student union should be formed to insure their rights were upheld.

CC Board Confirms Lindsey Chairperson

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night confirmed the election of Jim Lindsey as board chairperson and elected a new vice-chairperson and secretary/treasurer.

Dave Winchester defeated board member Tony Taraglia after two ballots for the position of board vice-chairperson. The first ballot resulted in a tie.

Bill Worden was named secretary/treasurer by acclamation.

In other business, the board interviewed Richard E. Slocum, a candidate for director of the Campus Center. Announcement of committee chairmanship appointments was postponed.

SGA president Larry Ladd chaired the election proceedings, which followed last week's resignations of board chairman Richard C. Nelson and vice-chairman Frank Cotter. The vote to name Lindsey as new chairperson was a confirmation of his victory in an unscheduled election last Thursday night.

Both Nelson and Cotter resigned from the board altogether at that time.

Ladd cited the "fine leadership" of both Nelson and Cotter during the time they served on the board of governors. "Their leadership," he said, "was largely responsible for the board's success in the early months of its existence."

The board also interviewed Richard E. Slocum, a candidate for Campus Center Director. The position became open following the resignation of Harry Grinnan from the post a few weeks ago.

Slocum, who is presently Director of the Student Center at the University of Wisconsin at Fall River, answered questions in an unscheduled interview with the board.

Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Thomas Campion commented on the relationship between the Campus Center director and the Board of Governors in policy decisions.

Campion agreed with the board's policy making role but clarified the issue by saying, "I don't feel that there should be a need in the long run for the board to intervene in the decisions of the director in specific cases. The board should define the directions in which they want to go and then determine whether or not the director is moving in that direction."

Slocum responded to Campion's statements. He said, "It appears because of the present situation between the management and the board, that at this time the board is hesitant in allowing the director to do his job." He cited the importance of the fact that the board and the director not interfere with each other. The board must "let go of the reins and let management make its own decisions."

Following Slocum's interview, the board recessed. The recess was followed by a meeting in executive session.

Laotian Bombing Aimed At Peace Violations

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The new American bombing in Laos is a limited tactic aimed at convincing the Communists that President Nixon will tolerate no further encroachments on the Indochina cease-fire agreements, U. S. officials say.

Unlike the continuous and extensive air raids in neighboring Cambodia, the bombing in Laos Monday had no major military significance, according to these sources.

The raids were the first since the separate Laotion cease-fire was signed seven weeks ago.

Officials say they were designed to tell Hanoi and its allies in Indochina that President Nixon was not mouthing empty words in March when he said his warnings against cease-fire violations should not be lightly disregarded.

But Hanoi radio and a Pathet Lao broadcast Tuesday said the American raids were unprovoked.

Unlike Laos, where the fighting had fallen to a low level before Monday, the situation in Cambodia has required constant American air involvement, according to admistration officials.

The bombing is deemed necessary to support the Lon Nol government and to keep Phnom Penh from falling, the U.S. sources say.

The Nixon administration sees the renewed fighting in Laos as tied to a growing trend by the Communists throughout Indochina to test the United States' will.

When the Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese Monday hit the militarily unimportant town of Tha Vieng, President Nixon sent B52s and other warplanes into action to offset what the Pentagon called "a major violation of the cease-fire."

The justification for Nixon's action is cloudy and rests on a constitutional interpretation that as commander-in-chief he can take whatever actions he considers necessary to wind down the Indochina war. This is the rationale used to explain the air war in Cambodia.

The Vietnam cease-fire signed in Paris Jan. 27 calls for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Cambodia and Laos and prohibits the use of those countries for military activities.

However, there is no time limit, and U.S. officials say the American actions are not a violation of the cease-fire. They say the other side has not lived up to its part of the agreement.

While the United States has widened its military reactions to cease-fire violations, efforts continue diplomatically to convince Hanoi to end the fighting.

Contacts between American and North Vietnamese officials continue in Paris and elsewhere.

McCord Still Off Public Record

WASHINGTON (AP) - An attorney representing the Nixon reelection campaign in a series of lawsuits today cancelled some testimony that could have put Watergate figure James W. McCord on the public record.

McCord has yet to testify in public about who else may have been involved in last year's bugging and burglary of Democratic offices, or what other Republican spy schemes may have been under way during the campaign.

Lawyer Kenneth Wells Parkinson had been scheduled to question McCord under oath next Friday, but said he called off the deposition because of certain discussions which he isn't free to describe.

Only last Friday Parkinson argued against a request by Senate investigators to keep McCord's lawsuit testimony secret. U. S. District Judge Charles Richey denied the request, which had been made in a letter from Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., the committee chairman.

Unless Democratic lawyers in the lawsuits can quickly schedule their own deposition with McCord, it now appears that McCord will give his first public testimony about the Watergate affair in hearings before Ervin's committee. They are scheduled to begin May 15.

Sources have said McCord's earlier, secret testimony before a federal grand jury and Ervin's Senate panel, produced hearsay evidence implicating high administration officials in the Watergate affair, and linking Parkinson himself to alleged payoffs to silence McCord and other Watergate defendants.

Parkinson has denied that he handled any hush money, and accused McCord of false and defamatory statements.

Meanwhile the White House had nothing to say about a report in the Los Angeles Times that President Nixon soon would make a "dramatic admission" saying one or more high-level administration officials were responsible for Watergate-type political espionage.

Shultz Turns Thumbs Down On Freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz Tuesday all but ruled out a new wage-price freeze but hinted that President Nixon may have some announcements on new anti-inflation controls later this week.

A price freeze or price rollback had been regarded as one administration option in dealing with the fastest price increases since the Korean War.

But Shultz told newsmen Tuesday: "A general across-the-board wage-price freeze is not under active consideration by the President as far as I know."

He said President Nixon might make a statement on the anti-inflation program when and if Congress sends him an acceptable bill extending his authority to control wages and prices.

A White House spokesman said Tuesday the President is conducting a continuing review of economic matters, but said no final decisions have been made.

The President's control authority expires April 30. The administration scored a significant victory Monday when the House voted a simple one-year extension without the amendments on price rollbacks and freezes that it had threatened earlier.

U.S. Condemns Arabs, Israelis

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) - The United States denounced Israel's reprisal raids in the Middle East but demanded equal U.N. condemnation of Arab terrorism.

"Violence by conventional forces and violence by terrorists are to be condemned equally - one is as ugly as the other," Ambassador John A. Scali told the Security Council Tuesday.

He thus emphasized that the United States would veto any council action that struck exclusively at Israel's swift and deadly commando raids into Lebanon last week.

"To the shame of all mankind," Scali said, "acts of violence and terror, often striking down innocent people, are on the verge of becoming a routine footnote to the tragic and unresolved Arab-Isreli conflict.

"In the past few months, hundreds have been killed -innocent men, women and children, diplomats, tourists and bystanders alike," he said.

"We are living today at a time when a knock on the door may signal the visit of an assassin armed with machine gun or a fire bomb. . .

"It is intolerable that opening the morning mail may trigger an explosion. It is intolerable that the innocent cannot regard even the family apartment, the social gathering, the Olympic sporting field or the quiet streets as an abode of peace."

Asserting that the violence in the Middle East "has taken on newer and uglier dimensions," Scali said "the United Nations disapproval of the international community of unwarranted and unnecessary loss of innocent lives from acts of international terrorism and military responses to it."

"We ask for an end to both cross-border attacks and individual acts of violence," Scali said. "If the council will call for this, it will create an atmosphere in which we can move from the assessment of blame to the making of peace."

It was the fourth day of debate on Lebanon's complaint about the Israeli raid that killed three top Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

Wounded-Knee Fighting Starts Again

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) - Heavy gunfire was exchanged between federal police and Indians on the perimeter of this besieged village today, a few hours after a supply drop by three light airplanes, a government spokesman said.

Charles Cadieux, an Interior Department official, said one Indian suffered a head wound and was taken by a federal helicopter to Pine Ridge.

Cadieux told newsmen the gunfire lasted about 1 1/2 hours. He said it began about 9 a.m.

Richardson Details Base Shutdowns

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Elliott L. Richardson said Tuesday that his sweeping new base reduction order is "timely and necessary" and hinted that more shutdowns are coming over the next few years.

"I would not wish to represent that the realignments that have been announced here today are the last realignments that will take place over the next few years," Richardson told a news conference.

He said a total of 274 base closings, reductions and consolidations should save about $3.5 billion over the next 10 years. But he acknowledged that the Pentagon actually will have to lay out an additional $64.4 million in the first year to cover relocation and other costs.

A total of 40 Army, Navy and Air Force bases in the United States are to be closed, most of them over the next 14 months. The rest of the reduction will involve cutbacks in activities at various bases, plus some consolidations.

Over-all, Richardson said, there will be a net reduction of 42,800 positions, military and civilian.

Richardson said, "I would reject . . .totally" suggestions by congressional critics that specific base closings were dictated at least partly by political motives.

On the cutbacks, he said: "These realignment actions are both timely and necessary. They are made possible in large part of the winding down of our involvement in Southeast Asia and by the consequent reduction in the size of our military forces and in the extent of our training needs.

"A concurrent and, in the long term, even more important reason, is the urgent need to seek economies and efficiencies in order that scarce defense resources can be devoted to such high-priority areas as research and development, readiness and modernization of forces, and maintenance of strategic sufficiency."

Military Critics Oppose Cutbacks

By JANET STAHAR
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Several military spending critics whose states got the ax in military cutbacks said Tuesday U.S. defense bases abroad should be ahead of them on the chopping block.

But none of these senators went so far as to contend publicly that an administration decision on which bases to back down was politically motivated.

Said Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.: "It is ironic that members of Congress who have yelled the loudest in recent years for lower defense spending are among those complaining because establishments in their states were either closed or cutback."

California Sens. Alan Cranston and John V. Tunney, both Democrats, criticized the closing of Hunter's Point Naval Shipyard near San Francisco, eliminating 5,184 jobs.

Cranston said, "We're sacrificing jobs here at home so the President can keep his bases overseas. We should be putting the money to work here at home in areas that create jobs for Americans rather than jobs for . . .foreigners."

Another hard-hit state is Massachusetts, which will lose 6,099 positions as the Boston Naval Shipyard is dumped.

Although Massachusetts as the only state not to give a majority vote to President Nixon in the election last year Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., thinks this has nothing to do with the administration's decision to close the shipyard. Nor does he believe his own strong antiwar sentiments have anything to do with it.

One powerful GOP senator, Hugh Scott, was delighted that his state, Pennsylvania, will benefit by 1,000 new jobs from the closing of the Boston shipyard.

Scientists "Bottle-Up" Memory

By BRIAN SULLIVAN

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP)—Scientists at the Baylor College of Medicine have captured animals' memory in a test tube.

Working with rat brains, they have found that the memory of the sound of an electric bell is a chemical thing—an eight-segment chain of six specific amino acids, basic chemicals of life.

This discovery follows work done at Baylor two years ago, when the scientists identified a substance found in the brain of rats trained to avoid the dark.

The chemicals can be isolated from the brain and then injected into other laboratory animals which were not trained to the sound of the bell or to avoid the dark. The untrained animals then behave as though they had been trained.

This effort to crack the code of memory in the mind was reported Tuesday by Dr. Georges Ungar and Dr. S. R. Burzynsky of Baylor at the 57th annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

To find the chemical footprints of memory, the Baylor team habituated rats to the sound of an electric bell repeated at five-second intervals for one or two hours a day, for two to three weeks.

Habituation is an elementary form of learning which allows one to ignore a neutral stimulus, one that is neither pleasant nor harmful. A loud noise would startle one, for example, but when repeated, one learns to ignore it if it is not associated with danger. After being trained to the bell, the rat brains were removed. An extract was injected into mice which were then subjected to the same electric bell sound.

Mice given the extract tended to ignore the signal; other mice reacted normally. This effect lasted four to five days.

"We collected brains from close to 6,000 habituated rats during the last two years," the Baylor scientists reported. After purification, the memory material was shown to be a substance called a peptide.

Peptides consist of chains of amino acids and the information they carry depends on which of 20 amino acids may contain and on the sequence of the amino acids.

Meat Prices At Pre-Boycott Level

GRAND ISLAND, Nebraska—BONE OF CONTENTION—When meat markets were ordered to post prices, one Grand Island, Neb., butcher decided to tell all—the price of a T—bone assembled and disassembled.

The prices were as high all across the country reports an AP survey as it seems the boycott had little affect on meat prices. (AP Wirephoto)

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The shopper with a taste for steaks, chops or even hamburger is finding meat prices as high as they were at the start of the month, despite the week-long meat boycott, an Associated Press sampling shows.

The AP survey also showed that more than half the meat items checked were selling at the maximum allowed under the price ceilings imposed by President Nixon on lamb, beef and pork late last month.

Sources in the Nixon administration said, meanwhile, that the President may impose a new price freeze. Their comments came after House passage Monday of a bill extending Nixon's authority to impose economic controls.

The AP checked the prices of eight meat items in 15 cities on April 2-the first business day of the boycott and the day the Internal Revenue Service started enforcing the price ceilings. It rechecked the same cuts at the same supermarkets on April 16.

There were a few bright spots. Pork chops decreased in certain items on special sale.

The survey also compared the April 16 prices with the ceilings posted last week. It found 63 items - 52.5 per cent - were selling at the ceiling price; 50 items were selling below the ceiling; and 7 were unavailable.

Of the items below the ceiling, almost half were between 6 and 10 cents per pound lower and about 20 per cent were between 11 and 20 cents per pound lower. Other cuts of meat ranged from 1 to 59 cents below the ceiling.

None of the supermarkets involved in the survey was among those which announced a policy of keeping prices below the ceiling levels.

The items checked were one pound each of: round steak, center cut pork chops, chopped chuck, sirloin steak, rib lamb chops, veal cutlet, leg of lamb and standing rib roast. The cities were Baltimore, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Chicago, Phoenix, Atlanta, Washington, Columbus, Boston, New Orleans, Newark, Philadelphia, Detroit, Seattle and Los Angeles.

Court Rejects Elks Policy On Race

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP) - A former national grand exalted ruler of the Order of Elks and past president of the Massachusetts organization says Elks in the State will be affected by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on the club's traditional "white only" membership policy.

John E. Fenton of Lawrence, chairman of the board of Suffolk Law School and a judge in the state land court for 28 years, says the high court ruling is a case involving Elks clubs in Maine will settle a case which has been pending in Suffolk County Superior Court.

In 1971, the Massachusetts Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission revoked the liquor licenses of Elk and Moose lodges because of "white only" membership policies.

Another Massachusetts Elk, the Rev. William R. MacKenzie of Middleboro, a long-time critic of the exclusive membership policy, disagreed with Fenton about the effect of the high court ruling in Massachusetts.

He said the ruling "will have no effect in this state."

Cross-Examination Of Ellsburg Begins

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)-A government prosecutor began cross-examining Daniel Ellsberg today in a hushed courtroom packed to capacity with spectators.

Asst. U.S. Atterney David Nissen, facing Ellsberg for the first time since the Pentagon Papers trial began last January, opened his questioning by having Ellsberg repeat again the steps he took to obtain the secret documents.

Before Nissen began, Leonard Weinglass, the attorney for codefendant Anthony Russo, cross-examined Ellsberg briefly in Russo's behalf. He had Ellsberg tell jurors again that Russo knew nothing of the contents of the Pentagon Papaers when he helped Ellsberg copy them in 1969. Ellsberg said he had never informed Russo about the nature of the papers-a secret study of the Vietnam war.

Dozens of spectators were locked out of today's session when the courtroom filled up. More than 100 persons had been lined up before dawn to try for a seat.

Ellsberg, who concluded his direct defense testimony Monday, had told jurors he copied the Pentagon Papers while Americans fought in Vietnam hoping the documents would give Congress "the self-confidence to end the war."

Ecology Bill Recalled

BOSTON (AP)-A new state constitutional amendment intended to protect the environment has created its first legislative snag.

The Senate Tuesday "recalled" from Gov. Francis W. Sargent's desk a bill which would allow the town of Ludlow to use about 2.3 acres of parkland as the site for a new town offices, because the bill would technically be unconstitutional for the governor to sign.

The environmental amendment, overwhelmingly approved by the state's voters last fall, requires a two-thirds vote of both branches of the legislature before parkland can be turned to any other use.

The Ludlow bill had a unanimous roll call in the House, but the roll call was not on the final "enactment" stage required by the constitution. And the Senate had no roll call on the bill at all.

Senate Counsel James R. McIntyre said the procedural error had been brought to his attention by Senate Clerk Norman L. Pidgeon. And he said he and Pidgeon had jointly worked out a system of "flagging" bills requiring the special roll calls in the future to prevent a recurrance of the mistake.

McIntyre said there was "no question" the Ludlow bill would have to be sent back to the House for another roll call in the Senate.

Meanwhile the legislature's Natural Resources and Agriculture Committee faced with problems created by the same constitutional amendment has asked Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn to issue an opinion clarifying the amendment's provisions.

The committee is holding up action on a number of bills potentially affected by the amendment.

A spokesman for Quinn said Tuesday the request for an opinion has been given high priority but the complex legal questions are still being researched.

Nixon Petitioned On Cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Massachusetts and Rhode Island congressional delegations petitioned President Nixon on Tuesday for his personal review of the Defense Department's decision to close most of the two states' military installations.

The petition, drafted after a Capitol Hill caucus Tuesday morning, was signed by the 18 congressmen and senators in the two state delegations.

The cutbacks, the lawmakers said, "will be an economic and a strategic disaster for New England and the nation."

They asked for an immediate meeting with the President to present their views regarding the imminent loss of 35,000 military and civilian personnel.

The Pentagon officially announced the forthcoming closings of Boston Naval Shipyard, the cruiser-destroyer headquarters at Newport, R.I., and the various other facilities Tuesday.

Here is the text of the New Englanders' petition:

"Dear Mr. President:

"The announcement by the Defense Department of the closing of the majority of defense installations in Massachusetts and Rhode Island will be an economic and strategic disaster for New England and the nation.

"For this reason, all of the members of the congressional delegations of Massachusetts and Rhode Island request an immediate meeting with you to present our concerns and views of these decisions and to ask for your personal review of the impact of these actions.

"New England presently is suffering from the highest unemployment rate in the nation, with the Massachusetts rate currently at 7.3 per cent and Rhode Island at 6.4 per cent. While these factors apparently were ignored in the Defense Department's decisions, we fell certain that you will take into account increased social, economic and retraining costs as counter-balances to potential military savings.

"Beyond the tragic consequence of the loss of jobs, we are especially distressed by the abandoment of long-established vital military facilities closer to key mission areas than to any other East Coast installation.

"An immediate meeting with you, we believe, is imperative in view of the tremendous loss of 35,000 military and civilian personnel to the area."

Pittsburg Abortion Clinic Opens

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Pittsburgh's first abortion clinic opened this week and a spokesman said they were being flooded with requests for information and appointments.

Ten abortions were performed Monday. The first day, a clinic spokesman said 100 women probably would have pregnancies terminated by the end of the week.

"Apparently word is getting around because the phone is ringing constantly with women asking for information and appointments," one staff representative said.

"The need is so tremendous," said Leah Sayles, executive director of the clinic. "This is really more than we expected at the start."

With the use of local anesthesia, a woman can be out of the clinic four hours after she enters. Should general anesthesia be required, the operation would have to be performed at a hospital because the clinic has no in-bed facilities.

Mrs. Sayles, a psychiatric social worker, says she believes the city clinic, known as Women's Health Services, Inc., is the first non-profit abortion clinic started since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in January that states' abortion laws were illegal.

Funded with a loan from the New York Planned Parenthood organization, the clinic has 16 full-time professional employes.

There are six gynecologists, on a contract basis, said Mrs. Sayles, noting, however, that other doctors were donating their services.

Although the clinic provides walk-in service, before a woman can undergo the operation she is counseled extensively and alternatives are explained in detail, said Mrs. Sayles.

There is a fixed cost involved, but women unable to afford the fee are referred to outside social agencies who in turn make recommendations for a reduced rate or even free operations.

The clinic's emphasis, Mrs. Sayles said, is providing abortions at a reasonable fee to those women who decide they want to terminate their pregnancies.

Senior Honors Project Substitutes For Courses

All members of the class of '74 who have a cumulative average of 3.0 or above are eligible to participate in the Senior Honors Program. A senior honors project replaces six or nine semester hours of course work. It results in an undergraduate thesis prepared under the direction of one faculty member together with a committee of two additional faculty members.

A student who successfully completes a project will be graduated with departmental honors and have an appropriate citation noted on his transcript.

The project facilitates close student-faculty relations, individual research, and the selection of a special problem in which the student is interested. The work involved in an honors project usually entails more time and effort than the courses replaced. The satisfaction of completing a major study on a topic that is personally interesting is most rewarding and a challenge.

A special table in the Honors Office (Machmer E-23) contains additional information about the program plus forms to be completed by those who wish to participate.

It is suggested that the interested student seek out the Honors Coordinator in his department and obtain his approval before the student indicates to the Honors Office that he is interested.

Student's who wish to apply for Senior Honors Thesis Grants must pick up an application form and return it to the Honors Office BEFORE the end of this current term.

Now the level of graduation Honors (Cum Laude, Magna Cum Laude, Summa Cum Laude), is usually determined entirely on the basis of a student's cumulative average. The senior honors project is not taken into account. However, beginning with the class of '77– and available by petition to members of classes that graduate before that time – a student may choose to have his senior thesis project count toward his graduation Honors. Any senior who wishes his senior honors project to count towards his graduation with Honors should consult with the Honors Coordinator in his major department or with the Honors Office.

Further information may be obtained from the Director of University Honors, Professor Cynthia Wolff, or either of the Associate Directors, Professors Mary Sirridge nd Brian O'Connor.

A Sticky Situation

By CHRISTINE McKNIGHT

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - New York State may have to yield its position as the nation's No. 1 maple-syrup producer to Vermont in 1973, a top maple syrup expert predicted Tuesday.

Fred Winch, the forestry agent for New York State, said he expects 66 per cent of a normal crop yield of 500,000 gallons for New York this year. Vermont officials indicate their production may be slightly higher, although final 1973 figures for both states will not be available for another month or so.

The two states, which together put out two-thirds of the nation's maple-syrup crop, each produced an estimated 340,000 gallons last year-a below-normal season. But the New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets says New York led the nation in 1972 with a retail value of $2.75 million for its syrup.

The Circus Comes To Town

Your childhood dreams will come true today when you get the chance of a lifetime to see Ben the bear, the Daktari animals, Merlin the Magician, Clarence the Cross-eyed lion and trampolene artists at the Emmett Kelly Circus. The show will be presented today at 3 and 7 p.m. at the Curry-Hicks Cage.

All proceeds will go to the Belchertown State School to continue programs which were begun, then cut, by the Federal government.

The show is being sponsored by the Boltwood-Belchertown Project. Tickets are $1 for children under 14 and $2 for adults, and are still available at the RSO office.

Concentrating on two ingredients that most captivate audiences--animals and clowns-this circus maintains all the excitement of the traditional big top shows.

That old favorite, Tony the Wonder Horse, will be an active participant in the "Emmett Kelly, Jr. All Star Circus" which will hit campus today at the Curry Hicks Cage. Also on the bill are Clarence, the Cross-Eyed Lion and Pamela's Mad, Mad Dogs.

Indian Leader Here Wednesday

Vernon Bellecourt, national director of the American Indian Movement, will speak at 2 p.m. today in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium. The topic of his speech will be the continuing seizure of Wounded Knee, South Dakota, by members of AIM and the Oglala Sioux tribe.

Bellecourt was co-founder of the American Indian Movement and has been its leader for several years. The speech at UMass will be the first appearance of the AIM leadership in the New England area since the Wounded Knee takeover. Bellecourt appeared on the Dick Cavett show several weeks ago.

Also speaking at the UMass rally, beginning at 1 p.m. will be Al Halloway, spokesman for the Boston Indian Council, and attorney David Rockwell from the AIM legal staff at Wounded Knee.

Bellecourt's brother, Clyde, was recently arraigned along with AIM leader Russell Means for their involvement in the Wounded Knee takeover. Bellecourt will discuss what has taken place at Wounded Knee, the grievances of the American Indians there, and the status of the situation at present.

Maine May Ban Coast Refineries

By LAWRENCE SPIEGEL
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - The state Senate Tuesday gave preliminary approval to a temporary ban on the construction of oil refineries and petroleum handling facilities along Maine's picturesque 3,500-mile coastline.

The 20-12 roll call vote came hours before a scheduled new conference at which officials of the Pittston Co., a New York-based firm, were expected to announce application for a permit to build a $250 million oil refinery at Eastport.

If the moratorium is enacted, it could block oil and heavy industry development along the coast until Jan. 15,1974.

But a clause in the legislation ties the moratorium to court tests of a 1970 law establishing tight controls over coastal oil handling. If a court ruling is forthcoming, the moratorium would end at the same time the appeal period expires.

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis, a Democrat, is opposed to the moratorium, and might veto the measure if it is enacted. Curtis contends the state now has sufficient environmental safeguards.

The Senate's action was the acceptance of one of three reports from the Natural Resources Committee, which had been asked to approve an 18-month moratorium. Five committee members supported the original bill, with four backing the shorter ban and four opposing any moratorium.

In the Senate debate, proponents of the moratorium argued that the restrictions would give the state time to develop new legislation should the coastal conveyance law be overturned.

Sen. Wakine G. Tanous, R-East Millinocket, the only member to speak in opposition to the restriction, said the state has passed numerous restrictive environmental protection laws, creating new state agencies and hiring expert personnel.

Tanous recommended letting these people carry out the laws to counter possibly harmful developments.

Sen. T. Tarpy Schulten, R-Woolwich, supported the short moratorium, but argued that passage of the longer ban would be "the most irresponsible statesmanship on our part" because of the state's high unemployment rate.

Over Reaction

Over the weekend the UMass administration attacked a poll of the faculty sponsored by the Massachusetts Society of Professors and the American Association of University Professors. The poll was conducted to investigate the issue of collective bargaining among the faculty.

Provost Robert L. Gluckstern said there was concern within the administration that the poli violated a provision of both state and federal labor relations laws which make it illegal "to use coercion upon a faculty member". Currently the administration is investigating the possibility of legal action.

The motives behind the administration attack on the poll are unclear. The poll seems to have been a justifiable attempt by the union to determine faculty sentiment on collective bargaining.

While it may have been wiser for the union to identify itself when conducting the poll the administration attack, based on technicalities, is an over reaction.

At the very least the administration should explain its opposition to the poll instead of referring to "possible" violations of the law.

"Yes, I'm going to leave you Helen. I've wanted to leave you for years."

"WE INTERRUPT THIS PROGRAM TO BRING YOU THIS SPECIAL BULLETIN!!"

"Today was the first meeting of the Third Continental Congress, and here to bring you up to date is a report by Harry Reasonless."

"Since the suspension of Congress and President Newton's declaration of martial law eight years ago, there has been a great deal of debate over the manner of conducting foreign policy. Initially, as I'm sure you know, the government was satisfied to condemn the nations of the Middle East for their use of nuclear weapons. However, today after heated argument, it was decided that this was not a strong enough course of action.

"The meeting commenced with that restless air always associated with national emergency. The Radical Democrats, as they've been referred to, were led by Senator Gerald Masters. Senator Masters, after his defeat at the polls in 1972, has found his new strength with these Radical Democrats, who have been urging that the United States attempt to help alleviate the situation in the Middle East with a policy of forgiveness, rather than retaliation. However, on the other side of the fence, President Newton demands that these countries be punished for going against international agreements. However, President Newton claims that he doesn't have enough bargaining power to make U.S. viewpoints prevalent.

At the convention, the Radical Democrats appeared to have a firm foothold on matters until President Randolph Newton came into the assembly and made a memorable speech, stressing the point that he didn't want to represent a second class power at the bargaining table, and that the only way to be fully affective would be for the Congress to secede its power to the President. This speech received a standing ovation, at which point Senator Masters and his cohorts stood up and walked out on the assembly. We later received word that the Radical Democrats have been arrested and are being held for treason.

The Congress continued on with its business and decided that the president's course of action would be the best. At exactly 4:15 p.m. today, February 12, 1984, President Randolph Millhouse Newton became the first Permanent President of the United States of America. This is Harry Reasonless from Washington, D.C."

Time Out

How come an hour and fifteen minutes is not enough time for me to enjoy my Yoga class to the fullest, while forty-five minutes in my education lecture suffocates me.

Time. That is something that has absolutely no relevance in my life style, yet it seems to dictate me more than anything else.

I have fifteen minutes to get to my next class.

It's funny, some people have their whole college career planned out for them but they don't know what they're going to do that evening.

There are three weeks of classes left for this semester.

I find it strange that certain things have to be done at certain times. For instance, if this copy gets to the editor's desk too late, it won't make the deadline (strange name for when something's due), and if my copy doesn't make the deadline then it doesn't get in the paper, and if it doesn't get in the paper, then the whole flow of what's supposed to be is disrupted. I try not to interfere with the status quo.

I'm sorry, I haven't the time to fool around.

It seems that the only thing that's not on time around here is the weather. The sun comes and goes as it pleases. Maybe that's why no one gets up with the sun any more. You really don't know what time that will be.

I hate to be assigned to do something. It stifles my creativity at times (no pun intended), because I like spontaneity. If I pass in a paper early, I'm afraid that the professor will examine it with a fine tooth comb. But I'm also hesitant about waiting until the last minute to write it just because it's due. What I usually do is do my work whenever I feel like it and just pass it in with the masses.

Bob Brick says that it's about time he got his name in the paper.

I give myself an extra five minutes in the morning by taking the bus at "F" lot instead of catching it by Pierpont. And I can just make the bus to Amherst Center on Tuesdays, if I leave my class two minutes early. That is, if the busses are running on time (which they always are).

For one week out of the year, Jewish people cannot eat leavened bread or any other yeasted products. This is timed from sundown on the first day of the week to sundown exactly seven days later.

At the end of this month we get to turn our clocks back an hour and don't have to save daylight for another six months.

I have to study for an exam that I'm having at 9:05 in the morning that has seven questions and I'm allowed to have just about seven minutes to answer each question. What happens if I finish early? Or not early enough?

On September 9, 1953 at 11:35 p.m. the astrological sign rising over the horizon was Cancer. All children born at that time are double Virgos.

Lenny Bruce was not appreciated in his own lifetime. Perhaps he was a little before his time to be appreciated.

If space is the place then there is time because there is a time and a place for everything.

My mother keeps asking me when. The what is not as important to her as the why to me. When will I do this, when am I going to do that. No one seems to realize that time is not of the essence. There's plenty of time. Hell, I'm nineteen years old, I have the rest of my life to make or waste my time.

It took me three hours to write this nonsense.

The Piggyback Ride?

The need for strong organizations of students, faculty and professionals can be no better demonstrated than in the current plans of the University Administration to massively increase the tax to park on campus.

As far as can be determined, the so-called solution to the parking problem has already been opposed by many knowledgeable individuals and will be opposed by many more once they become aware of the pocketbook onslaught contemplated by the University Administration.

The University is actively considering the imposition of a schedule of graduated fees based on preferential parking location for students, faculty and staff which, in effect, will tax the driver to subsidize the construction, maintenance and operation of campus (state) parking facilities.

Initially, fees ranging up to $100.00 or $150.00 were envisioned for this phase of the parking program but these were dropped, at least for the time being as being too unpalatable for the first big increase. Less controversial to start lower, say $5.00 to $60.00 or more, even to the point of considering payroll deductions for the easy, friendly payment group.

At the start of this long-range program, a one dollar fee was adopted ostensibly to sort out ownership of cars on campus for parking control purposes. As costs and ambitions increased, the campuswide tax was upped to $5.00. If in 1973 we got to $60.00, what will be the tax in 1974? 1975?... ? Even this scaled down proposed escalation in the parking tax amounts annually to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In this vein, administrative consideration has also been given to setting up a private building authority to evade the embarrassment of taxing employees directly for the use of state property while autonomously serving to short-circuit the need to turn monies over to the state treasury.

All of us living, learning or working in this University environment, students, faculty, and staff alike represent a relatively untapped source of funds which, if this parking tax is allowed to expand, could be dipped into more frequently and without apparent end. Why then, not tax the office space we occupy, the desks we work at, the lights and heat we consume in pursuit of our occupations? We are not located in a crowded urban campus vying for parking spaces which cannot otherwise be obtained, rather we are located on some 1100 acres of as yet largely undeveloped land capable of further capital outlay development by the Commonwealth. Pending such development, short range restrictions could be imposed on forthcoming freshman class parking in '73-'74 and on freshman and sophomore parking in '74-'75 to greatly ease the excess of parkers competing for limited parking spaces. This temporary arrangement would prevail for as long as it was necessary to make incremental improvements or expansions of the parking facilities or until a more effective lobbyist could be found to champion the University's cause before this general court or a more receptive general court in the future.

Even more irksome and exasperating was the apparent intent of the University Administration to compel the hapless student and employee commuter drivers to subsidize through their parking taxes a bus system they either cannot, need not, nor may not use, that is, the ludicrously termed "free" bus system. A recent required reading in basic economics 126 sums it up very nicely; it is titled "There ain't no Such Thing as a Free Lunch". And indeed there is not! By what stretch of even an elastic administrative imagination should anyone not serviced by the buses by legitimately expected to pay for either an intra-city or on-campus service to transport others at no cost when he has to bear the cost of maintaining and operating a vehicle to get to campus where he further taxed to keep up or expand the parking facilities and then pay for someone else's free bus ride. This sort of logic not only scares the writer, but is doubly frightening when it is promulgated as a reasonable recourse by our own system's administration!

We would hope some solution short of boycotting the payment of any parking taxes in excess of $5.00 for the use of any lot could be found for this lately discovered "parking problem". Further, the cost of any bus service should patently be borne by the user; it should not be administratively manipulated as a device to discourage private vehicular traffic on campus by penalizing those who are unable to avail themselves of the door-to-door service.

If it persists in what for our campus is a precedent setting course, the University's Administration will indeed open a Pandora's box the lid of which will be very difficult to control, let alone close.

Controlled News

To The Editor:

The students of this university are now the victims of a blatant example of controlled news. The Collegian has apparently decided to deny the student body any information regarding the upcoming election of the new SGA President and Student Trustee. Such a news blackout is unworthy of a newspaper designed to serve the campus community.

The SGA President and Student Trustee has more impact on the university and on his/her fellow students than any other student on campus. The president is responsible for protecting and advancing student interests and for advocating and implementing reforms designed to make the campus respond to student needs. Anyone who is concerned about academic reform, student fees and tuition, racism, the Governor's reorganization plan, or any other issue should be deeply concerned with the SGA presidential election. While the Collegian always publishes pious editorials advocating reform on campus, it appears disinterested in the process by which such reforms can be implemented.

In general, it is the responsibility of the SGA President to serve as the chief representative of students to the administration and faculty, to serve as a university trustee, and to coordinate the various elements of student government (Student Senate, area governments, the Campus Center Board, and the judiciary.) The president makes all student appointments to university councils and boards, including the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate (which sets university academic policies), the Campus Center Board of Governors (which sets policies and the fee for the Campus Center), the Athletic Council (which determines all athletic policies), search committees for major administrative officers (this year including the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs), and many others. The president has a suspensive veto over Student Senate actions and can order a student body referendum on any issue. He/she maintains fairly extensive relations with state political units, including the Board of Higher Education, the Secretary of Education, the Governor's Office, and state legislators. He/she also serves as an ombudsman for people who are being fucked over by the university bureaucracy or by the student government bureaucracy.

Four candidates are currently seeking the presidency, each with unique qualifications and platforms. But no one except a small elite is aware of who the candidates are, and even fewer people know what they stand for. Although the Collegian knows about the election and has been informed of the candidates, it has not given any information to the student body. Students deserve to know who is seeking the job, along with their background and views. The Collegian is doing every student a grave disservice by ignoring the election.

Insensitive Satire

To The Editor:

Satire can be one of the most effective ways to make people aware of exisiting conditions, and thus implement change. When used in the manner of R. Sether in yesterday's Collegian, it serves to propagate misconceptions and hatred. These are the same that have already helped foster one holocaust in recent history.

The letter was published on the first day of Passover-a holiday which specifically celebrates the deliverance of the Jewish people out of Egypt. The holiday is ecumenical and universal in spirit, however, serving to remind us that we must always remember and help all those who remain oppressed.

The oppression in R. Sether's case appears to be self-inflicted and manifested itself in yesterday's letter—a monumental example of insensitivity and extremely poor taste. This assumes that the intent of the letter (if any rational one could be ascertained) was indeed to be only satirical and not anti-Judaic in nature. Interpreting it in this context, and using the broadest possible meaning of satire, it is apparent that R. Sether most certainly owes an apology. This is an apology which can not and should not only be addressed to the Jewish community, but must be given to all who can rally under their own cry of NEVER AGAIN!

New Lab Fee

To The Editor:

I have just been informed by my School of Education advisor that next year all students doing student teaching will be charged a $30.00 lab fee. What the rationale behind this is beyond me. Considering that everything else on campus is rising in price, except part time jobs, why is it now necessary to add new financial burdens to the student?

All students who will be affected by this new lab fee are asked to inform their advisor and Dean Allen of their feelings.

Credit For ROTC?

To The Editor:

Re: Barry Cohen's letter on credit for ROTC

Interesting, interesting...

I have known Mr. Cohen for about a year now. He is an intelligent human being. However, I believe he misses the point of not giving credit for ROTC. I agree with him wholeheartedly about the elitism, coldness, insensitivity and phony liberalism of the Student Senate. I know because I was a member of that venerable body for a year. HOWEVER...

Questions of conscience should come into the picture when one is considering feeding a tool which has destroyed so much in the past. ROTC is more than just "courses". It is a system of thought which teaches people the mechanics of war. Now, of course I'm not saying that if you stop teaching about war, it will go away with its tail between its legs. Such a mentality belongs on Sesame Street. But you've got to stop feeding the monster, and one of the few places that people can start is at a university. When Mr. Cohen says that we will "lose some $250,000 in government scholarships" if ROTC were abolished, he is not expressing the image of a wonderfully benevolent Big Daddy in Washington--rather he is expressing what the government uses as a blackmailing technique. "Listen, kids, do things our way or else. And that is where the problem lies. Unfortunately, it seems that the only way to fight hypocrisy is with hypocrisy.

One final note: If ROTC is reinstated for credit on this campus, can we have guerrilla warfare for credit as well, or will the government take away all our money. I wish you realization.

Editorial Points

Jewish Food

To The Editor:

This week marks the annual observance of Passover by Jews the world over. Due to the University's sizeable population of Jewish students, there is absolutely no reason to justify the fact that the University Food Service has not made any accommodation for those students who wish to observe this holiday. At least, matzoh and hard-boiled eggs should be added to the regular menu. I remember that last year this accommodation was provided but I did not see it today in Franklin Commons. Please act with all haste, there are but seven days remaining. It will be appreciated, thank you.

In Good Faith

To The Editor:

I noted with interest that the Committee of the Massachusetts Society of Professors that conducted the Faculty poll on Unionization, as reported in yesterday's Collegian, conducted without the consent or even knowledge of the Executive Committee of either the MSP or the AAUP. This poll, that threatens the organization with a law suit, was kept "secret" for God knows what reason, but, what ever the reason, it would seem to say that they do not trust their own Executive Committees with matters that might embroil them in a legal suit.

If the campaign committee cannot even trust its own Executive Committee, then how can we trust them to deal with the Faculty as a whole in good faith? Who knows what "secret" plans are now being hatched in this and other committees? These people expect to deal in good faith in a collective bargaining situation with the administration when they can't even tell their own Executive Committee what they're doing? I wonder how.

Out Of Context

To The Editor:

Last Friday, in Poor Richard's, and also in previous editions of the Collegian, I have been quoted as being against Faculty Unionization on this campus at this time. This statement, which is repeatedly used, was quoted out of context as I was speaking personally at the time and not in my position as Speaker of the Student Senate, as is implied. Also, the specific quote that was taken was only half of a statement in which I cited the two extremes possible, and my lack of knowledge on this matter.

The Student Senate and the Area Governments have created a Student Steering Committee which is giving careful study to the matter of Unionization on this campus, and the student's role in this process. This is the body that will speak for the whole student body in this matter and not I or any other individual.

Thank you for the chance to rectify this matter.

Opposed To H6120

To The Editor:

Have you ever been ill and needed the services of a nurse? Probably most of you have, at one time or another. If this is so, then now is the time to become involved. Governor Sargent is planning a reorganization of state government; part of which includes nursing. A portion of his House Bill 6120 (H6120) calls for the abolition of the State Board of Registration of Nursing. This means that there would be no R.N.s or L.P.N.s in Massachusetts!

If such a bill is passed, there will be no protection for the public. Patients will no longer have the assurance that the nurse who is caring for them has passed the minimum requirements of the state to provide nursing services. In another year, the nurse who is caring for you may have received her education through a correspondence course! This is because Clause (7) of Section 80B, Chapter 112, General Laws will be amended so that anyone employed in a licensed or approved health care facility may provide nursing services so long as such services are provided "under the supervision of an R.N. or L.P.N." This would be impossible unless that R.N. or L.P.N. were from another state where licensure is still required.

If you are concerned about future health care in Massachusetts, write to your state representatives and state senator immediately— Governor Sargent wants to institute this change as of July 1, 1973. Tell them you are opposed to H6120 as it affects nursing.

Thank you.

Fiftians

To The Editor:

The studentry is falling apart. We have been so fragmented that to peice us together again would take nothing less than a total war and I seriously doubt if that would do it. The studentry of today watched, while we grew up in the sixties, as the many social activist groups were systematically divided and eliminated. After destroying the power of the larger groups of activists, the system preceded to hack away at the smaller one's power. Since the smaller ones were terminated the system has been busy working on the individuals.

The system is so thorough in its actions that groups larger than one do not stand a chance and the one is precariously perched on the razor sharp edge of intelligence with crushing pressures bearing upon the one.

To blame the studentry for an attitude of apathy serves no purpose. We never stood a chance. The nineteen fifties generation is seriously attempting to bring the fifties back and if any one can do this, it is these professional fiftians: Here Lies 1970's, Long Live 1950's.

For A Library

To The Editor:

I am a '69 graduate of UMass and have just begun a two year contract with the Peace Corps in Ghana, under the Department of Game and Wildlife. I'm stationed at Mole National Park, which covers an area of 1,900 square miles and is the only one of its kind in Ghana. My job here is to start a technical library for use by game department staff and students, both Ghanaian and foreign, who wish to do research at the park. At present, there is very little information available to the people in this country on wildlife in Ghana, West Africa, or even Africa in general; therefore, the establishment of a large technical library is essential to the development of improved wildlife management techniques.

It would be of infinite value to me if those of you who have old magazines and books, (from courses you might like to forget), would send them over. What's needed are general books and magazines related to wildlife, mammalogy, ornithology, botany, forestry, fisheries, entomology, physiology, comparative anatomy, genetics, ecology, natural resource planning, techniques, range management, photogrammetry, ad infinitum. In addition, anything more specifically related to African and West African wildlife, botany, etc., etc., (magazine articles, journals, reports, masters and doctorate theses), would be most appreciated. I believe it costs about 50¢ to send an average sized book by sea freight, and even one book would be a substantial contribution to our present stock of 13 books and 3 1/2 magazines. (Be sure to write "used book—no value" on the customs ticket). Since THE universal problem . . . lack of funds . . . hasn't overlooked this undertaking either, I have to rely quite heavily on the support of students and professors at the universities to make the project work. There is a great potential for the development of sound ecological practices and management techniques in Ghana, and there are a lot of well qualified, highly motivated Ghanaians here to do it, but they lack adequate resources for continued research in these areas.

Thank you for any help you can give.

Here In Wonderland

To The Editor:

In regards to Mr. Cohen's letter of April 17th: the only fault with his charge of hypocrisy here in Wonderland is its narrowness. During four years here I have observed the discussion of "what is real and what is not" with an ever increasing sense of deja vu. It makes no difference whether it is a student government or "the big kids" in D.C.—they both would rather imagine the world to fit their morality than adapt their morality to reality. A simple life is a happy life and isn't it nice that what is "good" is clearly delineated from what is "bad"?—and that "they" are always in the correct position. Of course a little bending now and then helps the "rigid" moral code become easier to live with.

For example (and only as an example): remember defense spending? Well, last year that was a "no-no" in Massachusetts—but keep your eye on that one; take the number of students who might no longer be in college because good old dad is unemployed (also remember that defense work is a circle game, contracts link to contracts, so don't count yourself safe yet) and add the number of that mysterious "general public" who will also get screwed. Take that sum and, while keeping an eye on ensuing Novembers— always a big factor in "morality"—you just might find that defense contracts have become "good" . . . and on and on! And so I have come to believe that liberal is what is liberal for the moment, and morality is, at least in this country, an arbitrary selection from the whims of the paycheck and the politician's career. ROTC is "out" this week, month, year maybe forever—but rest assured that should enough people in the right places at the right time become shafted over this, then it too will become "good". And while I, as did Mr. Cohen, find absolutely no personal value in anything ROTC has to offer, I would not presume myself to be the judge of that for others who might be interested. Unfortunately, "we" are "outs" for the moment and anyone defending such programs and espousing such views (read: free choice—oh, but not that free, I see!) is to be duly castigated. You do not tell the emperor he has no clothes on while the parade is going on—wait for the next one and hope to be up front . . . so it goes.

Coupons

To The Editor:

Gamma Sigma Sigma, National Service Sorority, needs your help. Members of chapters nationwide have been collecting Betty Crocker Coupons during the past year in order to purchase a wheelchair. However, the necessary point total has not been reached and time is running short. You can help by tearing off the coupons which come on cake and frosting mixes, big "G" cereals, General Mills snacks, and other General Mills products. Mail them via campus mail to RSO Box 314. We'd appreciate your assistance in this project.

Qualified?

To The Editor:

For the supposed purpose of perpetuating quality teaching great inequities have evolved. An elitist group of English professors have formed a committee for the screening of English Education majors. The goal of this screening process, according to those who are running it, is to choose those English Education majors "qualified" for student teaching and to weed out students who should not teach. I feel this is a great injustice to these students and challenge anyone in the English Department to show me their criteria and their qualifications for a "good" student teacher. Their explanations thus far have been vague and unsatisfactory. When English majors of the graduating class of 1973 enrolled in the English Department with the goal of being English teachers they were not told that a group of people who does not know them and who have no legal right to do so could screen them out of the right to obtain their certification. Therefore I contend that this screening process is fradulent and should be discarded. I ask you, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Aho, who are you to decide someone's future career based on your value judgements and the judgements of a few others? I have spoken with you and received no plausible explanations for your actions. I assure you that action will be taken! !

ACTION Group Discusses Budget

Members of Citizens for Participation in Political Action (CPPAX) will hold their second chapter meeting Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Amherst Room of Jones Library on Amity Street.

The main item on the agenda for Thursday's meeting concerns sustained local reaction to President Nixon's proposed budget cuts in domestic programs, particularly social service, research, and economic assistance programs funded under the Departments of Agriculture; Housing and Urban Development; and Health, Education, and Welfare.

For the Fiscal Year beginning July 1, 1973, the President has proposed cutting back more than 200 million dollars in programs funded under the Office of Education. In addition to his proposed cuts of 50 per cent of Federal Work-Study funds, the President has recommended termination of the following programs in the field of higher education:

Should these and other related cutbacks be approved by the Congress, Amherst's three higher education institutions, along with hundreds of others in Massachusetts and the rest of the nation, stand to be adversely affected during the coming academic year.

Students 'Rough It' In London

LONDON (AP) - A group of high school students from Andover, Mass., toured the London sights in a bitter mood today.

A mixup over hotel bookings had given them a sleepless and cramped night.

The 184 youths, aged 14-19, had paid $385 each for a 10-day holiday in the British capital. But when they arrived there they found the hotel where they thought they had reservations couldn't take them.

They ended up in another hotel-one in the midst of renovations, where they complained they had to sleep seven to 10 to a room. Only two bathrooms in the hotel were working, they said.

Gabriel Villa, president of the Italian travel agency "Europe at Cost," which had booked the tour, flew to London to take charge of the muddle.

He said his company was finding the students better accommodations in various other hotels. He said there had been a mix-up over whether the original hotel-the Albion-had received its money on time.

Brinker Piano Recital Thursday

A piano concert of traditional New Orleans jazz, blues and ragtime will be performed by "Professor" Brinker at 8:15 p.m. Thursday, April 19 in the Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College Music Building. The event is open to the public. Tickets are 75¢ for students, $1.50 for all others.

Brinker will perform his arrangements of the music of "Jelly Roll" Morton, Scott Joplin, and other Black composers of the early New Orleans jazz period. Throughout the performance he will add brief historical comments.

"Professor" is the honorary title conferred on piano soloists in the early New Orleans period. An avid student of this period, Amherst College alumnus Robert J. Brinkerhoff, class of '18, chose "Professor" Brinker as his stage name in keeping with New Orleans tradition.

Room To Move Symposium Features Well-Known Guru

Room to Move is presenting a symposium entitled "The Self in Transpersonal Growth", an experience in transpersonal psychology and healing.

Among the featured speakers will be Baba Ram Dass, a well known guru.

The symposium is structured to provide a theoretical framework for understanding and integrating the transpersonal experience, its use in therapy and spiritual growth. It is intended to communicate to the audience that understanding "the self in transpersonal growth" is an essential criteria in developing a paradigm of growth that finds its roots deep within the essence of man's being.

The following areas will be examined: Yoga, meditation, altered states of consciousness, parapsychology, healing, and transpersonal psychotherapy; the development of a systematic model for understanding man's consciousness through the transpersonal allows man to become released from his narrow viewing of man as a personality—one alienated and estranged from his self.

This symposium is a vehicle for helping to educate students, faculty, paraprofessionals and community members. As a part of Room to Move's educational outreach program, this symposium will provide information as well as experiences contributing towards the expansion of individual consciousness.

Program speakers will include the following:

Eleanor Criswell—Ed.D. in Educational Psychology from University of Florida, Associate Professor of Psychology at Sonoma State College, Director of Humanistic Psychology Institute.

Stanislav Grof—Chief of Psychiatric Research, Maryland Psychiatric Research Center, Catonsville, Maryland. Asst. Professor of Psychiatry, John Hopkins University School of Medicine.

Richard Katz—Ph D. Harvard, Social Relations, Professor at Harvard in the Department of Psychology and Social Relations, author of Preludes to Growth: An Experiential Approach.

Stanley Krippner—Ph.D. Director of Dream Lab Maimonides Medical Center, Brooklyn, N.Y. Visiting Professor, Dept. of Psychology, Sonoma College, Calif.

Brendin O'Regan—M.S., Former research coordinator for Buckminster Fuller, Southern Ill Univ., Consultant at Center of Study of Social Policy at Stanford Research Institute.

By SYDNEY OMARR

"Why don't you say something nice about Pisces? What is your sign? I say you're a Cancer. My brother guesses you are a Capricorn. My father says you are an Aries, as he is." - Kim O'Connor, Lake Placid, Fla.

Answer: I have said plenty of nice things about Pisces. One of my favorite persons and friends is the brilliantly sensitive writer, Anais Nin, who is a Piscean. A great philosopher-astrologer, Manly Palmer Hall, is a Piscean. I think Pisces is nice. You are wrong about my birth sign. Your brother is wrong. And your father is wrong. I tell my zodiacal sign in one of my books, "My World of Astrology." And, yes, I do read palms and I have explained my fascination with numbers in one of my other books, "Thought Dial." Your information concerning Pisces palms is fascinating. Thanks!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may find it difficult to put your finger on exactly what you want, what you seek, what your goal is and where you are going. Know this and let this be a "preparing period." Give yourself room. You need not decide in a hurry.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lie low. Obtain hint from Aries message. Time is your ally. Refuse to be rushed. Capricorn who is impatient means well but probably is misinformed. Heed your own counsel. If you feel you want to hesitate -then hesitate!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish. Complete project. Round out various aspects of endeavors. Think about potential. See pictura as a whole. Don't be deceived by bits, pieces. Aries is in picture. Future can be bright if you so permit.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be restless. This could be an expression of need for a new creative outlet. Leo can help show you the way. Imprint your own style. Money problem is due to diminish. You will get what you want--in unorthodox way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Co-operate with Cancer person. Need your intuitive intelect. Means follow through on hunch. Accent is on building solid structure. Public relations improves. More persons take a liking to you. You could be offered special conract.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Versatility now is your valuable ally. Don't feel you are stuck with one method, one procedure. In fact, you have more freedom than you might realize, despite views of neighbors, relatives. Sagittarian is involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Steady approach can result in profit. Ideas can be put to work. Younger person lends vitality to special project. You have more on your side than may be apparent. Know it and act in confident manner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Cycle is such that you can successfully take initiative. Make new contacts. Welcome challange. Highlight personality. Ability to put across unique concept is emphasized. Study Libra message. Come out of shell.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Family mamber may be temporarily incapacitated. Be patiant. Co-operate with individual who represents club, group, hospital organization. Taurus, Libra persons could be in picture. Look behind scanes for valid information.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent is on fulfillment of desires. Avoid unnecessary extravagance. Don't try to do everything at one sitting. Strive for realistic approach. One who promises much may be "hurting" financially.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Element of timing is on your side. You know what should be done-and you are capable of doing it. Capricorn is likely to be in picture. Money situation improves if you accept overtime assignment. Do so!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Long-range view is necessary. See project as a whole--leave bits, pieces for another time. Finish what you start. Potential is being considered by very important person. Know it and act accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural humanitarian. You draw to you people with their problems. November should be one of your most significant months of 1973. You are a real competitor. When chips are down you shine.

JV Nine In Romp

By JAY LUPPOLD

The Junior Varsity baseball team crushed Leicester Junior College, 8-2 here Tuesday afternoon behind the strong combined pitching of Roger Leblanc, Jim Witheral, and Dave Desabato. The trio limited an inferior LJC team to only four hits while Johnny Seed paced the 10 hit UMass attack with a home run and a two-run double. Steve Wright also chipped in with a four bagger.

LJC drew first blood in the first inning when Jeff Todd led off with a single, stole second, and came home on Jeff Mullen's single.

Seed evened things up in the bottom half of the first with a home run and the score stayed even until the third inning when UMass erupted for four runs. Wright reached first on an error and stole second. Joe Marzilli brought him in with a single and as followed by Mark Fontaine who walked. Seed then doubled both men in, but was picked off second on a beautiful move by pitcher Mullen. Bob Moore followed with another double and was promptly knocked in with a single off the bat of Mike Couture to make it 5-1.

The Minutemen added single runs in the fourth, sixth, and seventh innings to put the game out of reach. LJC finished off the scoring in the ninth with their final marker on a triple by Jim Connor who came in on a ground out.

The win evened the JV's record at 2 wins and 2 losses. They won their opener over Holy Cross 22-1, and lost a discouraging twin bill to UConn 5-3 and 3-0.

Ruggers Take Weekend Set; Still No Losses

By WILLIAM WEBB ELLIS

The UMass rugby team defeated its opponents 71-6 last Saturday in games against Boston University and Springfield College on the fields across from Boyden.

The A team defeated BU 28-0 playing without the services of three regular players and Don Auger, who hurt his knee in the opening play of the game.

In action later that day, the UMass B side walloped Springfield College 35-0. Scrum half Malcolm Best scored a touchdown and five kicks for 15 points, just two points shy of the UMass scoring record set by Peter Herman a year and half ago.

The UMass C team battled back from a 6-0 deficit late in the second half to beat the BU B team 8-6 behind touchdowns by mini-backs George Farnham and Chris Walters.

The UMass rugby team "A's" are now 4 and 0 on the season, and all UMass rugby teams have gone undefeated so far this season. On Saturday UMass travels to Bowdoin College to play the Portland Rugby Club.

Celtics, Lakers To Advance

By STEVE DeCOSTA

With four hopefuls eliminated, the NBA championship series settles into the semi-finals, or conference championships this week. The pairings offer two sets of arch-rivals, Celtics-Knicks and Lakers-Warriors, in what should turn out to be two hard fought grudge matches.

The Golden State Warriors took the hardest road to the semi-finals, upsetting the Midwest Division champion Milwaukee Bucks in six games. The Lakers advanced by nudging the Chicago Bulls in a nip-and-tuck seven-game series that was ruled by the home-court advantage.

Golden State has the personnel to match up against any NBA team, even the Lakers. Rick Barry, a scoring machine, is their offensive leader. Other scoring punch is provided by Jeff Mullins and Cazzie Russell. Nate Thurmond and Clyde Lee control the boards so effectively that the Warriors are seldom out-rebounded.

Los Angeles, on the other hand, has problems. Jerry West and Gail Goodrich are tired and neither played up to par in the Chicago series. Wilt Chamberlain was outplayed by, of all people, Dennis Awtrey. With all this against them how did the Lakers ever get by the Bulls and how can they hope to defeat the Warriors in a seven-game series?

The answer is pure and simple; the Lakers are winners. In the deciding game with Chicago, the Lakers trailed throughout the secondhalf until, with only 28 seconds remaining to play, they went ahead and held on for a 95-92 victory. No matter how tired the Lakers are, or how poorly they are playing, they always seem to come up with whatever is necessary to win. And so they will prevail over the Warriors.

The Celtics, after struggling through a preliminary series with the Atlanta Hawks, come into the conference championships as the NBA's best regular season team. Their foes, the Knicks, finished second to the Celts in division play, but are a team that is hitting its peak for the playoffs. Just witness the Knicks easy five-game triumph over the Baltimore Bullets in the preliminary round.

The Knicks greatest strength is in their backcourt. Walt Frazier is Mr. Clutch and nobody except Jerry West plays better in tight situations. Earl Monroe is not the Pearl of days gone by but he is still one of the league's classier guards. Depth comes in the form of Dean Memminger, who penetrates as well as any pro guard. Henry Bibby and Dick Barnett, just seem to keep rolling along. There is not a better set of guards in the entire NBA.

The Celtics guards, JoJo White and Don Chaney, complement each other perfectly in accordance with the team's game plan. Behind them, however, the Celts are thin with only journeyman Art Williams and rookie Paul Westphal. Give New York the edge at guard.

The Celtics strongest point is at forward. Paul Silas has helped mold this team into what it is today and enough can never be said about the contributions of John Havlicek. Don Nelson provides all the back-up help that will probably be needed but Satch Sanders, even with bad knees, and Steve Kuberski can play well in spots.

The Knicks counter with Dave Debusschere and Bill Bradley, all-stars in any man's league, but behind them there is only Phil Jackson. The Celtics get the edge at forward.

The key to the series is at center. Dave Cowens is this year's NBA MVP and seemingly can do no wrong for the Celts. Before writing the Knicks off, however, remember that Knick pivotman Willis Reed is also a one-time MVP. Reed and his fill-in Jerry Lucas have the edge in experience. They know what the playoffs are all about.

Count on Cowens to handle both Reed and Lucas and the Celtics to win the series. It won't be easy; seven games is almost an inevitability. But the green and white has the Hub jumping again, and it should last through at least one more round.

Netmen Take Third Straight

UNDEFEATED—Captain Steve Ferber has won all his matches since coming North from spring training in Florida. With the win over Tufts yesterday, the netmen are now 3-0.

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

First it was "bye now" to Rhode Island. Next came Vermont and yesterday was Tufts, as the UMass tennis team dropped another, point that is. The netmen's 3-0 squad has won by scores of 8-1, 7-1 and 7-1 respectively against two conference opponents and a solid Tufts squad.

Quite evident from the match scores was the fact that the Minutemen had little trouble in devouring each foe. In fact the Tufts coach spoke the most appropriate words. When Coach Kosakowski of UMass complimented yesterday's visiting coach on his team's strong depth, the Tufts coach threw back a compliment. "We might be solid down low, but your team is solid as rock the whole way down." Yes, just as the netmen had suspected, their tremendous depth enabled them to capture their three opening matches with ease. But tomorrow and Friday is when the test really begins when UMass faces MIT and Amherst back to back.

Rhode Island, last year's runnerup in the Yan-Con championships were really no match down at Kingston, R.I. last Friday. In addition to their sporting of inferior quality, they were further burdened with the absence of their number one player in Gary D'Ambra.

Wins were brought in by Robert Schpeiser (2nd singles), Captain Steve Ferber (3rd singles), Donald Douglas (4th singles), (it was Douglas' varsity tennis debut, and a good one at that) Fred Braley (5th singles) and Mark Brass (6th singles).

With doubles UMass had no troubles. Ted Donahue teamed with Douglas at first, for a two-set victory. Mike Philipp joined Schpeiser for the 2nd doubles victory, while Ferber and Braley easily picked apart their opponents in two quick sets.

Under the bubble that homes the Vermont hockey team, UMass faced a catamount team made especially strong by their super fast hard-surfaced courts. Expecting a more difficult time in Burlington, Vermont on Monday, the netmen still swept past their second Yankee Conference opponent in three days. Donahue put away Vermont's Jim Rubin, then Ferber, Douglas, Braley and Philipp all emerged victorious. Donahue and Douglas made it 6-1 by winning at first doubles while the New Jersey boys, Gary (Nathan) Ney, and Mike (Jerry) Philipp ended the day with a two set win at third doubles.

Yesterday's home opener against Tufts brought a sizable crowd, something rather unusual for UMass tennis matches. And the crowd was repaid with a strong performance from the entire 10 man squad. That's right, UMass used ten players. Having clinched the match by winning five singles spots, UMass inserted Ney and Brass at second doubles, and Larry Moses and Bob Sirios at third. The latter won, while the former split sets and were unable to finish due to darkness.

None of the netmen are really fooled by their 3-0 record. They realize they haven't played any team of high New England caliber yet. But even so, losing three points in three matches is impressive and maybe tomorrow they'll be able to better judge their chances for that undefeated season.

Trackmen Fourth In BC Relays

By EARLE BARROLL

Harvard had 36 1/2 points, Northeastern 36, Dartmouth 29 1/2 and UMass 25. "I just don't think we could have run any better," said a satisfied UMass track coach Ken O'Brien. And no matter what the others might say, they couldn't have either.

This was the Boston College Relays, the finest carnival of track in recent years in the New England region. The host team was fifth benind the Minutemen, 23 points, for ultra-UMie sentiments.

But the scoring really didn't describe what this meet was all about. Sure, points are points and Northeastern would have given a starting block to get that point on Harvard. And sure the Minutemen would have given a Hampshire special for a shot at the title.

However O'Brien explained it best when he said following the over five hours of competition, "New England should be running these relays each week at different schools during the entire month of April. This way the best are always facing the best and this has to make New England track better."

You ask what this can do to an athlete? A case in point is Curt Stegerwald, who prior to this meet was running 54 second legs on the mile relay team. With one event left -- this very one -- O'Brien was in need of a qualified athlete. One Curt Stegerwald.

"It was just a joke", said co-captain Steve Levine, who also ran one of the quarter mile legs. "Well, not exactly a joke," amplified O'Brien. "We just wanted to put the pressure on him and see what he could do." And so, given the third lap and running with nationally ranked Rich Comeau of Holy Cross on his legs, Curt blistered for 50 seconds flat. Suffice?

Actually this was the tone of the day both for and against UMass as heavy after heavy catalyzed the meet with super effort after super effort, including a distance medley race that left Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen, both UMass sophomores in search for words and a hit of breath.

"Unbelievable," huffed Thomas who 4:11'ed it over a mile on the anchor leg. "Just super," puffed Gillen who ran 3:06 on the preceeding three-quarter mile segment. And yet UMass finished third behind B.C. and Northeastern as Eagle freshman sensation Keith Francis knuckled the field under with a 1:50 half for openers. (This was the margin of victory -- five seconds -- as the Minuteman lead-off was a more than respectable 1:55).

The Minutemen did win one relay, the 440 with Tony Pendleton leading the way with a "beep-beep" on the second leg that rendered the opposition in a state of suspended animation. They also came within a haymaker to Steve Levine (a la the vicious Penn Relays) on the final exchange of the 880 yard relay of getting a second that would have changed the complexion of the entire meet. As it turned out UMass was hammered (a la J. most) to fourth.

Stickers Hit Harvard

By JR ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas travel to Cambridge, Mass. today where they will battle the Crimson of Harvard in a game starting at 3 o'clock. For some reason every year's UMass-Harvard lacrosse game is a big one and usually several hundred UMass alumni turn out to watch the action.

This year, as in the past three years, the Crimson have an excellent team on paper, but they haven't been able to put it together as a team. UMass coach Dick Garber said that the Harvard team "is individually good. They have a good player at every position but they lack team cohesiveness."

This season Harvard has many lettermen returning from last year as well as some new prospects. They have a fine attackman in John Hagerty (he is also the team captain) who, said Coach Garber, "is big, strong, and fast. He scored four goals against us last year (in a game won by UMass, 14-9)." Their attack is rounded out with Jim Quinn and Steve Milliken. All three attackmen can score and Hagerty is the team's top scorer. At midfield the Ivy Leaguers have a super sophomore named Bob Frisbie. He has replaced at least one of their graduated middies. Although he is just starting his second year, Frisbie is already reputed to be better than his older brother who was an All-American. The Crimson defense is backboned by Steve Kittredge who is, in the eyes of many (including Garber) one of the best defensemen in the nation.

The Harvard squad has a record of 0-6 so far this season but that does not make Coach Garber overconfident. "Harvard's six games," remarked the coach "have all been against rated teams." Their record doesn't indicate their full potential.

As for his own squad's chances, Coach Garber feels that "If we can control the ball we can score but we can't let their shooters get the ball because they can score." If the Gorillas can continue playing as they did in the second half of Saturday's game against Fairleigh Dickinson, Harvard should be no problem. There is one point that the Gorillas must improve upon in order to be successful. They have a problem of not playing a full sixty minutes of tough competition. Coach Garber noted that his team has played its best lacrosse in the final half of each game. He commented, "I think we were a little tense in the first halves of those games and we must relax but run hard and pass and shoot well for 60 minutes."

UMass Routs AIC In Baseball Circus

By STEVE CROWE

The circus came to town alot earlier than expected this year as the UMass baseball team dazzled the hometown fans with a 23-3 stomping of the American International College squad for their fifth win in a row.

Ringmaster Mike Flanagan tamed the visitors for the entire nine innings, striking out 13 and yielding only six hits. Flanagan looked very sharp as his fast ball breezed right by the hitters in the early innings and when the hitters started to wake up, his fancy stuff took over in the later frames.

But the real story of the game was the Minuteman hitting barrage. The hitters slapped out 23 hits, 11 of which were for extra bases, including four homeruns.

The show was delayed for an inning as AIC pitcher Fred Miller put three UMass hitters down in a row after Pete Backstrom had led off the first with a single.

But the fireworks began in the second inning as Flanagan led off with a double down the first base line and Pete Collins lashed a triple into the gap between center and right field. Mark Palau lined a shot off the centerfielder's glove for a two-base error and Collins scooted across the plate for the second UMass run. After two ground outs and a base on balls, Dan Kelly stroked a double up the power alley in left, scoring Palau, but was out trying for third.

Flanagan cracked his whip as he struck out the side in the top of the third. At this point he had struck out six of the nine batters he had faced.

The Minutemen went to town in the third as Eddie McMahon opened the inning with a homerun over the scoreboard in left. Steve Newell followed with a bloop double down the third base line and Flanagan singled him in. Finally, Rick Hanson lifted an opposite field high fly ball which the wind swept over the scoreboard for another homerun.

If the Minutemen "went to town" in the third, they must have bought Wall Street in the fifth. Thirteen men went to the plate in that frame, knocking out eight hits and bringing in eight runs in the kind of inning that makes the frustrated scorekeeper have to change the numbers at the top of their "inning columns." Mark Palau started it all off with a double down the third base line. But after a ground out, a walk, and a strike out, it appeared that Palau's effort would be all for nothing. Then it happened. With two outs, the Minutemen pounded out five straight singles to drive out pitcher Miller and welcome reliever Andy Brisco. Mark Palau, who had started it all off, decided he had had enough of this small stuff and cracked a three-run shot well over the 375' mark in left-center. This made the score 19-2.

UMass was held scoreless for two innings before the fireworks started up again in the bottom of the eighth when the Minutemen added four more. Flanagan's double and McMahon's two-run triple supplied the power in that inning.

Flanagan gave up only two walks in the whole game, but they both came back to haunt him. In the fourth, he walked lead-off hitter Glen Galli. Dave Creighton stroked a double to right, A.I.C.'s only extra base hit of the day, to send Galli to third. Steve Bannish singled both runners in, but was picked off first base moments later. Flanagan then easily retired the next two hitters.

The other A.I.C. run came in the ninth when Creighton led off with a walk, moved to third on a single and scored on a fielder's choice.

UMass is now 11-4-1 this year, 6-0-1 since returning from the California trip over spring vacation. Today, the Minutemen travel to Springfield College to take on the Chiefs at 3:00.

AIM Leader Warns U.S. On Attacks

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Vernon Bellecourt, national director of the American Indian Movement (AIM) said yesterday that if the U.S. government's "attempt to crush the Indian stand" at Wounded Knee continues AIM will be forced to take "offensive measures."

Bellecourt, speaking at a press conference prior to his speech yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium, accused federal marshals of instigating the latest round of shooting at Wounded Knee that Tuesday wounded four people, one seriously.

The injured man Bellecourt said had arrived in from North Carolina with his wife, who is three months pregnant. The man, Frankstillwater, had the back of his head blown off, according to Bellecourt.

If hostilities continue offensive tactics will be used, Bellecourt said, including forcing federal marshals on the perimeter of Wounded Knee out of rifle range.

Bellecourt also said Indians in the village have been taking sniper fire for the past week, and accused the Justice Department of allowing "vigilantes" to fire on the village.

He also said the Justice Department "duped" the press into believing that a settlement "was at hand" at the end of negotiations three weeks ago, "when there was none," in an effort to erode outside support for the occupation. The talks agreed on at the end of the negotiations were to be a "vehicle" for disarmament, Bellecourt said, adding that AIM did not agree to disarm once the talks began.

The latest incident in which four AIM supporters were wounded was precipitated by a government helicopter that fired into the village, according to Bellecourt, starting the Tuesday exchange of gunfire, during which 20,000 rounds of ammunition were fired into Wounded Knee. He added he had been in contact with the AIM communication center in Rapid City, S. Dak. during the past day.

Speaking at a rally in support of the Indians at Wounded Knee sponsored by a number of UMass organizations, Bellecourt outlined the history of AIM and the whiteman's treatment of the Indians to 300 people.

Bellecourt, who got a standing ovation from the crowd, is a co-founder of AIM and Chippewa Indian.

In his introduction Bellecourt was said to have dropped out of school in the eighth grade and have finished his education during five years he spent in prison as a "political prisoner."

AIM, Bellecourt said, was started in 1968, by a group of Indians who came out of jail and saw that "in spite of efforts by the U.S. government" all attempts to help Indians had failed because of what he termed systematic destruction of the Indian civilization by Christianity, white education and the federal bureaucracy.

Christianity and white education forced themselves on the Indian Bellecourt said, creating an identity crisis of which he gave two examples. Alcoholism, which affects directly or indirectly 85% of all American Indians, is according to Bellecourt, a result of "religious genocide"; and white racist education that ridicules Indian custom and tradition, causing a 60% drop-out rate among Indian youths. Bellecourt suggested that whites were the "savages" when they came with a "bible in one hand and a rifle in the other."

Bellecourt also referred to an identity crisis in whites which causes them to believe they have Indian blood. Calling it a "phenomenon" Bellecourt said he could understand why it might be hard for white youths to identify with a history of "war and rip-offs." However, he asked the audience why the Indian ancestor is always female, usually of royal lineage and always of the Cherokee tribe, and never male, just a plain tribesman or from one of the less assimilated tribes.

He suggested it was a result of white stereotypes and what is considered correct behavior in white culture.

Bellecourt also announced a national movement to bring supplies by caravan into Wounded Knee, in an effort to break the current roadblock around the village. He said the caravans would arrive in Wounded Knee Saturday and Sunday.

Other speakers were: Al Hallowell, chairman of the Boston Indian Council, a group that assists Indians moving from reservations into urban areas, Franklin Alexander, of the National Committee to Free Angela Davis, and AIM lawyer David Rockwell.

Report Urges Changes In C.C.

By SHARON HUGHES

The Arthur D. Little Report on Campus Center Operations scheduled to be released yesterday "will not be fully edited for about 10 days" according to A.D.L. Project Director Raymound Gilmartin. "A 15 page summary outlining the major findings was released by A.D.L. Inc.

In December, the Campus Center Board of Governor's employed the management consultant firm to conduct "an in-depth study of revenue producing areas" said Thomas Campion, Vice Chancellor of Administrative Services. A.D.L. also investigated the feasibility of new revenue-producing operations and projected the financial future of the Campus Center.

The major findings and conclusions of the summary were:

—a more comprehensive financial reporting system must be instituted in order for management to effectively control their revenue producing operations (particularly in the Food Service and University Store departments).

—CC should rely more on part-time employees in lieu of permanent full time employees given the wide fluctuation in demand due to the academic calendar.

—student discounts at the Top of the Campus should be re-examined because students using the discount generally have higher disposable incomes than the average student.

—the Campus Center Store has the potential to develop as more than a university bookstore if appropriate operating and retailing policies are applied.

—Food Services availability should be more closely matched with the demand for them.

—CC should take a more active role in increasing the use of its conference facilities.

Gilmartin admitted that some of the proposals have already been implemented. He said the team's short range goal was to implement change in next year's budget.

The summary concludes "the successful implementation of the changes in policy and operating practice will require strong commitment and leadership from the Campus Center Management." It is "optimistic about the future of the CC."

Jim Lindsey, chairperson of the CC Board of Governor's, called the study "another way to make the Center a viable enterprise."

CC Manager Warren Grinnan said, "I think the study provides reasonable options from a fiscal viewpoint."

The summary recommends the implementation of a shopping mall encompassing both the Student Union and the CC. as the most promising approach for producing new revenue.

A.D.L. predicts and Grinnan agrees that the CC fee can be stabilized and possibly lowered to $18 per student in fiscal year '76 if the CC remains on temporary financing. The CC is scheduled to change to permanent financing in fiscal '75 which requires the payment of both principal and interest on the debt thereby substantially increasing the debt service and repayment charge. Temporary financing requires that only the interest on the debt be paid. Campion said legislation to keep temporary financing is being explored.

On with the show.

An Evening At The Circus

By DENNY MATTEAU

Somehow, circuses have always disappointed me. I went expecting glitter and thrills, and got elephant stink.

Yesterday afternoon I had the opportunity to see the Emmett Kelley, Jr. Circus, and was not disappointed. I entered Curry Hicks Cage a little late, the show was in progress, and the people oblivious to the fact that I tripped over at least three of them on my way to a good seat.

There was a raised circular platform in the ring, it was about eight feet in diameter, and on it, two people were roller skating. They called themselves the Blue Streaks. One was an older man, and simply orbited himself in rapid circles while a young woman suspended herself horizontally from his neck by her ankles. There appeared to be a peculiar sort of blase tension in the performers, which was relieved by the delightful interruptions of the clowns.

Lou Thomas, a female clown, performed on the trampoline. Eight-year-old Diana Lou Thomas was impressive. She is the youngest professional acrobat in history to have accomplished a full wicker throw somersault.

At the animal performers, Tony the Wonderhorse was beautiful, the most golden horse I've ever seen. Judy and Tom, the Dalmatian twins, delighted the children—but Charlie Boo was late, the really is quite, he wasn't no muzzle at all, even when Patrick Dalmatian Jr. scrambled with him.

Patrick Dalmatian Jr. collaborated at all the animal acts, and was as gentle as Boo. He carried a whip, which Tony the Wonderhorse got hold of and whipped him with.

After the show, I looked for somebody in management, and found the producer, Mr. Fisher. He declined to be interviewed however, because he will soon leave this circus in order to produce a production of the opera Samson. I was directed to a co-producer, Mr. Hugh Hughes, a University of Rhode Island graduate student turned management turned circus man.

Hughes said that he finds the circus exciting, he enjoys travel, and enjoys circus people for their lack of ethnic barriers. I asked him what he thought of the future of the circus, and he answered that it is very good. "Much of Emmett Kelley Jr.'s success is attributable, he said, to the combination of high-quality performance and mobility—so the fairly near future the circus will be traveling in trucks and touch tomorrow."

Trying To Make Thumbing Safe

By ED FOGARTY

James Shane of Thumbtrippers International is trying hard to make hitchhiking safer.

Shane has been sitting in the Campus Center Concourse for the past two weeks between two giant orange glow thumbs promoting Thumbtrippers International.

A primary function of Thumbtrippers will be its insurance of safety to hitchhikers and drivers alike. All members will carry an I.D. card which will have their pictures on it for easy identification.

One of the problems Thumbtrippers is having is how to properly screen applicants for membership. The brochure emphasizes that all members will be thoroughly screened.

"We are trying to get the Registry of Motor Vehicles to screen our applicants for us, and we are hopeful they will. We are also asking school administrations to help us by screening student applicants," said Shane.

Shane expects most of the membership will be between the ages of 16 and 25. The aid of school administrations is imperative to the organization, said Shane.

The criterion for acceptance into Thumbtrippers is no previous record of violent crime. Shane said that misdemeanors and felonies such as dope arrests would be allowable.

To join Thumbtrippers an applicant must fill out a form giving personal data, employment status and emergency information. This information is then processed at the office in Boston and the membership is decided on.

In addition to the I.D. card the member receives an orange glow "thumb" sign which he can use to write his destination on.

Thumbtrippers is placing offices in Boston and Amherst, and hopes to cover the entire New England area. In the past two weeks Shane has given away over 2000 applications at UMass.

Thumbtrippers hopes eventually to become a lobby force in the state legislatures aiding the hitchhiker.

"As a lobby force we would support the construction of hitchhiking stations and reduced tolls for drivers carrying more than one passenger," said Shane.

Hitchhiking stations would be similar to rest stations along highways where hitchhikers could wait for rides.

At the present time Thumbtrippers is working on a contract with Shell Oil Company for the hitcher to carry coupons which could be turned in for gasoline. The hiker would hand the driver some of these coupons in "payment" for the ride.

The coupon system is being successfully used in Poland, according to Shane.

"What we feel is most important about this concept is that it is an autonomous organization. "Thumbtrippers is a private effort and the information received from members will be kept strictly confidential," said Shane.

Membership in Thumbtrippers costs $10.00 for hitchhikers and $3.00 for drivers. For this a member receives medical insurance, a bus ticket for 'emergencies' from Greyhound Bus Lines, and an I.D. tag.

So far Thumbtrippers has received only six applications.

Student Attorney Richard Howland and the Amherst Board of Selectmen have expressed an interest, according to Shane.

Family Character And Roles Discussed

By MARY MULLOY

The basic character of the family and its role in the oppression of women and children was discussed by a prominent socialist feminist last night in the Berkshire Room.

Jeanne Lafferty, a founding member of Cell-16 and Female Liberation, two organizations in Boston, and the 1972 Socialist Workers' Party candidate for Congress against Louise Day Hicks was presented in conjunction with a series of three forums on feminism and socialism sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance.

"Women have been oppressed for centuries because of our role in the family;" she said, "it is time that we question the role of the family as feminists."

For as long the family has been accepted as natural, "almost like biology" and as one has questioned it as provided other choices, she said, but now as a massive level and in every media alternative proposals are being considered. She cited the Women's Liberation Movement as the principal driving force behind this new consciousness.

"Our primary job finds women and men in a race our younger generation to see that they are happy and develop as full human beings," she continued.

In order to do this, Ms. Lafferty believes that we desperately need to switch our priorities. She raised the question, "Why can we spend billions of dollars in Vietnam, dump wheat in the ocean, and yet we choose not flag on the moon, but we spend nearly as much needed social services at home?"

"It's really not normal the way we live, when we take two adults and children and put them in an apartment house and expect them to love each other for 24 hours," she said.

Conditioned with the ideas that "parents are the only ones who can appropriately raise children," and that "24 hour child-care centers are a dirty word," she said that we fail to realize that in between the two extremes many realistic solutions can be provided.

As a Paulist you become involved from the start.

We were founded with the belief that each man has a place. Each man has a role. Sometimes many parts. And each man utilizes his own unique talents and is given the freedom and the support to work to achieve his goals.

The Paulist is a man for the times. He ministers to people, particularly the people of North America. The issues and problems we face today—alienation, poverty, peace, war—must be the concerns of the Church.

Wherever the Paulist student serves the Christian Community—in a parish or an inner city school, a youth center or a campus, or in community activism, he is concerned. Involved. Right now.

Need For 'Student Union' Voiced

By STEVE FINE

Anthropology Professor John Cole said last night that it was his personal opinion that there was no reason why students should not take part in collective bargaining negotiations between faculty and administration.

Cole, speaking before the Senate about faculty unionization said that he would be willing to present this notion to the Executive Board of the MSP (Massachusetts Society of Professors) group.

In other business the Senate voted to condemn Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, and Thomas Campion, Vice- Chancellor for Administrative Services for not negotiating in good faith on the transfer of Student Activities Office funds. They also voted to order the Campus Center Governing Board to reconsider payment of their officers, and heard the election platforms of Nick Apostola, Roy Perdue, Henry Ragin, and Elliot Sherman, candidates for Student Government President.

Cole, who is a representative of the MSP, and also a member of the Faculty Senate, said a faculty union wouldn't effect the campus since problems aren't internal but rather external. "The union will be concerned with cuts in education, and the assault on the University's independence, particularly in the case of the Governor's Reorganization Plan," he said.

Senator John Stevens said during a question and answer period that Cole, and David Biddle, another speaker, must be naive to think that Senate is going to believe a faculty union was going to represent the interests of the students.

Biddle said however that he envisaged the formation of a faculty Union and that the Senate should figure out a way to influence it. He had suggested earlier the formation of a union, in accordance with a suggestion that one of the candidates of S.G.A. office had stated in his campaign speech.

Elections to choose the bargaining agent for UMass faculty could come as early as this spring. Fifty percent plus one of voting in the election are needed to elect a bargaining agent.

The motion to condemn Gage and Campion came after S.G.A. President Larry Ladd read a letter explaining the events surrounding Chancellor Bromery's veto on the transfer of funds for the Student Activities Office from the Campus Center to the Student Government Association. The Student Activities office is set up to assist RSO (Registered Student Organizational) groups in planning events such as movies, and special programs.

The letter which was addressed to Chancellor Bromery said, "Your decision without consultation of students is based on misconceptions and misinformation, and is a violation of verbal understanding between students and Vice-Chancellors."

Ladd went on to say all had agreed that the transfer would be approved pending a more concrete definition for the Campus Center Director.

He concluded the letter by saying, "We kept our part of the agreement at every step, but we received . . . during the discussion process, surprise memos . . . contradicting agreements we had reached. If we cannot discuss issues in good faith, university governance is in for hard times."

The motion for the Campus Center Governing Board to reconsider their action of April 10, to pay its Chairperson $150 a month, the secretary and treasurer $50 a month, and committee chairpersons $25 a month came after debate was heard on the procedure the Senate's action would set.

President Ladd argued against the motion. He said it was not feasible for members of the Board to work in the Campus Center. "If we can't tell people what to do, we don't have your time and you don't know what to do," he said.

The candidates for Student Government Association spoke before the Senate and basically reiterated the platforms they stated before the commuter assembly 1 days ago.

While Henry Ragin of the Southwest dormitory saw the need for restructuring the bureaucracy of student government, Nick Apostola, Chairperson of the Senator's Academic Affairs Committee, saw the need for reform in the areas of student and academic affairs.

Roy Perdue, on the other hand stated the need for student participation being an educational experience, and Chairperson of the Student Senator's Finance Committee Elliot Sherman described the need for the S.G.A. President to be responsive to both internal and external needs of students.

for a bail reduction hearing. The forms to be filled out are at the Court and at the Hampshire County jail-ask for them. Make sure your lawyer knows you are going to have a hearing.

BENCH CONFERENCES

The lawyers and police sometimes go up to the Judge's seat so that the Judge may talk with them freely about the case. IT IS DOUBTFUL IT IS PLAIN: SOMEBODY FOR IT IS SERIOUS CONFERENCE, but, if there are circumstances which make the official record less serious, the Chief prosecutor and the defendant's lawyer may make informal recommendations or suggestions for dropping of the charges, principle on a plea of guilty or nolo, or a continuance without a finding.

FINES

If you cannot pay all at a time, tell the Clerk what you can pay now and arrange to pay the rest as soon as possible, usually on a week or two. You won't go to jail because you have no money to pay the fine, but you will be required to pay it in the near future.

YOUR RIGHT TO APPEAL

In all criminal cases you have the right to a trial by jury in Superior Court if you are not satisfied with the District Court decision. The Clerk will inform you of this right, and YOU MUST FILE YOUR APPEAL IMMEDIATELY. If you have pleaded guilty, you cannot appeal for a new trial unless the Court allows you to change your plea. You can appeal for a lighter sentence in Superior Court, but you may run the risk of an increase in the sentence as well.

Remember

If there is something you don't understand or cannot hear, ask the Judge to have it explained.

More Indictments May Hit Watergate

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A one-time top-level Nixon aide now says that former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and White House counsel John W. Dean III approved and helped plan the Watergate bugging incident, the Washington Post said Wednesday night.

The allegation was made by Jeb Stuart Magruder to federal prosecutors last Saturday, the Post said.

The story was attributed to sources in the White House and the Committee for the Re-election of the President. Magruder was a White House deputy to Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman and later was deputy chairman of the President's re-election committee.

Asked about the Post story, Gerald L. Warren, deputy press secretary, said: "The White House is not prepared to react to a story based on sources. At a time when the rights of individuals would not be jeopardized by a comment, an appropriate comment will be made."

The Post story quoted one source as saying that Mitchell and Dean had arranged to buy the silence of the seven convicted Watergate conspirators.

Magruder, according to the paper, will testify Thursday before the grand jury investigating the case.

Magruder, Dean and Mitchell could not be reached for comment.

The Post story said that Haldeman also may resign as a result of the Watergate disclosures, but, the paper pointed out, there is no known evidence linking him to any criminal involvement.

Magruder now is director of policy planning for the Commerce Department. The Post quoted one source as saying he "chose to talk because he felt the walls were coming in on him."

Magruder, according to the Post, will not be granted immunity from prosecution, but hopes to receive some sort of favorable treatment.

The story was published as the grand jury continued its probe amid unconfirmed reports that more indictments would be handed down soon, possibly for perjury and financial irregularities.

Gordon S. Strachan, a former aide to the White House chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, was seen for the second straight day in the office of federal prosecutor Earl Silbert. Strachan wouldn't discuss the purpose of his visit. Some accounts have accused him of helping set up a political espionage ring for the Nixon campaign.

The grand jury also subpoenaed Frederick C. LaRue, who held a high place in President Nixon's re-election campaign. News reports have quoted investigative sources as saying he helped direct a coverup of the break-in and wiretapping at Democratic national headquarters last year and handled $70,000 in unreported campaign money, the purpose of which is unknown.

Reports of impending indictments came from various quarters. A source close to the Senate's special Watergate investigating committee quoted sources within the Justice Department as saying about eight persons probably would be indicted soon.

The Senate source said he had heard the indictments would include charges of perjury, both at the Watergate trial and before the grand jury, and of illegal handling of Nixon's campaign funds.

Those reportedly facing indictment include present and former members of the White House staff and the Nixon campaign, the source said. The second-hand report could not be confirmed.

The Washington Star-News quoted a Justice Department official as predicting "major new indictments." Justice Department spokesman John C. Hushen said he knew of no indictments being written, but added, "I'm sure that anybody could predict that something is up by what the President said last night."

Nixon, saying he considered no administration official exempt from prosecution, added that he would suspend anyone indicted and fire anyone convicted. The President also dropped his long-standing claim that all members of the White House staff and the administration had been cleared of involvement in the matter.

The Justice Department and the White House declined to discuss the Watergate case further.

Pentagon Papers

Ellsberg Reveals 'War Crimes'

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Daniel Ellsberg told jurors Wednesday that the Pentagon papers reveal possible American "war crimes" in Vietnam, "some of which, I regret to say, I participated in myself."

Ellsberg said that high U.S. officials planned to break the Geneva peace accords of 1954 and probably committed "a crime against the peace . . . under the Nuernberg principles, as I understand them."

Asst. U.S. Atty. David Nissen raised the "war crimes" question after U.S. District Judge Matt Byrne barred asking Ellsberg whether he believed he had broken the law when he copied the Pentagon study.

Nuernberg was the site of the trial of Nazi war criminals after World War II.

Ellsberg said there are about 1,000 pages of "evidence" of crimes in the top-secret Pentagon study of the Vietnam war. He has admitted copying the documents in hope they would alert Congress to the need to end the war.

Nissen referred to "war crimes" after being barred by U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne from asking whether Ellsberg believed he was breaking the law when he copied the Pentagon study.

The prosecuter apparently was seeking to show that Ellsberg did not support the policies of his own country and acted against the country's best interests when he copied the papers.

Ellsberg and Anthony J. Russo are charged with espionage, conspiracy and theft in connection with the copying, and distribution of the documents known as the Pentagon Papers.

Ellsberg, 42, once an adviser to government officials, stressed that the men making war decisions probably were "patriots" who meant only the best for their country but ended by doing the worst.

"I knew all the time," he said, "that the people I worked for and with were patriotic men, sometimes the best of this country."

"In the 1964-65 period," Ellsberg said, speaking directly to jurors, "the planning documents are evidence of direct operations against North Vietnam, a country not at war with us." He called this illegal intervention.

Nixon Pushes Oil Imports, More Domestic Production

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon took steps yesterday to stimulate increased imports of oil as well as greater domestic production, in the face of a potential energy crisis.

The President's energy message to Congress was greeted with "disappointment" by the Consumer Federation of America, and with pleasure by the American Petroleum Institute, whose main complaint was that it did not adopt all the energy industry's proposals.

Treasury Secretary George Shultz, the President's principal energy advisor, told newsmen at a White House briefing that energy costs will have to rise, but that Nixon's proposals and actions would tend to restrain those price increases.

"From the standpoint of the consumer," Shultz said, "if all of these proposals are adopted, he and she will have more energy at lower prices than they would if the proposals were not adopted."

Nixon, using presidential authority, removed present limits on oil imports and eliminated present tariffs on oil imports, effective next May 1, replacing them with a system of import fees to be phased in over the next seven years.

Oil imports, now allocated under a quota system—which began in 1959, will continue to be allowed at the levels set for 1973, free of any fee payment.

But the level of no-fee imports will be gradually reduced until all oil imports are subject to fees by April 30, 1980.

Imports above the no-fee levels will require fee payments depending on the type of import, with a higher fee on refined products than on crude oil.

To stimulate lagging construction refineries in the United States, a major cause of the recent shortages of fuel oil, diesel oil and gasoline, now refinery capacity will be entitled to an allowance of no-fee imports for the first five years after construction.

The import measures were not expected to stimulate great increases in direct imports of gasoline.

But William Johnson, an official of the administration's Energy Policy Committee, told newsmen "the anticipated imports will help supplies of Number Two fuel oil substantially, and allow U.S. refiners to concentrate more on gasoline."

Gas Pinch Being Felt

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three service stations in upstate New York are open for repair work, but they won't sell you any gasoline. In Florida, a chain of 11 stations limits sales to 10 gallons per customer.

Independent service station operators are feeling the pinch of the nationwide gasoline shortage. Unable to get enough to meet motorists' demands, some are rationing gas, some are closing.

For the motorist, the shortage means higher gasoline prices. The Oil Daily's weekly survey of 100 cities last week showed the average price for major brand regular gasoline was 26 cents a gallon before taxes. The year before it was 22 1/2 cents.

The shortage has been attributed to a number of factors, including a shortage of refineries and the general energy crisis— refineries that were forced to concentrate on winter heating fuels instead of gasoline.

The independent station operators—and bulk purchasers such as cities and trucking firms—are hardest hit because they are frequently unable to find bidders for bulk purchase contracts.

The Georgia Independent Oilmen's Association estimated Wednesday that more than 100 of the state's 1,800 independent stations will close this weekend for a lack of fuel.

Detroit officials say the city may have to pay as much as $1 million more because they can't make adequate bulk purchases. In Texas, two trucking firms have filed separate suits, against Texaco and against Shell, over bulk purchase contracts.

Hanoi Insists Lon Nol Step Down

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - Despite planned reforms in the Cambodian government, North Vietnam made clear in a Radio Hanoi broadcast Wednesday that there can be no progress to peace until President Lon Nol steps down.

Official Washington sources remained optimistic that the reorganization might encourage cease-fire talks, but observers in Phnom Penh tended to support the Hanoi position.

Commenting on Lon Nol's announced plans to form a new government that would include members of opposition parties, Radio Hanoi said the reorganization "is aimed at settling internal conflicts of the Lon Nol puppet government which is deteriorating while confronted with greater and greater military and political defeats."

"Under American pressure," Radio Hanoi continued, "Lon Nol has been forced to introduce a number of so-called opposition elements into his Cabinet so that it may have a 'broader political base.'

"However reformed it may be, the Lon Nol puppet government still remains an instrument of the U.S. imperialists. . . .

The Radio Hanoi statements indicated that Cambodian insurgents would continue a military drive in hopes of forcing Lon Nol out.

The Cambodian situation appeared to be a playback of Vietnam. The Communists had accused the United States of continuing to "Vietnamize" the war. For nearly five years the peace talks remained stalled because they refused to deal with the Saigon regime of President Nguyen Van Thieu.

Like the Thieu government, the Lon Nol regime has been criticized for being distant from the people, corrupt and oppressive.

U.S. sources said that the United States pressured Lon Nol into agreeing to form a new government to include opposition elements. President Nixon was reported to have sent word that this was his wish with special emissary, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr. Haig visited Phnom Penh last week and conferred with Lon Nol.

Lon Nol said in a radio address Tuesday night that he will choose a new prime minister and would appoint 11 permanent political figures from his party and two opposition parties to a new council of political advisers.

Informed sources said Wednesday that Lon Nol postponed formation of a new government because he was having trouble finding qualified members of two opposition parties, Republicans and Democrats, who are willing to accept posts.

On the battlefields, Cambodian troops drove back an attack on a garrison at Tram Khnar, 37 miles south of Phnom Penh, the military command reported.

Several other scattered attacks were reported in the southern secter of Cambodia.

In South Vietnam, the Saigon command reported 120 more violations of the cease-fire, but most appeared to be shelling attacks and small-scale skirmishes.

If The Ocean Had Treetops. . . ?

By CHARLES LAYTON
Associated Press Writer

JONESVILLE, La. (AP) - If the ocean had treetops sticking out of it, it would look like Catahoula Parish, La.

National Guardsmen who have worked four weeks, hauling families and furniture from the flooded homes, can show you soybean fields under 15 and 20 feet of water.

And the rain keeps falling, and the water keeps rising, washing out the sandbags and improvised dirt levees that desperate people pile in their yards.

"It's pitiful to see people who've worked hard for a nice new $30,000 home lose it all to the water like this," said Sgt. Fred Parish, splashing his Jeep through the community of Trinity, a slowly sinking Jonesville suburb.

And, as Parish points out, these people are without flood insurance.

Somewhere between two-thirds and three-fourths of this agricultural parish county located beside the Mississippi River opposite Natchez is under water.

Where cattle grazed a month ago, outboards cruise among the trees and fishermen drop hoop nets and trot line. Fishing is good for those who have the time.

State wildlife and fisheries officials are hauling out stranded deer by boat. They shoot them with tranquilizing darts and free them later on higher ground.

Jonesville itself, a town of 3,000, is relatively safe, surrounded by a ring levee. But it has begun to look like an island.

Highways 28 and 84 southwest of town are like causeways. You can launch a boat anywhere you please along either side of the road. Many people do.

Troopers lift refrigerators, home freezers and bedroom suites onto construction barges, float them from the inundated houses to the road, then load them onto trucks.

They store what they can where the can, and wait for the water to go down.

Nobody knows when that will be. The forecast has been for more rain, and officials predict 8 to 12 inches of new water here within 24 hours, and possibly more later.

The Ouachita, Little and Tensnas rivers converge here to form the Black River, which in turn feeds into the Red. The Red then converges with the Atchafalaya and the Mississippi.

The more it rains, the fatter these tributaries grow, and the less the Red River is able to accept their flow.

The result: water backing over the land.

FDA Questions Antibiotics In Animal Feed

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Raising questions about potential health hazards to humans, the Food and Drug Administration Wednesday gave pharmaceutical companies two years to prove that the use of antibacterial drugs in animal feeds does not make humans who eat meat more vulnerable to disease.

Any antibiotic or sulfonamide drug failing to demonstrate safety as a low-level feed additive will be banned after the deadline except for short-term prescription use, the FDA said.

In addition, manufacturers of tetracyclines, streptomycin, dihydrostreptomycin, sulfonamides and penicillins will be required to prove within one year that they do not promote an increase of salmonella bacteria, a major cause of food poisoning.

The FDA also proposed to extend the regulatory requirements to include nitrofuran drugs.

Dr. John Jennings, FDA associate commissioner for medical affairs, said the agency is concerned that the use of antibiotics in feed to reduce animal disease may be making humans more vulnerable.

Specifically, he said, the FDA wonders whether medicated feed may increase the salmonella reservoir in animals, make salmonella germs resistant to human drugs, result in bacteria transferring their drug resistance to other strains of bacteria, or have adverse effects on humans ingesting drug residues in meat.

"Resistance transfer is an extremely frightening possibility," he said, but so far it is a "theoretical and potential hazard."

"Our most immediate concern is that antibiotics in some way may be increasing the total amount of salmonella organisms in feedlots and the environment generally," he said.

At least two million cases of salmonellosis are reported in the United States annually. The disease can be fatal to the very young and the very old.

Shippers Responsible For Oil Spill Bills

By VERNON A. GUIDRY Jr.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A unanimous Supreme Court told the states Wednesday they are free to hold shippers financially responsible for harm done by oil spills.

The high court approved a tough Florida law-tougher than applicable federal law-that covers facilities for storing, transferring or drilling for oil, as well as spills from tankers in the state's territorial waters.

Justice William O. Douglas, writing for the court, called oil slicks "an insidious form of pollution of vast concern to every coastal city or port. . ."

Douglas said the federal Water Quality Improvement Act of 1970 passed shortly before the Florida statute does not limit the authority of states.

Shippers have threatened to divert their vessels from Florida waters because of the state's law.

A spokesman for the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington predicted other states which have active environmental programs will now fail in step with Florida, to take advantage of the court decision.

Other court decisions: - In a 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court said federal habeas corpus-the procedure used by prison inmates to challenge the validity of their imprisonment-is available to those convicted of crimes who are still free on their own recognizance as well as those who are already in custody.

The restraints on liberty involved in the conditions placed on an individual's release on his recognizance are sufficient to bring the federal habeas corpus statute into play, the court said.

By a vote of 8 to 1, the court said employes of state schools and hospitals may not sue in federal court to gain benefits of federal wage and hour laws.

The federal law, the court said, empowers the secretary of labor not individual employes to sue states not complying with federal law.

Pike Pinched On Fuel

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority became the latest New England government agency to feel the pinch of the nationwide fuel shortage when it received only one bid-after its Tuesday deadline-on its 800,000-gallon gasoline contract.

The bid from Atlantic Richfield will be considered at a meeting Thursday.

Boston still has not received bids on its fuel contract for next year.

An April 1 deadline on a contract for 2.8 million gallons passed without bidders. A new Boston attempt to attract bids on a 2.1-million-gallon contract failed two weeks later.

Three firms who have bid on Boston contracts in the past submitted no offers this year.

Boston obtained a 700,000-gallon, three-month supply from an independent dealer, but the shortage is affecting the supplier as well, and now even this temporary source may run dry.

Vermont has received no bids on its fuel contract, and New Hampshire has been forced to pay 30 per cent more for its gasoline contract after it was unable to get oil companies to make their customary bids.

New Hampshire cities which do not buy their gasoline through state contract have imposed quotas on use of fuel by some official vehicles.

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-Chief Justice Armand J. Dufresne of the Maine Supreme Court said a U.S. Supreme Court decision yesterday "will hasten our decision" on the constitutionality of the Oil Conveyance Act of 1970.

The oil handling law, which sets up stiff controls over the movement of petroleum along the coast and establishes an oil cleanup fund, has been tied up in the state court for 11 months.

The unanimous ruling by the nation's highest court upheld a Florida law that imposes heavy liability for spill damages in that state's territorial waters. The Florida statute was modeled after the Maine legislation.

Dufresne said in a telephone interview that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision "will undoubtedly simplify our work. So to that extent it will hasten our decision."

He indicated that Maine residents won't have to wait too long for a resolution of the case brought by the major oil companies.

Justice Donald Webber said the Maine court was awaiting the ruling on the Florida law. "I think the decision will be very helpful," he added.

Decision Seen Soon On Maine Oil Law

Because of the Maine court's delay at settling the constitutional issue, a "moratorium" bill is being considered to prohibit any refinery development until the bench has made its decision and a possible appeal settled.

Sen. Harrison L. Richardson, R-Cumberland, felt the move was vital because of plans by the Pittston Co. of New York to seek a state permit to build a $250 million refinery at Eastport in Washington County.

Pittston officials have called a news conference here Thursday to announce that its proposal is ready for review by the Board of Environmental Protection.

The controversial seven-month moratorium measure received initial approval in the Senate by a 20-12 vote Tuesday. Richardson Wednesday had further consideration postponed until next week to give legislators time to look over the Florida decision.

The senator said the U.S. Supreme Court decision was "extremely significant to our state. I don't see why our justices can't proceed promptly," he added.

In Maine, only one bid was received on the state contract. The bid will increase the state's gasoline costs by six cents a gallon-or $500,000 a year, officials say.

Several independent gasoline stations in Maine have been forced to close because of the shortages.

In Rhode Island, the president of Potter's Gasoline Distributors said, "The squeeze is on. Supply is very tight. We are operating day by day."

"We have made no cuts yet," said George Potter, "but we may have to close one day a week" as we did in World War II.

In Washington, Rep. Silvio R. Conte, R-Mass., blamed the oil industry for what he called monopoly practices.

Conte said in a speech on the House floor Tuesday that "the major oil companies, claiming they do not have enough gas, are cutting off supply contracts to many individual stations" while building new discount stations of their own.

President Nixon Wednesday removed limits on oil imports and asked Congress to end federal price regulation on new supplies of natural gas.

Moore Pleads Guilty To Embezzlement

BOSTON (AP)—Daniel D. Moore, former president of the now-defunct Surety Bank and Trust Co. of Wakefield, pleaded guilty Wednesday to 50 counts of embezzlement, fraud, conspiracy and other charges in connection with the banks closing.

Moore, 40, appeared in Boston before U.S. District Court Judge Frank Freedman. Asst. U.S. Atty. George V. Higgins said Moore could be sentenced up to 240 years in prison for a conviction on the 50 charges.

The conspiracy indictment charges that Moore and Martin Stone, 56, of Wakefield, George E. Cartier, 54, of Nashua, N.H., and David Brown, 65, of New York conspired to defraud eight banks in the U.S. and Switzerland. The banks were the Surety Bank and Trust Co. of Wakefield, Pioneer Bank and Trust of Chicago, Merchandise National Bank of Chicago, the National Bank of Commerce in Detroit, the Bank of Tokyo in New York and the Pariente Banque, Romande Banque and Commerciale Banque, all of Genova, Switzerland.

The other indictments contain 40 counts of misappropriation, embezzlement, issuing letters of credit without authority, and receiving kickbacks.

Moore became president of Wakefield in May 1966 after serving 10 years as a banking examiner with the Department of Treasury.

He resigned April 27, 1972, and the bank was closed by Commissioner Freyda Koplow three weeks later.

In August, Moore was indicted on the 49 counts. The conspiracy indictment was returned in February 1973.

Reaction Mixed In Westover Cutback

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) - A year ago, Teddy Konieczny could have left Westover Air Force Base for a higher paying job with the Navy. But he didn't want to leave his hometown and family.

Now he is 56, and he thinks he will be one of the first civilians to lose his job when the base is phased out.

"I had chances to move, but I didn't take them. My parents were old and sickly. I also wanted to help my widowed brother take care of his family," he said.

Konieczny said he could have had two different contracting jobs with the Navy Department.

He was born and raised in the nearby community of Indian Orchard. He went to work for the now-closed Springfield Armory in 1941 as an inspector, spent four years in the Air Force and joined Westover as a civilian employee in April, 1946.

Until 1965, he was a supply inspector at the base and since then has been working in the procurement department.

He said he is too young to retire and wants to work at least until he's 60 but added, "I think I will be cut out. I will definitely look for another job, either at another government installation or in a private firm."

Konieczny said his age and lack of a college degree will probably give him a rough time on the job market. And he said the military's plan to try to place civilians hurt by the cutback in other positions probably won't help him.

"If this cutback were an isolated incident, I might be able to get another job that way, but this is happening all over the country."

Konieczny said he feels like he has been "forgotten" by the military but said he is not bitter.

Konieczny, a bachelor, said he does not think the base should have been cut back. "We have all modern facilities here-modern hospitals and schools-it's a city by itself."

IRA Seeks Krock On Tax Evasion

BOSTON (AP) - The FBI, Internal Revenue Service and federal marshals began a search Wednesday for millionaire Edward Krock, after he failed to appear in federal court in Boston to answer charges of income-tax evasion. U.S. Atty. James N. Gabriel said Magistrate Willie J. Davis issued a fugitive-from-justice warrant against the Worcester financier.

Krock, 61, was charged by a federal grand jury with failing to report more than $6.2 million income between 1966 and 1969 and failing to pay more than $1.4 million in personal taxes.

Gabriel said that when Krock was indicted last week, he was reported to be aboard his 150-foot yacht, the Speculator, somewhere off Nassau.

Gabriel said Krock would not be arrested while he is in Nassau, but federal agents will arrest him when he returns to the United States.

Krock, who is now president and treasurer of Edward Krock Industries, bought a grocery store when he was 16 years old and later sold it for a profit. By 1965, he was an officer in 14 companies and affiliated with interests valued at more than $600 million.

R.I. Warden Resigns, Cites Lack Of Support In Reforms

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP) - Francis A. Howard resigned Wednesday as warden of the state prison saying he lacked the power to bring about reforms in the Rhode Island prison system.

"The frustrations of the system were too much of a burden," Howard said in announcing his decision 16 days after inmates at the Adult Correctional institutions went on a fire-setting, window-smashing rampage. The warden went on sick leave two days after the uprising.

Anthony P. Travisono, state director of corrections, said Donald Taylor, the deputy director who has served as acting warden, will retain that post temporarily. A search for a permanent successor will begin immediately, he added.

At a news conference Wednesday, Howard criticized Gov. Philip Noel. Prison guards and other members of his staff as standing in the way of his efforts to foster programs of rehabilitation.

He also said the disturbance "was the culmination of my decision. He said he was leaving with "mixed feelings," but "no one twisted my arm" to force him to resign.

He added, "Let me point this out. I came into the system under the Licht Administration and I got a lot of support. Now it's a new administration; I don't feel as comfortable."

He characterized Noel as "more conservative" than former Gov. Frank Licht, who appointed him more than three years ago and did not seek a third term as governor last year.

Howard charged that the Brotherhood of Correctional Officers, the union of prison guards, "is attempting to manage the department of corrections and I think they have to be slapped down." Guards don't "belong" in the area of prison management, he said.

He said guards have staged several sick-outs and "this is intolerable. You can't run a prison if the brotherhood is going to go on strike every month. They've got to be confronted and fired if necessary."

Howard decried the lack of cooperation he received from other staff members. "There were some very fine people working at the ACI and there are some who weren't so fine," he said. "Some were working to undermine me. I know this."

At a recent news conference, Noel said he thought Howard was moving too quickly to remove change at the ACI.

The governor said Wednesday he would accept Howard's resignation and praised him as "a dedicated public servant who has worked diligently under very trying circumstances to do the best job he knew how." Noel did not comment on Howard's criticism of him.

The prison uprising April 2, which involved about 200 maximum security inmates, left shops destroyed by fire and caused an estimated $500,000 in damage. Most inmates have been locked in their cells since then.

Any End Necessary

Yesterday heavy gunfire was exchanged between Indians occupying Wounded Knee and Federal Marshalls blockading the perimeter of the village. Four Indians were wounded, one suffering severe head wounds.

The village of Wounded Knee has been occupied since early February. Federal Marshalls have surrounded the village for nearly the same amount of time. Tension has been running high throughout and no settlement is in sight.

Yesterday's gunbattle points to at least a stalemate if not an outright deterioration in efforts to negotiate an end to the crisis in South Dakota. Any further actions of this sort can only aggravate an already aggravated situation.

We would hope that both the Federal government and the Indians at Wounded Knee would go to any end necessary to avoid any confrontation that might precipitate a repetition of the massacre which occurred at Wounded Knee once before.

Are You Listening?

I. Won't You Please Hear My Pleas?

First of all, I do not relish the thought of writing something that no one will pay any attention to: DO I MAKE MYSELF CLEAR? Good; now we may proceed (now that you're thinking, "Jeezus, Gomes is a real asshole". Well, I'M GLAD YOU THINK AT ALL! Eh, but who cares anyway, correct? Like, if they don't care, why should I?

II. How Can You Hear Me If You're Blind?

Are you listening? But of course. But you're not seeing, are you, you goons? Well I don't blame you. The world is in a pretty rotten way, isn't it? Yessir. You can't get that brand new (Fill in appropriate want) ..... you've desired for so many months, can you? Well, you're not alone, kid . . . yep things are tough all over . . . expecially in the Sudan (over 1,000,000 dead), in Chile (where ITT decided they'd buy—or try to buy an election), or even for somebody important, like Mr. Mick Jagger, who had to go to France so he could avoid English taxes (which we all know he can't afford . . . yeah, sure). Yep, things are sure tough for Americans, even on down to the large oil magnates, who gosh and golly, well they just can't afford to give their oil to small companies, because of the oil and gas shortage, but consider for one moment the idea that there might not really be a shortage of gas and oil, but that the big companies are manufacturing a shortage so that they can eliminate these small bugs who are bugging in on their monopolies. Think about that. Think about the virtual (actual) monopoly of the telephone company. Realize, my friends, that back in 1927, a conglomerate of organisations, including ITT, AT&T, and RCA Victor (you know—the image of the Pavlovian dog waiting for its next instruction from "his master's voice"?) convinced (if such be the proper word, the then newly-formed FCC to make radio a commercial enterprise. And realize that television was railroaded into the same thing when it first came around. Ahhh . . . laissez-faire. Ah, would that it were so. You see, what has happened with free enterprise on a large scale is that it ceases to be free. Instead of a king or a dictator giving the rules, you get the rules from a large company. And, of course, we decide to take this message to the rest of the world through the process of Coca Colonization. Ah, America is wonderful, wonderful, wonderful. We are happy and laughing. Listen to it deep within your soul; it sounds like crying.

III. Domestication of Strange Animals

We are domesticated animals, and we cannot escape what we are . . . maybe. Oh, you can refuse, and we can point to certain things that are happening, things that are improving, but we can only point, and never really do anything about it. Oh, little signs of improvement are there, but realize that these things can serve as very strong obstacles to real change. You go to college, and you get the illusion that, gee, things are changing, but godammit, these little inroads are getting screwed up, what with the Harvard economists getting fired, what with Cecil Taylor, one of the most revolutionary musicians to hit this planet, not having his contract renewed at Antioch College. Now, Antioch, isn't that supposed to be the FREAK college? And they're getting rid of Cecil Taylor. Why? Why? (sotto voce) because they don't want to take any chances (whisper) yeah, it's really great to live in this great country of ours where you can't do anything without saying it in a soft voice, and Christ, these companies are afraid of people like Cecil Taylor and Ornette Coleman (who was paid not to play for a year by certain people in and about New York). Why? Something is up, but you go to your rooms and say, yeah, well it is really too bad about all these people who are losing their jobs, but I've said this before, and those of you out there who see this can at least get some relief in the knowledge that if someone else agrees with you, but listen . . . it sounds like crying . . .

I wish you realization.

Matt Tackeff

Kush Mein Tochis!

The title of this column is Yiddish for "Osculate My Gluteus Maximus!" It is also the unofficial motto of the Student Senate during the current campaign for president of the Student Government Association (S.G.A.)

The election of a president for the S.G.A. is an undertaking which shouldn't be taken lightly. Lots of people take this campaign very seriously. Funny, but most of those who do take things seriously are either candidates for the office of S.G.A. president or are members of the S.G.A.P.G. (Student Government Association Power Groupies). Other than the aforementioned, very few people outside of these blocs would give two cents for the outcome of the race.

In order to guage the level of student disinterest, this columnist took a strictly unauthorized Collegian poll of random students in the Student Union and Campus Center. Three questions were posed: 1) Are you a student at this University? 2) Can you name your representative in the Student Senate? 3) Do you know the name of the current president of the Student Government Association?

Of all those questioned, only those who answered in the affirmative on the first question were considered in the tally. Of the fifty who qualified, 44 were unable to name their student Senator, and 39 did not know the name of the current S.G.A. President. The conclusion to be drawn from all of this is that the student body takes a very healthy attitude toward Student Government.

The S.G.A. groupies are perfectly aware of their own insignificance on this campus. Since very few people like to acknowledge the fact that they are being ignored, the groupies are very much inclined to seek out scapegoats. The favorite target seems to be the Collegian. If the people don't care about the S.G.A., it must be because those diabolical hacks in the Collegian Office are blacking out on coverage. Now, in all honesty, the Collegian has not been blacking out the election; the true gripe is that the front page has not been plastered with the candidate's profiles.

Nick Apostola. He's been osculating the gluteus maximi for many years now. If that doesn't qualify him for something, I think it should. And remember, not every Student body can boast of having a Rumanian Studies Major as its president. The Rumanians have been left out of the mainstream of American life, and I think its outrageous.

Elliot Sherman. Another enthusiast of the fine art of osculating on the backsides, like a good politician should. Elliot's a graduate of Boston Latin School, which also turned out Jack Kennedy, Leonard Bernstein, Theodore H. White, my father, and Steve Tripoli. And Elliot also has the tacit approval of Wesley Razmussen. The latter's endorsement could be important.

Roy Perdue. Roy used to be head of the Orchard Hill Area, of which I have had the misfortune of being a resident. When I first moved up the Hill, I thought that it was the greatest place on Campus. Not any more. If you're considering moving out of Southwest, don't pick the Hill if you can get into Northeast. The Hill has become a real cesspool, which is sort of paradoxical, because the muck usually runs downhill to reach the pool.

Henry Rigan. Is he for real? If he's a put-on, then he shouldn't be wasting his time running. But if he's serious about being the lunatics candidate, he's just the man for the job.

What A Bargain!

It's grumbling time for Massachusetts motorists, for the semi annual inspection time is upon us. We all hate to be forced to do anything: that's why I hesitate to suggest that for a buck the inspection is a bargain.

It's a bargain because if you wanted your car checked out and brought it to a dealer he would probably charge you five times as much to do such a checkup.

The Registry of Motor Vehicles has put out its annual warning suggesting that motorists get their inspections done early. There are a record number of 4208 inspection stations throughout Massachusetts at the time, but they must inspect a staggering 2,770,000 cars, trucks and trailers in the month and a half between April 1 and May 15.

Motor vehicle inspection is 50 years old this year in Massachusetts (it started with semi-official "brake and light stations" back in 1924) and has always been a debatable thing here.

Some motorists are afraid the inspection will require them to have unneeded work down on their cars. Others feel the couple of minutes needed to check out a new car and affix a sticker results in the "fastest buck in the East." And, of course, there is the guy with the wreck who would rather tool around for miles between stations trying to find someone who will give him a sticker, rather than fixing up the thing.

The latest group to complain about the inspection program isn't the motorist, however. It's the garage and station operator who say that the $1 fee isn't realistic. The Registry's chief of vehicle inspections, Charles V. Mulhern is inclined to agree. The fee has doubled to a dollar back in 1964 (at the same time jacking-up the front end was required) and hasn't changed since.

Air Fare Confusion

Confused over the new air fares?

Try this simple rule of thumb: Flights to Europe will cost more than they did prior to today and long distance US air trips-1000 miles or more-could cost less effective June 1.

The reason for this paradoxical situation is that the airlines with domestic operations want to siphon off potential vactionists from the European continent this summer.

One carrier, American, has asked permission from the Civil Aeronautics Board, to reduce long haul flights' fares by 30 percent on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays and by 12 1/2 percent the rest of the week, holidays excepted, for seven to 30 day excursions.

This means, provided the CAB consents, that a Bostonian who would have paid $348 to make a trip to Los Angeles in March would only have to pay $244 for the midweek flight or $304 the rest of the week on June 1.

A Boston-to-London round trip, economy class ticket, which last year cost $580 now carries a $616 price tag.

Bostonians planning a 14 to 21 day trip in the same travel market will pay $430, up $25 from what the air fare cost in 1972.

The roundtrip fare between Boston and London for a 22-45 day excursion this year amounts to $327, in contrast to last year's price of $308.

Youth fares, for a round trip, now cost $263 up only $25 from 1972.

With the six percent increase, round trip tickets between Boston and a number of foreign cities will cost as follows: Rome $782; Athens $916 and Tel Aviv, $1082.

Housing Hassles

Contrary to student speculation that a majority age would make University Housing Policies illegal with respect to any student 18 or over, the exceptions for off-campus living next semester have not changed, according to Bruce Cochran, Director of Housing at UMass.

Those expected to live on campus are all undergraduates except; seniors, anyone 21 or over as of registration day fall 1973, married students, those moving to a Fraternity or Sorority, students whose homes fall within a 40 mile radius and Academic Off-Campus Programs.

Cochran sighted the Indiana State Supreme Court ruling with regard to on-campus housing. In a case filled by Marquette University students, against that school, the court ruled, the college had the right to enforce housing policies as it was "an essential function of the university."

"A surrounding community such as Amherst could not handle houseing for some 12,000 students presently living on campus," explained Cochran regarding UMass housing.

For those not exempt from campus living, the Room choosing for the Fall Semester, 1973 will be held on Tuesday through Friday of this week.

The schedule is as follows: Tuesday, April 17, Students Planning to remain in their current rooms must sign up with their Heads of Residence on this day, Wednesday, April 18, Students requesting available space, other than their current room, within their current residence hall, must sign with Head of Residence, Thursday, April 19, Students currently residing on campus who request a space in a residence hall other than their own must sign up with the appropriate Head of Residence on this day, Friday, April 20, Students currently residing off campus who request space in a residence hall for the Fall Semester, 1973 must sign with the appropriate Head of Residence on this day.

All area room rates have increased for next semester with the exception of the Slvan area. The lowest rent rates are in Northeast at $615.00 per year, the highest Sylvan at $700.00.

The recently rennovated, Greenough along with Lewis, Thatcher, and Chadbourne are set at $675.00, Orchard Hill, $675.00 and Southwest, $680.00 annually.

Hills North and South will be used as office space next year.

Gas Shortage- A Crisis?

By KENNY MELLO

In a recent MDC interview, area Service Station operators indicated their belief that the impending nationwide gas shortage is more of "an attempt by large oil companies to raise prices," than an actual problem.

Frank Bak, owner of Bak & Son Citgo in Northampton, stated that the supposed shortage "won't affect me or the consumer," and that it is merely an attempt "to squeeze the little guy out of existance."

Bill Barnes, operator of an Atlantic Richfield station in Amherst, indicated that his company forsees no shortage nor any rise in the price of the raw material. He stated that the alleged shortage, "is the oil companies way of staying in ahead of the government."

A spokesman for George's Exxon Station, Northamption, said that his company also plans no shortage of gas in the near future. "They (Exxon Co.) have millions of gas stored, and are still making more than they can use," the owner stated.

The operator of the Northampton Shell Station was the only one interviewed who believed there would be a rise in prices. "I don't have as much gas in the ground as I should and this naturally will affect the price," the spokesman stated. However, he indicated that the shortage was not a real one but an attempt by oil companies to bring prices up. "We had plenty of gas for the Vietnam War and it is strange that the supply should stop all of a sudden."

A Fishy Business

The Charles L. McLaughlin Hatchery, just west of the Swift River in Belchertown, represents the latest in modern equipment and engineering knowhow. One of the largest trout rearing facilities in the East, the hatchery is also the first one built in this state since the early 1900's.

The hatchery is owned by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Division of Fisheries and Game and is upported by sportsmen through their purchase of licenses. The trout raised at McLaughlin Hatchery are used to stock public waters throughout the state.

The complex consists of three buildings, all adjacent and connected: (1) administration, (2) hatchery, and (3) garage and food storage. The office-conference room in the administration building has a large monitoring panel for checking up on water flows and temperatures throughout the system. In case of failure, pumps can be operated remotely. The administration building also houses a main lobby with visitor's rest rooms, personnel lunchroom, locker room and laboratory.

The hatchery building house 22 concrete nursery tanks in which fiberglass hatching troughs can be placed. The newly-hatched fry live off their yolk sacs at first, then as the predator instinct begins to take over, they search for food- in this case a finely powdered dry diet. As the fry grow, they become too large for their fiberglass troughs and are soon released into concrete nursery tanks where they attain fingerling size. Finally, they are transferred to outside rearing facilities which consist of 200 eight by fifty-foot concrete raceways (10,000 linear feet).

As the trout grow, they are sorted for size to discourage cannibalism and their diet is altered to one of dry pellets. Feeding schedules are determined by the size of the fish, the rate at which they clean up their food and the water temperature in the raceways.

The cornerstone in the entire operation is, of course, water. Three 50 to 58-foot gravel wells supply 700, 600 and 140 gallons per minute. This water remains at a constant temperature of 48 degree Fahrenheit year round. The domestic water supply and water for the display pools and hatch house all come from the wells.

To further supplement the water supply, a three story pumping station is situated on the west bank of the Swift River. It houses three turbine water pumps with a total pumping capacity of 5,000 gallons per minute, and a 150 K.W. standby diesel generator, capable of supplying all electrical needs for the entire station in case of a power failure.

Rainbow and brown trout are the species presently being raised at McLaughlin' Hatchery. Although rainbows normally spawn in the spring, a fast-growing strain of fall spawners has been developed by selective breeding.

The Division begins stocking in March and continues through June. Two age groups of trout - yearlings and two-year olds are loaded on to aerated tank trucks by special conveyers and transported to stocking sites.

Food Services On Campus

In an effort to better meet the needs of the University Community, the University Food Services Department wishes to offer the following listing of services available to students, faculty, and administrative personnel both on and off campus:

MUNCHYS HAS IT ALL

The inventory of products available to you at our Munchys stores in Franklin, Worcester, and Hampden halls is growing daily. If you are a student on campus, there is no longer any excuse for starving on weekends, or during the week for that matter. Now you can stock up on everything you need to prepare a fine meal of a quick snack right in your own dorm. For University personnel and off-campus students, nothing is more convenient than stopping on the way home to pick up whatever you need. Stop by any Munchys store and see the fine assortment of items. We think you'll be pleasantly surprised.

While you are browsing through Munchys inquire about our Special Cake Decorating Service. We can prepare a specialty cake for you, with your choice of size (10" layer for $2.50, 12" layer for $3.00), your choice of yellow or chocolate cake and white or chocolate frosting, and your own message tastefully inscribed atop the cake. It's a great deal for a child's or friend's birthday, or any special occasion you may wish to remember. Munchys stores are open to serve you from 9:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. daily.

THE SNACK BARS ARE ALIVE AND WELL

Our snack bars are alive and well, and hope to keep you in a similar condition. If you are looking for a change of scenery, music, casual surroundings, and friendly people, chances are you are looking for one of our snack bars. Treat yourself to a drink, snack, or hot meal. These things, and much more, are offered to you at the Whitmore Snack Bar, open from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday thru Friday, the Catalyst Snack Bar, open from 7:00 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. daily, and the Hampden Snack Bar, open from 7:00 a.m. to 1:30 a.m., Monday thru Thursday, and 7:00 a.m. to 2:00 a.m., Friday thru Sunday. No matter where you are on campus, the University Food Services Snack Bars are nearby and ready to serve you.

ALL FUN AND GAMES

Name your game, and try your luck at the Hampden Hub Games Room, located on the main floor of Hampden hall and open from 9:00 a.m. until Midnight daily. Whether you want to relax, forget about exams, or get together with friends, the Games Room is a great way to enjoy yourself inexpensively.

THE CATERING DEPARTMENT IS AT YOUR SERVICE

Let our catering department expertly plan and prepare a special event for you. Whatever you have in mind, whether it be a dorm dinner, a party, luncheon, buffet, dance, or an old-fashioned bar-b-que, our Catering personnel can provide you with the space, the food, and the suggestions to make everything just right. Call the Catering Office at 545-2136 or stop by the third floor of Worcester dining commons. It's the first step, and the right step, toward a perfectly catered affair.

DINING COMMONS INFORMATION

Worcester and Hampshire dining commons open to serve you with breakfast from 6:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m., lunch from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m., and dinner from 4:00 p.m. until 6:30 p.m. These two facilities are closed from 10:30 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. Franklin and Berkshire halls will serve you with lunch from 10:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m., and dinner from 4:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. If your schedule does not permit you to eat lunch at the regular noon hour, have a late lunch from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. in either Franklin or Berkshire.

If you do not have a meal ticket, but wish to dine with a friend, buy a breakfast for $.95, a lunch for $1.65, or a dinner for $2.15 in any one of the dining commons. An even better idea is to purchase a breakfast, lunch, or dinner five meal strip ticket plan. Each plan entitles you to five individual meals which may be taken at any time during the semester in any one of the dining commons on campus. These plans are reasonably priced (5 breakfasts for $4.50, 5 lunches for $6.75, or 5 dinners for $9.25) and offer you an alternative to snack bar fare. With the end of the semester coming, time and money are running out. Use them both wisely . . . buy a five meal strip ticket at the Main Offices of the University Food Services Dept. in Worcester dining commons.

If you are a vegetarian, or merely want a change from your regular diet, we encourage you to enjoy the vegetarian and near-vegetarian foods offered at Hampshire and Worcester dining commons. From breakfast to dinner, you will find an excellent selection of dishes to satisfy your special needs.

Job Prospects Galore

By JOAN FASSNACHT

How would you like to spend your summer digging for artifacts in England or artichokes in Barre, Mass? From the exotic to the mundane, summer jobs, although not in abundance, are there to be had.

The Placement Office in Whitmore has compiled into open notebooks information which has been mailed to them, concerning employment opportunities for this summer. The more lucrative offers have been posted on the bulletin boards both inside and outside the office. Students are urged to come in and take advantage of this service.

In an interview with Mr. Edwards of the Placement Office, he explained that jobs in the Amherst area will understandably be hard to come by this summer. "Because most students leave Amherst in the summer, most businesses slow down and opportunities for work subsequently decrease."

The high percentage of open jobs in this area are restricted to on-campus employment for work/study students. But, if you are interested in camp counselor positions, opportunities abound. Four notebooks are filled with information concerning camps in Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. The types of camps range from Girl and Boy Scout to reducing spas and health resorts.

Related fields of employment include jobs in national parks such as Yellowstone and work in recreation departments in various towns. The Student Conservation Program is offering summer positions in parks all over the United States.

Got the urge for Traveling? The Circus Kirk in Pennsylvania is looking for college students to fill the positions of Acrobats, gymnasts, jugglers, clowns, musicians, ventriloquists, cooks, riggers, electricians, and animal trainers to join their traveling troupe this summer.

For those with a business bent, Two Guys in Springfield is looking for salesmen. The New York Life Insurance Company and the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company are offering summer actuarial trainee programs.

Engineering students may find work all over the United States with the American Railway Engineering Association.

For those of you who yearn to travel to far-off places, summer jobs abroad can turn your dreams into reality. Various countries throughout Europe are offering for foreigners employment in hotels, restaurants, and businesses. The 1973 Israel Summer Programs offer the student a variety of experiences, from kibbutz-living to a Folk-Dance workshop.

Mr. Edwards welcomes all students to drop by the Placement Office and browse through the various pamphlets and literature. Concluded Mr. Edwards, "We are trying to provide information on different options for our students. Hopefully, we can be of some help.

Springin' Fashions

Sherbert colors flavor the Spring fashions. Pin-wale corduroy baggies (yes, corduroy . . .it's now a year 'round fabric) in mint, lemon, light blue, and white coordinate with pastel tops. It's a 1940's style with 1950's soda-jerk colors.

Baggies look great on guys and gals. On gals it's like stepping into a Katherine Hepburn picture. On guys it's like Oscar the Groove of The Bill Cosby Show. Tall people look the best in baggies, but not-so-tall people should try the ones that have jean-slim fit from the thigh up.

The shirt is back strong for both sexes. Gals have the option of wearing their shirt in a soft knit bodysuit, (no problem with tuck-in). Guys can layer their shirts with a vest in a pastel shade. Old-time fabrics are reappearing in the shirts: gingham checks, seersucker stripes, and white collars and cuffs on print shirts. (Fall tip: look for the return of buttondown collars.)

Along with the 1940's pastels you'll see some of the traditional old-favorites. Dr. Scholl sandals will be great again for everyone; and the company promises to not run out 'till July this year (ha!). You can still find red, white, and blue knit shirts, classics of Spring and Summer. They'll always coordinate with last year's white jeans or this year's denim skirt. Denim skirts are another of the old-favorites on the market this Spring.

For joggers and bikers tank tops are strong. They come in two tone, ribs, and heathers. Shirt with vertical stripes are also ideal for the cyclist.

Senior Day-Plans Still Tentative

By BETSY CAREN

With some nice warm weather in store, lots of beer and music, many "happy" seniors will be reminiscing during Senior Day. As Spring sets in and the academic year draws to a close, the Senior Committee is making plans for their last "fling". Senior Day, May 25, will be a party for seniors and their guests to recount their experiences, say goodbye to U. Mass., and to get drunk together.

Plans are still tentative, because the Student Senate has not yet approved the budget for the affair. Two bands will be hired, and perhaps an "oldies" disc-jockey to provide continuous music for the students. A tent will be set up with beer and non-alcoholic beverages. Concession stands will probably be set up to distribute food during the course of the day, instead of the usual chicken barbeque. The committee made the change in order to reduce the cost of the tickets for the seniors. Senior Day is scheduled to begin at 12 P.M. and continue until 7 P.M., with each ticket holder entitled to a mug, entertainment, and beverages. The committee is hoping that Senior Day will be able to be held in the Quad area again this year.

There are a group of about eight seniors involved with this affair, headed by Sara Chudnovski, who says "the committee is working hard to make this day as exciting and as memorable as possible. We want to see that the Seniors pay as little as possible and have an excellent time." Even the prices of food should be reasonable, as they are selecting the concession stands on the basis that they are producing the cheapest prices with the best menu.

Tickets will go on sale at the end of April or at the beginning of May. Senior Day has been well attended by the graduating class in the past, and it promises to hold just as much fun and entertainment this year.

Letters To The Editor

Let Us Remember!

To The Editor:

On Passover Eve April 19, 1943—the beginning of the Jewish holiday commemorating the Israelite liberation from slavery—the Germans launched their final assault on the remaining sixty thousand Jews who still survived in the infamous Warsaw Ghetto. Of the original half million inhabitants (most of whom were already deported to various labor and extermination camps or had died from starvation or disease) these ill-equipped freedom-fighters withheld for over four weeks the onslaught of the Nazi war machine that thought that this "band of Jews" would easily be cleared from the ghetto. Only after the ghetto was set ablaze did the Germans still the massive resistance; however, the smoldering ashes continued to provide shelter for those who fought to their courageous end.

During the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, the embattled Jews corresponded with the world that looked on in silence. Their dispatch during the fifth day of struggle reveals their ideals and determination. It was addressed to their Countrymen and read as follows:

"This is a fight for your freedom as well as ours. Poles, citizens, soldiers of freedom! Above the din of German cannon . . . machine guns . . . through the smoke of the burning ghetto . . . we, the slaves of the ghetto, convey heartfelt greetings to you. We are aware that you have been witnessing our ordeal with horror and compassion . . . Every doorstep in the ghetto . . . shall remain a fortress until the end. All of us will perish in the fight but we will never surrender . . . This is a fight for your freedom as well as ours, for your dignity and honor, as well as ours. We shall avenge Oswiecim (Auschwitz), Treblinka, Belzec and Majdanek!

"Long live freedom!

"Death to the hangmen and murderers!

"Our struggle against the enemy must go on until the end."

"Only the power of the Allied nations can offer immediate and active help now. On behalf of the millions of Jews burned and murdered and buried alive, on behalf of those fighting back and all of us condemned to die we call upon the whole world . . . Our closest allies must at last understand the degree of responsibility which arises from such apathy in the face of an unparalleled crime committed by the Nazis against a whole nation, the tragic epilogue of which is now being enacted. The historic rising, without precedent in history, of the doomed sons of the ghetto should at last awaken the world to deeds commensurate with the gravity of the hour."

History reminds us that the world did for the most part remain silent. On this anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, let us join with people throughout the world who will be remembering the valiant struggle of these men and women. It has been only thirty years since the Holocaust—yet the nations of the world act as if "it" never happened. Let us remember!

Second The Motion

To The Editor:

As President of the Concerned Students for Doonesbury, I speak for the thousands upon thousands of Doonesbury fans in this wonderful land called UMass. We second the motion of Brian C. Reckel, and a good man he is, for the abolishment of Peanuts from your limited entertainment section, and replace it with the star-studded cast of Doonesbury! Charlie Brown may have won his first game, but it is B.D. who scores. Doonesbury will soon become an American tradition like Mom, Apple Pie, and THE THREE STOOGES. I suspect that in the very near future we will be seeing Doonesbury sweatshirts, B.D. star quarterback football games, Megaphone Mark campus radical ashtrays, and God knows how many boxes of Hallmark "Zonker Harris" greeting cards. That day is coming, so UMass should lead the way. Also, what I know about campus sex, drugs, radicals, and "crazies", I learned from Garry Trudeau. Of course you readers understand at once that I got my education from Garry's cartoons. Right??

Let me conclude this letter by quoting Ron Nelson, the infamous student who first started this Doonesbury Revolution on the UMass campus. In your February 28 edition of the MDC on page 15 Mr. Nelson said, "It is time for UMass to unite. Give me Doonesbury or give me death!" It is a fine quote from a fine person. Thank you.

The Last Straw

To The Editor:

I was overjoyed to find a column, (and I use the term loosely), by Bob Estelle in the Sports Section of Tuesday's Collegian. Yes, overjoyed, to think that perhaps this disallusioned editorial columnist has finally turned his dubious talents to the challenging world of Sports writers. It isn't bad enough to struggle through one of his political commentaries, attempting to make some kind of sense out of it, but now we must have our Sports contaminated by the John Birch Society too! This is the last straw. I just hope to God he doesn't start finding Commies hidden under second base at Fenway, or starts criticizing baseball for being too Liberal a game.

If Bob Estelle must scribble on a piece of paper, (the word write just sticks in my throat), and be the voice of James Welch and his all-American spies, then at least have the courtesy to keep him on the Editorial Page, where he is easier to avoid. And if the Editorial Dept. doesn't want him, then why not make a comic strip out of him? At any rate, have some consideration for your readers and limit the serving of Estelle's nonsense.

About Angola

To The Editor:

This Friday, April 20, in Rm. 917 of the Campus Center, the South African Support Group will present a program dealing with the political situation in Angola, one of the Portugese colonies on the west coast of Africa. Although Portugal has changed Angola's official designation, first to "overseas province", and recently to "state", it still remains a colony in every sense of the word, with forced labor, degrading "urbanization," a notorious secret police system, and generally a pattern of severe political and economic repression. The events taking place in this part of the world currently are becoming increasingly important to those concerned with the right of all peoples to self-determination and self-government.

Speakers will include Abel Guimaraes, from the Africa Information Service in New York, speaking on the current state of resistance in Angola, Dovi Asesi, a UMass faculty member, speaking on the background of the Angolan liberation struggles. The entire public is invited.

Away With ROTC

To The Editor:

A half page advertisement appeared in the Collegian on April 10, 1973. Contents: Enroll in AIR—FORCE ROTC, Get Scholarship, get free flying lessons, Get that big tax-free allowance of $100.-per month.

Here we have it, in print, in the College paper. Nothing short of disgusting attempts to bribe and to prostitute, to deceive once again. An advertisement so damned exclusively telling you "what you can get"—without a word or a hint "what you will be clearly obligated to do".

Let alone the fact what our Air-Force and our Military really stands for (strengthening and supporting any oppressor in this country and anywhere on this globe) this adv. represents a show piece of the present status and methods of U.S. military institutions: Unashamed bribery with that appeal of: Look what you can get, while completely ignoring everything else. Yet it is precisely the "everything else" which is so imperative to consider!!

Is the monstrous napalming of innocent men, women and children by an American Air-Force which went on for years already forgotten?

Has My Lai no more meaning? Don't we know anything about Bach Mai Hospital? Are we accepting that splendid logic and defense of the Hitlerites that "war is always cruel and our Airmen only followed orders? (And—by the way, are we accepting that brilliant statement of having achieved: "Peace with Honor"—while there is neither peace nor honor).

After a decade of murderous bombing of innocents they now wish to bribe you into ROTC Air-Force. This with that adv. on April 19, 1973 while the U.S. Air Force in full violation of the Paris accords again bombs like hell in Cambodia.

There is only one answer to the most shameful advertisement: You, the reader, join in struggle.

Away with all pest
Away with all R.O.T.C. from this Campus!

The Imperfect Master

To The Editor:

We are devotees of the totally unknown 19 year old Imperfect Master, Guru Neilo Keefeji. We have a certain amount of faith and trust in this less-than-ordinary Man, and we wish to describe Him to the university community.

The Guru has partial insight into some of the universal laws that govern man's behavior. His extraordinary humility arises from His inability to communicate with others, and His extreme personality problems, which force Him to be a recluse in His dormitory room.

The Guru is at times inconspicuous because of His colorless personality and overall mediocrity. But that does not lessen the impact of His sincere attempts to avoid the truth.

The Guru regards knowledge as the inevitable path to confusion and madness. The Guru seeks true happiness through ignorance. He reveals this ignorance, for a nominal fee, to all those who sincerely wish to learn it. We are sure that those who listen to the Guru will find their heart brimming with indifference, and will hurry away from the ceremony with great satisfaction.

In these days when various religious fanatics exploit the masses it is comforting to find a man who has so little to offer, yet is willing to take so much. Please, help send the Imperfect Master through college, by sending your valuable possessions to 317 Gorman House, UMass. (The Guru prefers cash, of course.)

Under the program students would enroll in Speech (Communication Studies) 391A, Comparative Broadcast Communication Systems, in the Fall Semester, 1973 for 3 credits. This would be followed by enrollment in Communication Studies (Speech) 390, Broadcasting on the European Continent and travel to London, Paris and Rome to study broadcast communication systems in England, France and Italy. The travel tour would take place in the January, 1974 break period and will include briefings and seminars with leading broadcasting officials in Europe as well as visits to major broadcasting studios. Credit for the travel course would be six hours.

The program is open to advanced undergraduates and graduate students in the Five-College area whose major interest is international communication. Enrollment for the campus course and travel tour is limited to 18. No language requirement.

Attorney For Students

Advice To Defendants

Summer vacation will hopefully be both a happy respite and remunerative for most students. I sincerely hope that no one has occasion to be forcibly involved with our District Courts. The odds are, however, that some people will have dealings in court and it is important that citizens understand what is going on.

For those who are interested The New Yorker Magazine has a series beginning with the April 14, 1973 issue on Massachusetts justice. It is quite perceptive and worth reading.

Our District Courts have a certain ritual and procedure that may inadvertently confuse those who are not familiar with it. What follows is a pamphlet prepared by the Amherst League of Women Voters and me to try to alleviate some of the confusion. It specifically applies to Hampshire District Court, but most of what it says applies throughout Massachusetts.

Whether you received a summons or were arrested and released on bail or personal recognizance, you have been told to come to Court to answer to the charges.

You should report to the Probation Office by 8:45 a.m. DO NOT LEAVE COURT UNTIL THE CLERK SAYS YOU MAY GO.

In the District Court room defendants sit in front of the railing. If you have any questions ask the Court Officer (in uniform, usually standing near the gate of the railing).

When the Judge enters, stand up until he is seated. He will announce that all defendants have the right to a lawyer and explain the proceedings.

WHEN THE CLERK CALLS YOUR NAME, STAND UP. HE WILL READ THE CHARGES AGAINST YOU. IF HE ASKS IF YOU HAVE A LAWYER, THE CHARGE CARRIES A POSSIBLE JAIL SENTENCE. LISTEN CAREFULLY: IF YOU DO NOT HEAR OR UNDERSTAND, ASK HIM TO EXPLAIN. HE WILL ASK YOU HOW YOU PLEAD TO EACH CHARGE.

PLEADING

1. NOT GUILTY: This may mean "I didn't do it." But, it does not matter whether you did whatever is charged or not! Pleading NOT GUILTY also means "I want time to talk to a lawyer or someone else." The Court might enter a NOT GUILTY plea for you, even if you want to plead something else, because the judge is concerned for your rights and knows that you need time. Most defendants are urged to plead NOT GUILTY at first. (If you are a minor under the law, this plea will be entered by the Judge for you, and you will be required to return with a lawyer or a parent.)

2. NOLO: The Latin phrase "nolo contendere" means "I don't want to argue about it, it's all right with me if you find me guilty and make my pay a fine." THE COURT DOES NOT HAVE TO ACCEPT THE PLEA OF NOLO. Unless you are represented by a lawyer, the Court won't let you plead NOLO if you are likely to risk a jail sentence or a high fine.

3. GUILTY: This means "I did it." It also means "No-one must prove that I did it." Except for minor traffic violations this plea should definitely not be made unless a lawyer has talked to you first. The Judge will not accept a plea of GUILTY when there is a possible jail sentence unless you are represented by a lawyer or have waived your right to a lawyer. You cannot waive your right to a lawyer until the judge has explained the possible jail sentence.

Unless you are very sure of what you are doing, plead NOT GUILTY and consult with an attorney of your choice or the Public Defender, if appointed, before making any other plea. YOU MAY ALWAYS CHANGE YOUR PLEA LATER.

If you plead NOT GUILTY ask the Clerk to set a date for your return to Court for trial when you can be sure to be there (usually two or three weeks ahead). Your lawyer can arrange to change the date later, if necessary.

YOUR RIGHT TO A LAWYER

You always have the right to hire your own lawyer. If you are penniless and without property, and if there is a possible jail sentence for the charge against you, the Court must appoint a lawyer (Public Defender) for you without cost. If you think you might be eligible, apply.

1. TO APPLY FOR THE PUBLIC DEFENDER go back to the Probation Office and fill out the Public Defender application form, giving information about your financial situation.

2. BE SURE TO CALL THE PROBATION OFFICE BEFORE THE DAY OF YOUR TRIAL (584-8417) to see if the Public Defender has been assigned to you. (The Court may decide that your application shows you can afford to hire your own lawyer.)

3. IF YOU DECIDE NOT TO HAVE A LAWYER, you must sign a paper called a "waiver" (saying you give up your right to have a lawyer).

BAIL

If bail is set for you in Court, and you feel it is too high, you have the right to be taken to Superior Court

by SYDNEY OMARR

"How about saying something new or different about Sagittarius?"—Mrs. Sharon Crump, Tinley Park, Ill. Response: Sagittarians are basically philosophical, not easy to understand and often appear pedantic. A Sagittarian I wish I had known: Nostradamus. A Sagittarian I wish had taken a liking to me: Andrew Carnegie. A Sagittarian who truly was a wise man: Paracelsus. Sagittarius persons usually go out of their way to aid those in difficult straits. Financial circumstances improve in 1973 for natives of this zodiacal sign—June could be a most significant month.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can get down to basic issues. What appeared elusive becomes available. Make most of material at hand. Capricorn could play a significant role. Friend who appears irritable is undergoing emotional pressure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get rid of burden which was handed you. Don't attempt to hang on to past. Key now is to perceive future trend. Strive to extricate yourself from situation which is destructive. One in authority will work in your behalf.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get opportunity to be more independent in thought, action. You can make new start by applying original methods. Accent is on work aimed at building toward future security. Learn different techniques.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Trust intuitive intellect. You know what you want to do—key is to have courage of convictions. Aquarian is likely to be involved. Creative resources can be successfully utilized. Adhere to your own style.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Forces tend now to be scattered. It is necessary to redirect energies. You have been moving in face of opposition. A lighter touch would help remove roadblock. Sagittarian could play instrumental role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take practical course of action. Means check details, stick with familiar material. Relatives may squabble. Don't become involved. Concentrate efforts. Come down from clouds and get on solid ground.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Mate or partner could be extravagant without your knowledge. Improve communications. Discuss various areas of vital importance, with special emphasis on money. Gemini, Virgo could figure prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Slow pace so that your objective comes into focus. You get action now where there was delay. Be prepared to state needs. Save reticence for another time. Taurus, Libra persons are likely to be in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relatives and neighbors appear pugnacious. Your patience could be tried by some who dare, chide and complain. Key now is to be selective. Much that occurs is due to behind scenes maneuvering. Wait for additional information.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Tendency is to hope for too much, too soon. Indications are that you profit through creative endeavors. But there are obstacles to overcome. Older individual has to be convinced. Once this is done, it will be clear sailing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get start in right direction. Burden is removed and it was not your own in first place. Get rid of guilt feelings. You do have your own life to live. Now, start living it! There is room at top.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are encouraged by realizing that secret fear was mostly illusory. Leo plays prominent role. Strive for added independence. Direct your own affairs. One who advocates otherwise may have ulterior motive.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an original thinker, a pioneer, independent and inventive. You draw to you many persons born under Leo. You are currently going through a testing period. October will be one of your most significant months of 1973. You are bright, attractive to opposite sex and have a tendency to be domineering.

J.V.'s Win

By JAY LUPPOLD

The JV nine made it two in a row Wednesday afternoon at Earl Lorden Field with a sound thrashing of Greenfield Community College, 10-1.

UMass got all the runs they needed in the first inning when Bill McDonald knocked in John Seed who had singled and advanced to second on a wild pitch. Seed came home after reaching third on an error when Bob Disabato stole second for a quick 2-0 margin.

The game was still close however until UM exploded for four runs off losing pitcher Gus Pietrackiewicz in the fourth inning. Bob Moore reached first after forcing Mark Fontaine who led off with a single. Steve Wright singled putting men on first and second and John McManus, who pitched effectively for six innings giving up only one run, singled in Moore. Mike Joyce who had three hits on the day bunted Wright in. GCC, whose shoddy fielding was costly to them all day actually, gave UMass the last two runs of the inning when third baseman Bob Barbuto booted Seed's routine grounder for a three base error allowing McManus and Joyce to score. UMass added single runs in the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh innings to make a laugher out of the affair.

GCC scored their only marker in the fifth when Rick Pell was hit by a pitch and was pushed around on a passed ball, a ground out, and an infield hit by Mickey Herrick.

Dave Conway pitched two-hit ball the last three innings to preserve the victory for McManus.

The JV's are now 3 and 2, and will be looking for number four when they take on Quinsigamond CC at Worcester this Friday.

ACU-I Finalist Places Sixth

ACU—I Finalist Wayne Kowalski of UMass recently competed at the ACU—I Bowling Tournament held at Syracuse University. Kowalski placed sixth out of more than 22,000 entrants.

By MDC STAFF

Wayne Kowalski recently competed in the Association of College Unions-International championships held in Syracuse, N.Y. Kowalski gained entry to the championships by competing, and winning, in a match held in February at the ACU-I divisional championships.

The tournament consisted of doubles and singles competition with all events determining the overall champion of the tournament. After the first two events were completed points were totalled and the top eight bowlers went on to compete in a four game concluding set. After the first six, Kowalski was thirteen pins back in third place. At this time he was tied with two other bowlers. The total pinfall for the ten games would determine the all-events champ.

In the first two games Kowalski surged to a 28 pin lead but then disaster struck as he started leaving splits and missing spares that brought him his worst two games of the day and pulled him down from the top spot very quickly. Kowalski finished in a sixth place tie in what he termed a "very disappointing" performance.

The original field of contestants was numbered at 22,000, that is equivalent to saying that every student on campus bowled in the tourney, and it is very remarkable indeed that Kowalski was able to advance to the finals in the Nationals.

Sailors Place 3rd

UMass finished 3rd in Connecticut Valley Championship held this weekend at the Coast Guard Academy. The Sailor ended up with 45 pts., 4 pts. behind Yale with 41, 9 behind the champion team of the Coast Guard Academy. Mike Morrissey sailed in the A division and compiled a score of 13 pts. by finishing 2nd 3 times, third and fourth. Morrissey finished second behind the Academy, and one point ahead of Yale who finished 3rd in the A fleet. Dana Williams who raced for UMass in the B fleet finished 3rd 5 straight times.

Sunday Tufts University hosted another invitational, where the teams raced in Lark dinghys.

All members of the University are invited to join the club and sail at M.I.T. on Saturday. For information call Mike 6-9558, Jeff 6-6810, or Phil 6-8890.

Golf Wins

By MDC STAFF

The Golf Team pulled off a major upset yesterday in defeating Dartmouth and Vermont in a tri-meet at Hickory Ridge Golf Course by a score of 376-379-397. The win brings UMass back to where it should be according to Coach Fan Gaudette. "This could well be the turning point in our season. We are playing exactly as we should."

Top man for UMass in the top-five-medal match was Joe Artman who shot a fine par 72. "He just played a great game for us today," commented Gaudette. The other four placers for UMass were: Dave Gryglie (74), Dave Kern (76), Rich Olson (76), and Gary Russell (78).

NORMAN, Okla. (AP)- Recruiting irregularities have forced the University of Oklahoma to forfeit nine of the 12 football games the No. 2-ranked Sooners played last season-including the Sugar Bowl victory over Penn State.

And Oklahoma officials said Wednesday that Kerry Jackson, the No. 1 quarterback of the Sooners' spring drills, would be ineligible for next season and that offensive line coach Bill Michael had resigned.

Gorillas Seize Ivy Tower, 12-8

By MIKE ELLIOTT

THE HARVARD YARD — Yesterday, at about the same time the Circus visited the Cage, Garber's Gorillas invaded the athletic fields of Harvard. On the lacrosse field across from Harvard Stadium and surrounded by the ivy-covered buildings of the university, the Gorillas defeated the Ivy-Leaguers 12-8 before approximately fifty dismayed Crimson fans.

The UMies opened the scoring with two quick goals within the first three and one-half minutes of play. The first tally came on an unassisted play by sophomore attackman, Peter Conolly at 1:13. Then, a minute and seventeen seconds later, Conolly assisted Freddie Michels on another UMass goal to make the score 2-0. After these two quick scores it appeared that this game was going to be a UMass romp. That notion was soon buried as the Gorillas started to tighten up. They could not handle loose balls and within five minutes Harvard had tied the score at 2-2. Pete Conolly gave the lead back to UMass at 11:31 on another unassisted goal.

The second quarter of the game was no different than the first. Harvard tied it again, scoring the first goal of the stanza.

At 3:05 of the period Harvard was called for a penalty but the Gorillas could not take advantage of it. Crimson midfielder, Andy Anderson picked up a loose ball and scored. The Crimson again scored at 4:39 to lead 5-3. Andy Scheffer scored a powerplay goal for the Gorillas eleven seconds later with an assist from Peter Conolly. Three minutes later Harvard upped its lead to 6-4 on another powerplay goal.

However, soon after this score Harvard received a penalty for interference and the Gorillas took advantage of it when All-American midfielder Dwight Blomquist collected a neat pass from Hirsch Seidman and scored on a "shot" from ABOUT FIFTY FEET FROM THE NET. Twenty seconds before the first half ended goalie John (O.J.) Rutledge made a clearing pass to Seidman who then relayed the ball to Conolly who pinpointed it to the left corner of the open net where Andy Scheffer tapped it in. The score remained even as the half ended.

The second half opened with Harvard netting two goals in the first four minutes. After the second Crimson tally it was all UMass as far as the scoring went. Frank Carrihan scored the first of the six UMass goals in that period. Again Pete Conolly had a hand in the scoring. Less than a minute later he scored himself. After that score, goals were netted by Dwight Blomquist, Frank Garrihan, and Fred Michels with assists going to Seidman, Conolly, and Conolly again.

Michels' goal came at 2:58 of the fourth period and made the score, UMass 11-Harvard 8. Twenty-one seconds before the end of the contest Michels was credited with a goal as a Harvard player, attempting to clear the ball, flipped the ball awkwardly into his own net.

After the game coach Dick Garber commented that his team, in the first half, "had fair to poor stickhandling and they did not take advantage of the breaks. They also sagged on defense: they did not play their usual tough, aggressive style. I was pleased with their defense when we were shorthanded." The Gorillas resume play against Wesleyan on Saturday at home. Game time for the 4-2 Gorillas is 2 p.m.

Netmen Face M.I.T. On Home Courts

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

"We're better than M.I.T., but we'll win." With those words from fifth singles man Mike Philipp, the UMass tennis team will take to the Boyden courts this afternoon at 3 p.m. in search of sweet revenge.

Today's visiting Engineers handed the Minutemen one of two losses in 1972. The question today is: Will they be able to do it again?

Coach Kosakowski thinks not. "I'm looking for an extremely close match, but I'll have to say that I'd be terribly disappointed if we dropped this one."

All the signs point to a UMass victory. Most important is the fact that the netmen will be at home, where they've dropped only one match in the last 2-1/2 years. Secondly, M.I.T. is weaker than last year as a result of two graduating singles men. Thirdly, UMass has a great deal of momentum going with them, whereas M.I.T. recently suffered a 5-4 defeat at the racquets of B.C.

Not only will the Engineers enable the Minutemen to face some much needed strong competition, they'll also help prepare today's hosts for their ever-important dual match against Amherst tomorrow.

What you'll be treated to, if you're in the vicinity of Tobin Hall today, is Mr. Young, M.I.T.'s number one player. Young is one of the top players in the East, with a real classic tennis game. The native Texan is a pleasure to watch, but it seems doubtful that UMass' Ted Donahue will enjoy too much from the other side of the net. All of which is to say, Donahue might well be tried in his day on court.

Batsmen Bow

By MIKE BROPHY

The UMass baseball squad dropped its first contest since returning from the Riverside Baseball Tournament in California, by a score of 6-5 to Springfield College. Steve Merrill was the losing pitcher for UMass in relief of starter John Olson.

UMass jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first frame as Pete Backstrom walked and scored when Ron Beaurivage reached on an error by the Chief first baseman. Mark Palau ended the inning by popping to short.

The Chiefs wasted no time in tying the score up as Barry Weinberg led off the inning with a single and later scored on a throwing error by Ron Beaurivage. A double play by the UM infield bailed Olson out of what could have turned into big trouble. Olson then settled down and rendered the opponents scoreless until their guns erupted the eighth frame.

Meanwhile UMass had built up a seemingly comfortable cushion for Olson as three consecutive doubles by Eddie McMahon, Steve Newell, and Beaurivage accounted for a two run rally in the top of the third.

Things remained extremely quiet until UMass again rallied for a pair in the top of the eighth as Palau singled Dan Kelly and John Healy walked. The, with the help of another enemy miscue, Palau and Kelly scored to boost the UM lead to 5-1 before the roof fell in.

Five runs came across the plate at Berry Field in the bottom of the eighth as the Chiefs blended three hits with five walks in sending eleven men to the plate.

The Minutemen will travel to Durham on Friday for the first of two weekend games with UNH.

UMass Captures Big Three

By MIKE BROPHY

Head basketball coach Jack Leaman announced yesterday that 6-8 Jim Town of Glenns Falls N.Y. had decided to attend UMass and participate in the Minutemen basketball program. Town was Leaman's number one prospect throughout the year and his announcement came at a time when all recruiting coaches begin to feel the pressure.

Town averaged in excess of thirty points per game and led his team to a 18-4 record and an 8-0 record in the Conference. He was named MVP of the Foothills Council All-Star team for his outstanding play.

Also announced was the signing of Steve Mayfield of Delmar, N.Y. who stands in at 6-7 and could become "The best rebounder at UMass since Julius", according to coach Leaman. His physical rebounding around the boards will do much to replace the loss of Tom Austin and Charlie Peters who will graduate in May.

Leaman's third find is Joe Semder at 6-5 from Valley Stream, Long Island. Coached by Mike Pollock, he will add the last bit needed to fill the front line. With these new players it will be totally possible to see a group of three starting Freshman players on the court next November.

Knicks Romp, 129-96

NEW YORK (AP)-Walt Frazier tossed in 24 points while Dave DeBusschere and Phil Jackson hit from long range with devastating accuracy Wednesday night as the New York Knicks handed Boston its worst playoff defeat in history, walloping the Celtics 129-96.

The victory evened the National Basketball Association Eastern Conference final at one game apiece with the third game of the best-of-seven series set for Friday night in Boston.

So overwhelming was the defeat that, by midway in the fourth period, the Knicks had cleared their bench.

The 33-point margin exceeded by nine Boston's previous worst playoff setbacks, 140-116 to Philadelphia in 1967 and 115-91 to San Francisco three years earlier.

By the end of the first period the Knicks 29-18, then they slowly pulled a way to an 18-point halftime bulge.

"Shit" has replaced "damn it" as the athlete's most commonly used public swear word. It's official; there's no doubt about it. Among active college jocks polled, "shit" was favored 3:1 over "damn it." What's the reason for this?

I called on three experts to give their explanation of the switch.

Charlie Pickup, a retired bat boy for the UMass baseball team, saw it as having been an inevitable change. " 'Damn it' just wasn't a good enouch channel for releasing the frustration an athlete builds up inside," he said. "He still had to do something extra, like throw his bat or slam his helmet on the ground or punch out the dug-out walls, after striking out."

Dr. Herman Craptrap of the Psychology Dept., analyzed the many advantages of the word, 'shit.'

" 'Shit' can be used many different ways by the jock to fit any and every occasion. He can stretch it out for miles, 'shhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhit!', when he knows he has faulted (stepped over the line) on his best broad jump of his Track career. There's the sharp, snappy, "sht!" when the lacrosse player has just gotten a stick in the throat, and the slow, sad, self-pitying, "shi-it", when the baseball player has just struck out for the tenth straight time and his future is up in the air.

"Then," he continued, "there's the exclamatory, 'Shit!', ambiguous, 'You're shitting me?' This is a sneaky way for the jocks to swear at the ref or the umpire without his knowing it. The ref takes this as a question, 'are you shitting (kidding) me?' but the jock really means, 'you are shitting (on) me!' "

"Fascinating!" I said, "tell me more."

"Probably the best thing about 'shit'," continued the excited Craptrap, "is that it can be stopped anywhere between the 's' and the 't' and it still won't be a swear word! 'Why would the jock want to stop the word?' you may well wonder.

"To answer this, let's go back to that broad jumper who is in the middle of flight after he has knowingly faulted."

I tried to visualize.

"There he is," Craptrap went on, "with his teeth clenched and his tongue supporting the roof of his mouth, air begins to whistle through his teeth: 'shhhhh . . .' Then, suddenly, he sees his mother in the crowd! 'What will I do?!' he wonders. Finally, almost, out of breath, he ends the long shhh . . . and transforms it into "shoot" or "sugar", and he's safe!"

"'Shit's' a fine word to use when you're being seen by alot of people," offered Barney "Bad Mouth" Baker, an ex-UMass football lineman, "but it just doesn't make it in the dug-out and the locker room. You need a real dynamite, power-packed word to get it all out of your system in there, a word like f . . ."

"Don't say it," I interrupted, "I was afraid that was coming. I don't mind 'shit' but I don't go for 'f . . .', er, uh, 'ef'."

"Bad Mouth" was stunned. "Man," he said, "get with it! It won't be long before 'shit' is replaced by 'f . . .' er, that other word . . . just like 'damn it' was replaced by 'shit'."

"It'll never happen," I said, "mothers would never stand for it."

It's A Beautiful Day, a group from the San Francisco area, is scheduled to perform at Alumni Stadium on Sunday, May 6 in UMass' second annual free spring concert.

Concert Groups Set

By DON BISHOP

The largest campus social event of the year is scheduled to be held exactly two weeks from this Sunday.

The UMass Concert Committee announced the lineup for the second annual free spring concert ending any speculation that may have existed during the academic year.

It's A Beautiful Day, Cold Blood and The Elvin Bishop Group will perform in Alumni Stadium on Sunday, May 6th starting at 1 p.m. The festivities are scheduled to conclude at approximately 5:15 p.m.

The three San Francisco area groups have agreed to perform in Amherst as part of an eastern cities tour. Negotiations between the Concert Committee and the Groups' booking agent had been going on since the beginning of March.

Last year's concert featuring Fleetwood Mac saw an estimated 15,000 people gather in the stadium, the successful outcome of that first of its kind venture for UMass, gave the Committee a much easier time this year, in their negotiations with the Administration for use of the stadium.

Concert Committee spokesmen yesterday stated that they anticipated a more smoothly run spring concert this year. They claim their marshalls, medics and stage crew will be better organized this time around, and they do not foresee any of the last minute contract difficulties that caused the delays between groups last year.

The sound system for this year will be larger, to go along with a bigger stage. The physical set-up for the concert will be essentially the same as last year. The stage will be located in the middle of the field, on the west stands side of the Stadium.

The Concert Committee will be releasing other information concerning the concert, such as gate entrances, parking rules, and bus schedules to the stadium, in the next two weeks.

Any individuals who would be interested in working with the Committee are welcome to do so. There is still a need for marshalls (to work within the crowd), medics (with Red Cross certification), and stage crew personnel.

The groups themselves, while certainly not in the category of "supergroups", have achieved a degree of national notoriety and should provide an outstanding afternoon of music.

All three feature excellent female lead singers: Patti Santos with It's A Beautiful Day, Jo Baker with The Elvin Bishop Group and Lydia Pense with Cold Blood. All the groups performed regularly at Bill Graham's Fillmore West.

All we can do now is hope the weather on the 6th can be described as the title of one of the groups performing here that day.

UMass Prof. Describes 'Departure' From Hungary

By MARK VOGLER

A University of Massachusetts professor said Thursday night that Hungarian officials earlier in the week had treated him "like a spy" before asking him to leave that country.

Dr. Gideon Ariel, professor in the school of Physical Education, said he had been formally invited to speak before the "First International Symposium on problems of Motion Biology" hosted by the Academy of Sciences in Budapest.

The program had been sponsored by a United Nations organization as well as several scientific groups.

Dr. Ariel said that Monday morning, a day after he had arrived, he was escorted from his hotel room to the foreign ministry office where he was "interrogated for a 10-hour period" about possible connections with the federal government.

"They acted like I was a spy. They kept asking me questions as if I were planted in their country. They thought I actually had connections with Washington, D.C.," Ariel said.

"They were all armed, and I think if I tried to leave they would have forcefully restrained me." I got up one time, and they just pointed, motioning me to stay."

He said his only connection with Washington is a grant proposal for research for the National Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce. He has been working on the study of human forces and stresses which lie in the shoe during physical activity.

"When I asked the officials why I was going through this they told me not to ask question, just to answer them," Ariel said.

Asked if he were physically abused or harassed during the questioning period, he replied: "If they did, I wouldn't be here because I would have physically abused them back."

Ariel said that the officials remarked that the officials looked "like statues", expressing no emotion at all. He said he was sure that he had been taped during the questioning.

Monday evening he was brought back to his hotel and informed by an apologetic organized committee representing the symposium that he would not be able to participate in the activites and would have to leave the country at once, Ariel said.

"I asked them if I could be in the opening ceremonies, but they advised me to do whatever the officials instructed me, otherwise I might have been there for a long time," he said.

He said that while packing his luggage the following day, he discovered that his computer programs, studies, grant proposal from Washington, and prepared text of his speech had been taken from his suit case.

He was put on an airplane for Zurich, Switzerland, but the scientific papers which were conficated from him were not returned. However, he said that all the material he lost could be replaced.

Ariel said it was ironic that his room mate George Dales, Sec. General of American Athletic Federation, who was working on the same project, had his grant proposal taken from him while traveling from Austria to Hungary.

He also noted that he had seen the same man who had escorted him to the Hungarian ministry office, around the hotel area earlier.

The return trip home from Switzerland cost him $750 which was unable to be reimbursed for because of his unexpected expulsion from Hungary. But he adds, "It's better to this way and to be alive."

Ariel said he has no idea why he was treated as he was and expects that the U.S. State Department will check into the matter.

"I'm sure when Hungary officials are asked for an explanation, they'll have a 'good one'. They'll probably say that it was dangerous for my security to be an Israelean and to be in their country. . .and this is the reason they sent me out. That's what they'll more than likely say," he said.

Student Senate

RSO Office Funds Cut

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate voted last night to eliminate the budget of the Recognized Student Organization—Student Activities (RSO—SA) Office.

This move came in response to Chancellor Bromery's veto of a plan that would have the office funded entirely by the Student Senate. Presently, the office is funded by appropriations of $167,237 from the Campus Center Board of Governors and $47,710 from the Student Senate.

In other business, the Senate heard Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage state his reasons for recommending to Chancellor Bromery the veto of the Student Activities funding transfer, and a new parking rate plan (see stories on page 2), that, if approved by the Board of Trustees, would raise parking rates to $125 a year in some lots on campus.

Robert Chiller, ex-Senate Treasurer, sponsored the bill to strike the RSO—SA budget, saying it was a move toward students getting further control of their money. His motion came after Vice-Chancellor Gage gave his reasons for recommending the veto of the plan to have the RSO—SA Office funded by the Senate.

During a question and answer period, Gage said he was concerned that the fate of the Student Activities staff would be determined by political pressure. He said some of the people behind the original motion to transfer (RSO—SA) funding to the Senate had ulterior motives in mind, such as the elimination of certain people from the staff. Gage was unable to answer questions posed by Senators as to whom these people were.

The Graduate Senate, the Campus Center Board of Governors, and the Undergraduate Student Senate had already approved the plan to have the Referendum Would Abolish Student Sen.

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Immediate abolition of the Student Senate was the topic of a referendum proposal presented to area government representatives yesterday by S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) co-chairperson Tom Merrigan and Barney Schneider, a member of the S.W.A.P. committee.

Saying that the Student Senate is grossly ineffective and not answerable to UMass students, Merrigan asked the representatives to consider a form of decentralized student government.

Merrigan said that the proposal needed work and that all dates cited in the proposal were tentative. He also said that the Campus Center Governing Board and all RSO (Recognized Student Organizations) groups would be exempt from what he called a "clean sweep" of all centralized student government. RSO groups would be allowed to work with those budgets that the Student Senate has already approved for next year.

Merrigan, Schneider, and area representatives will meet again Tuesday to discuss the proposal. Absent from yesterday's meeting were representatives from the Commuter Assembly and the Third World Alliance.

Campus Parking Problems

A Proposed Graduated Parking Fee ...Is Opposed By Campus Employes

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Parking fees, including car registration fees of up to $75.00, and proposals to lessen the parking problem on the UMass campus were the main topics of discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert W. Gage, presented the recommendations of the Transportation and Parking Council a representative group with student, staff, and faculty membership, whose purpose it has been to review the present parking situation.

Other topics of business at the Faculty Senate meeting included the adoption of the new Fac-Sen constitution on the first reading, the establishing of a degree in Manufacturing Engineering, and the presentation of annual reports by several committees.

In presenting parking proposals for the next academic year, 1973-74, Vice Chancellor Gage elaborated on the parking conditions which currently exist on campus.

"There are approximately 15,000 cars registered at the University and only 6,700 parking spaces available," stated Gage. "Of these 15,000 registered care, 2,500 belong to students who live on campus."

Proposals submitted in the past by the Transportation and Parking Council, include the installation of parking meters, a $5.00 car registration fee, and better intra-campus mobility through improved bus service. All of these proposals have been implemented, with the new bus service successfully providing increased service not only to the UMass campus, but to the surrounding area as well.

Current proposals for Fall '73 include making the present $5.00 registration fee applicable only to those who park in areas farthest from the center of campus, or in "periphery" parking lots. These periphery lots would be serviced by the campus bus service.

A series of concentric circles would then determine higher registration service fees for parking spaces which were more centrally located. These "higher priced" parking lot spaces would cost $24.00, $36.00, $48.00, $60.00, and $75.00 each.

The fee to register a car for Lot #1, near Whitmore, would be $75.00. Assignment to parking lots would be done by computer over the summer.

In other business, two motions which amended the proposed Fac-Sen constitution were passed and the new constitution was adopted on its first reading. A motion by Secretary Wellman, on behalf of Nick Apostola, Chairman of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, called for a majority of the Fac-Sen to be present during all business. The motion was defeated.

Other committees which presented annual reports included the Budget, Continuing Education, Faculty Affairs, and the Space and Calendar committees.

By MARK VOGLER

Campus parking regulations proposed by the University of Massachusetts administration are the target of heavy criticism from two employes unions at the university.

Representatives of the Massachusetts State Employes Association and Local 1776 Council 41, indicated Thursday that they are unilaterally opposed to the administration's current plans to solve the parking problems.

The two groups, which represent approximately 4,000 employes on campus, met in a special session at the Campus Center to discuss the merits of the plans with Thomas B. Campion, vice chancellor of administrative services.

The major provisions of the administration's proposal to be reviewed by the Board of Trustees at a later date include:

--the continuation of the UMass-Student Senate transit system after the Urban Mass Transit Association grant expires in the fall. The bus system provides an alternative for private vehicles.

--the construction of additional parking spaces on the peripheral areas of campus.

--the institution of a new assignment system with a universal parking fee of $5 yearly and graduated services of charge ranging from $24 to $75 depending upon the proximity of the parking lot. Reserved parking areas will cost $125.

--the understanding that the proceeds go to lot construction, maintenance, and improvement.

One MSEA member called the proposed parking fee a "discriminatory" feature of the plan which would "not touch the UMass administrators while hurting the little man."

Campion said that parking has become a growing problem at the University in recent years and that a proportional fee of some kind is needed in order to alleviate some of the problems.

"I think we have developed a viable alternative to chaos," he said.

"We have a plan which provides for a high rate, a medium rate, and a low rate."

Another union member said the parking fee represented a "hunting license" which only guaranteed a motorist the right to search for a parking space.

Representatives of both groups said it was unjust to enforce parking regulations for the purpose of encouraging the use of the new transit system since its services is not available to all employes.

"There are some of us who live in areas not covered by the new bus system who are being forced to pay for it while others are transported for nothing," one source said. "This is wrong."

"In effect, what you're actually doing is taxing a University employe to come to campus to work."

Union leaders expressed discontent over the fact that the administration had not negotiated directly with them the rationale for establishing parking fees and regulations.

Put A Brick In Every Toilet...

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Board of Selectman in reacting to the current ban on sewer extensions are urging every citizen to "put a brick in your toilet" in a publicity campaign beginning May 1. The sewer extension ban was put into effect by the Mass. Dept. of Water Pollution Control due to the conditions in Amherst. Studies done by the Water Pollution Control Board indicate that Amherst is dumping untreated sewage into the Mill River and at least two pumping stations are overflowing raw sewage onto adjacent land.

"Placing a brick in the tank of your toilet will save between five and ten million gallons of water sewage per year," according to Selectwoman Nancy Eddy, originator of the motion. The difference in how much water saved lies in how the brick is placed in the toilet. If the brick is placed vertically rather than horizontally it will displace more water, thus saving more from going into the sewage.

"The difficulty is that most toilets will not fit a vertical brick," said Eddy.

The Selectmen are recommending that residents buy a new brick rather than using an old one. They warn that an old brick may disintegrate in the toilet and cause blockage of the drain. Ms. Eddy said she got the idea from a similar project in Chery Hill, New Jersey. The Cherry Hill town government distributed 30,000 bricks to the residents to place in their toilets.

"I have been in contact with the woman who started that project and she told me the project has been very successful," said Eddy.

The flyer also recommends that residents try to run their washing machines and dishwashers only in the late afternoon or early evening. Eddy points out that the major problem with the sewage in town is during the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

"During these hours school is in session and causes much extra sewage in the treatment plant," said Eddy. Other recommendations are to cut down on the use of garbage disposals, and to take showers instead of baths. The flyer recommends composting of garbage or throwing it in the trash.

A flyer will be sent out to residents in their water bills on May first and school children will be asked to bring one home to their parents.

Popov Tells Of Torture In Bulgaria

By ED FOGARTY

Rev. Haralan Popov, Bulgarian citizen and Baptist Minister, told a crowd of 150 people last night of his torture and the struggles of Christianity in the Communist countries. The meeting was sponsored by the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship and held in Engineering East Auditorium.

Rev. Popov told how he was imprisoned in Sept. 1948 along with fifteen other pastors and tortured for eight months until they confessed to espionage on behalf of the United Sta*es against the Communist Regime.

"I had to stand in one spot with my nose not ten inches from the wall and was not allowed to sleep and only allowed ten ounces of bread per day. For eight mon.hs this went on, and at the end of every two weeks they would revive me through rest only to begin the torture again. After eight months of this torture I was too weak to resist, my will was broken."

Rev. Popov said all the pastors confessed to espionage at a mass trial and sent off to prison camps, some for life sentences. His sentence was for thirteen years.

"Again I was only allowed ten ounces of bread per day. The only thing that kept me alive was my faith in Jesus Christ."

Rev. Popov told the audience he broadcasts on Trans-World Radio and Trans-Europe Radio 12 times per day. He said his radio programs reach into Asiatic Russia.

In Bulgaria the practice of the Christian religion is prohibited. Nonetheless people still attend churches, even if they have to be set up in a home, said Rev. Popov.

"The only exception to this are 'registered' churches, where people are allowed to worship.';

Registered churches are state controlled and operated. Rev. Popov explained that only the old people were allowed to attend these churches.

No one is allowed to speak to a youth under eighteen years of age of God or church.

"One woman in Russia spoke to her children of religion. She was arrested and sentenced to four years in prison."

The Reverend said religious printed matter was not allowed in the Communist countries. He is presently engaged in a program to send 200,000 Bibles to the Communist lands. In 1971 Rev. Popov sent 436,000 Bibles to Eastern Europe and Russia.

In 1971 the Bulgarian Government engaged in a propaganda campaign against the Reverend. Besides printed matter they produced three films depicting him as derelict.

"From reports I received from pastors in Bulgaria, this only served to increase church attendance. My radio campaign has been effective."

Rev. Popov is in New England to promote interest in his current campaign "Evangelism to Communist Lands". The purpose of this campaign is to send Bibles, literature, and "alert people in the free world to the tyranny of Communism."

"On the Black Market in Russia a Bible costs $150 Ruples ($175.00). Even the rich would not pay such a price, let alone the poor."

RSO—SA Office funded entirely by the Undergraduate Senate. Had Bromery not vetoed the plan, the Senate would have control over the staff until next semester, when a policy council would be formed to oversee it.

Chiller saw the issues surrounding the controversy as two-fold: "If an organization like the Activities Staff is 100% supported by student fees, then we have the right to make decisions."

He also saw the issue as going beyond this particular area, and going into the areas of the athletic fee and fine arts fee. "If the state were supporting athletics with $100,000 and they didn't want it, then they'd sure as hell get rid of it. We're asking to do the same thing."

"It's as basic as you giving someone one dollar for a chocolate ice cream cone, and being brought back strawberry," Chiller added.

The other issue Chiller saw at stake was the months of negotiating that had taken place among the Vice-Chancellors and the Senate. This was expressed in a letter that SGA President Larry Ladd sent to Chancellor Bromery yesterday, which said, "Your decision without consultation of students is based on misconceptions and misunderstandings, and is a violation of a verbal understanding between students and the Vice-Chancellors."

SGA Presidential Candidates Speak Out

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Henry Ragin, who has been active in the Southwest Assembly since September, is a candidate for president of the Student Government Association (SGA).

Ragin, a freshman from Brighton, says that his candidacy is an attempt to end bureaucracy in student government and to allow the students to gain control of the university.

In the SW Assembly, he was on the social and cultural committee, as well as active in voicing what he thought was will of the people. As to his role in SW, Ragin said in an MDC interview yesterday that "I acted as the gadfly of the people in committee. I tried to be a strong voice of student run government. I worked for students to run it (SW), instead of John Hunt."

He said this about his understanding of the duties of the SGA president, "I see it as being on the board of trustees. It is someone who has to be a spokesperson for the people. Someone who will go into the board of trustees and tell them the students' interests.

"Someone who can mobilize the people. Someone who can tell the student government to get off their asses. Most important is that he is someone that is reachable by the students."

When asked what he thought his major qualification was, he said, "Desire."

As to change in the SGA, Ragin said that he would start with the SGA office. He said, "I would change the atmosphere of the SGA office to that similar to an opium den." He furthere explained it as "soft lighting, maybe a stereo, a place where people can feel comfortable."

The atmosphere of the SGA office, according to Ragin, is the reason for his candidacy. He said, "When I went into the SGA office, I felt as small there, as when I go to Whitmore."

In keeping with his policy of bringing student government to people, he reiterated his idea of making the people comfortable and suggested, "I'd like to see the SGA office moved from the eighth floor of the Campus Center to the Blue Wall."

Ragin stated that two of his slogans for the campaign are: "The students will stop serving the administration until the administration starts serving them," and "Restore lunacy to student government."

As to his chances, he said, "I'm running as a little guy against the big guns. I see my chances of winning as being very small, of course. Because of that, I can say the things that I really feel. I'm asking people to at least give me their vote on the first ballot, as it will not hurt the other candidates and at least it will be a step in giving student government back to the people."

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Roy Perdue, a past president of the Orchard Hill Area Government, is a candidate for president of the Student Government Association (SGA).

Perdue, '74, a math major from Rowe, Mass., says that his major goal "is a broadening of the student government association in that the area governments will be brought into the limelight of student decisions."

In four years Perdue has been actively involved in the government of the Orchard Hill area. He started as an observer by becoming editor of Sage (the OH newspaper which is now called Sage Revisited). He said that it was a dorm newspaper, which was made into a Hill paper. "It gave me an insight of the communications problems of the area and also of the administration," he said.

For the past two terms (1971-73), Perdue has been president of the OH area government. He described what happened thusly, "At first OH area government was in a very infantile stage. It had no prestige. It was held in very low regard and its budget was minimal, about $2500 a year."

"My major problem was to build up the credibility of the government. Mostly, I parlayed with the Master's Office and others to gain responsibilities for the area government. Area Director Jim West delegated the responsibility for the building refurbishing funds, which amounted to about 32,000 dollars last year. We formed a personnel committee, which was responsible for the hiring of heads of residents and recently hired the Hill's first full time faculty member."

He said that there were four major responsibilities of the SGA president. First, he has to deal with the Student Senate. "The main problem with the Senate is one of interest, because they have a very high attrition rate. The way to keep attention is through the committee level (to put more power on this level)."

The second area he said was the area governments. Perdue would act in an advisory capacity for them. "The areas' status should be improved in the SGA. There is a step in the right direction as the senate has approved more funds for the areas," said the candidate.

The two other areas of responsibility were in dealing with the administration and with the faculty. He said, "I would like to see a move towards a legal unionization of the students. It will be very poor if the faculty does it and the students don't. The students will be left in the cold in the bargaining process."

Nick Apostola, candidate for Student Government President sees the basic issue of the election as whether students will have control of their lives.

Apostola, a senior majoring in Balkan Studies, and Chairperson of the Student Senate's Academic Affairs Committee sees the decentralization of power in student government as the best way to achieve this, goal. In an MDC interview yesterday, he said the best way to achieve this is by giving Area Governments (Orchard Hill, Southwest, etc.) the right to tax students and control over the Area Director's Office.

"Decentralization doesn't mean higher costs. It means we can see who's performing and who isn't," he said.

Apostola suggested that the best way to supplement money for area academic courses was to cut from academic departments like engineering, that are only benefitting a few students.

He also believes students should have control over the directors of residential areas. "Area directors should be added for the commuters and more people should be added to the Greek office," he added.

Apostola said he foresees cutting the Student Activities Tax (37.80 for two semesters) by eliminating the funding of small groups. "The Senate must fund only essential services. If we run services like the People's Market, then we can build up a financial base to start other services like a credit union or gas station," he stated.

Apostola believes the best way to deal with the administration is to sit down and reason with them before taking action. "In the case of cutting money from departments for area programs I would first sit down and discuss the issues. If this didn't work I would expose the issues through the campus media, and as a last resort, invite an administrator to a grilling session. The basic issue is who has control of our lives, the administration or us," he said.

"As far as can be seen, they can negotiate a contract without ever consulting us. We have to find ways to secure our continued involvement in these sorts of decisions," he added.

Apostola stressed that he considers the S.G.A. presidency as a "joint effort, where I would be everybodies president, and everybody's trustee."

He said the decentralization of student government to area governments would strengthen each part of student government where "it would form a united front".

"What you need is everybody to defend students rights, not just the president. If we can gain control, when a decision like Gage made on Hills House comes along we can collectively fight against it," he said.

By STEVE FINE

"The role of the Student Government President should be both coordinator of student government at the University and more significantly, representative of students outside the University," said Elliot Sherman, candidate for S.G.A. President, in an MDC interview.

Sherman said that the president should be sure unity among students is preserved. He gave as an example the support area governments should provide each other in common problems.

"The President should be someone highly trained with the workings of the University. He should have had direct contact in working with both the administration and faculty," he said.

Sherman's experience in student government has spanned over three years of work. This year he has served on the Senate's Matters Committee as chairperson.

"The President must have the ability to reach out and communicate with the student body too. I can almost believe the editorial in the Collegian that said 39 out of 44 people didn't know the name of the present S.G.A. President," he said.

Sherman promised if he were elected to lobby for students outside the University. "I think attention must be paid to the legislature and the reports of Secretary Cronin and Governor Sargent like the State Reorganization Plan for Education," he said.

Sherman believes the function of student government should be to provide needs that the University doesn't provide. He included in this category the formation of a bank that would help a student that might have been refused for a loan.

He discounted however the use of student money for area academic programs. "With Tuition $200 to $300, the University has the obligation to make the aesthetic environment in areas as livable as possible. To turn around and use this money for academics rather than the living conditions is wrong," he said.

Sherman said that the administration must be held accountable to the students." If students wanted something I would take every type of action I could think of. The administration treats students benevolently but also in a dictatorial fashion," he stated.

Sherman says students can have the most effect on faculty by demanding representation on departmental personnel committees. He thinks that the faculty will question the competence of a student at times, but never their own. "I'm opposed to a faculty union at this time because unions try to maintain the status quo for their members."

Mitchell Denies Planning Watergate

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst announced Thursday he has withdrawn from the Watergate investigation because it involves friends and associates.

His announcement followed reports that President Nixon's campaign deputy accused John N. Mitchell and John W. Dean III of planning the Democratic party bugging.

A lawyer has filed in court papers saying that an unidentified client last summer took eight cardboard boxes of documents from the White House complex, including plans for the Watergate wiretapping, before the FBI had a chance to see them.

The charge that Mitchell and Dean helped the Watergate planning was attributed to Jeb Stuart Magruder, formerly the No. 2 man in the Nixon campaign organization.

Dean, the President's official lawyer, did not respond directly but told newsmen he will not become a scapegoat in the case. His statement apparently took the White House by surprise.

Kleindienst, who replaced Mitchell as attorney general when Mitchell became Nixon's campaign director, said he turned the probe over to Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen because it "relates to persons with whom I have personal and professional relationships."

"It would be entirely inappropriate for me to exercise control over the sensitive matters being developed by the Department of Justice," the attorney general said.

Sources close to the Senate's Watergate investigation say the Justice Department plans to seek grand jury indictments against eight present and former Nixon administration officials and employes.

Indictments against four of the eight are likely to be handed down next week by a federal grand jury, sources said. They added that Justice Department plans to ask for perjury charges against Magruder and Sally Harmony, secretary to one of the Watergate conspirators.

The Washington Post reported that Magruder told federal investigators Saturday that Mitchell and Dean approved and helped plan the wiretapping of the Democratic headquarters and later "arranged to buy the silence of the seven convicted Watergate conspirators." Kleindienst said he withdrew from the investigation the following day, Sunday.

Dean's statement noted he had refrained from comment previously on charges of his involvement in the political espionage and said he would continue to do so hereafter.

But he added: "Some may hope or think that I will become a scapegoat in the Watergate case. Anyone who believes this does not know me, know the true facts, nor understand our system of justice...I believe that the case will be fully and justly handled by the grand jury and the Ervin select committee."

Dean cautioned against "drawing any conclusions as to the guilt or involvement of any persons until all the facts are known."

Peter H. Wolf, a Washington attorney, said in papers filed in federal court Thursday he represents a former employe of the re-election committee who picked up the eight cartons at the Executive Office Building, adjacent to the White House, the day after the break-in at the Watergate office building.

He said the cartons included materials from the office of E. Howard Hunt, one of the seven convicted Watergate conspirators, who had worked as a consultant at the White House. Hunt's desk and safe were opened after the White House learned of his connection with the break-in and the contents were held for a week by Dean before Dean turned them over to the FBI.

'Economy Overheating'

By GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Inflation soared to an annual rate of 6 per cent and the country's economy spurted to near- record levels during the first quarter of the year, the government reported Thursday.

Economists warned that there are signs the economy is overheating and will have to be slowed.

The gross national product—the total value of the country's output of goods and services—increased a record $40 billion from January through March to an annual growth rate of 14.3 per cent.

The GNP is increasing at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $1.235 trillion, the report said, compared to $1.164 trillion at the end of 1972. A trillion is a thousand billion.

Consumers were both buying more and paying more, the figures showed, and a top government economist said the United States was experiencing inflation under conditions of strong demand.

The economist, chairman Herbert Stein of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, called the first-quarter inflation rate extraordinary.

Inflation, accounting for 6 per cent of the increase in GNP, scored the biggest quarterly jump since a 6.3 per cent inflation in the fourth quarter of 1970. It was more than double the rate of 2.8 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1972. The rate of inflation for all of last year was 3 per cent.

If the 6 per cent inflation is maintained throughout the year, it would mean that consumers would be paying $1.06 at the end of the year.

The government's goal for inflation this year is 2.5 per cent, and economists still are saying a slowdown to this rate later in the year is feasible. Their optimism of two months ago however, has been waning.

Workfare Law May Cut Welfare 60%

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The government has found private jobs for only 8 per cent of the more than one million welfare recipients required by a new law to register for work, according to unpublished figures.

Federal officials say the program has not been more successful because of high unemployment, federal budget-cutting and lack of skills or ineligibility of those registered.

Of the 82,075 persons placed in these jobs between July 1, 1972, and March 31, 1973, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare estimates that 60 per cent eventually will be removed from welfare rolls and that many of the others will have benefits reduced.

The Senate sponsor of the workfare law, the only major portion of President Nixon's ill-fated welfare reform program to be passed by Congress last year, has said stiff enforcement could clean up more of what he called the "welfare mess."

"My amendment provides that those who are capable of work must register for work or job training and, if they fail to do either, then their welfare benefits are cut off," Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., recently told constituents.

The conservative-backed law was designed to remove from welfare rolls some of the 11 million persons, including nearly eight million children, receiving Aid for Families with Dependent Children.

HEW and Labor Department figures show that 1,023,083 persons were registered for work or training during the last nine months. Under provisions of the Talmadge amendment to the six-year-old Work Incentive (WIN) program, they must register or lose their relief checks.

Roughly one out of four, or 256,678 were certified able-bodied and 146,359 were placed in the government-funded job training or "employment orientation" positions, HEW said. The private jobs, not subsidized by the government, were found for 82,075, and no openings in either category were found for more than 18,000.

"There simply is nothing available for them," a spokesman said.

Government program managers and organized labor had predicted last year that the Talmadge amendment would have a minimal impact on trimming welfare rolls.

The administration had budgeted $205 million for WIN and, after passage of the amendment, requested another $250 million or one-third of the congressional authorization.

But government officials say they are spending only $294 million this year under a continuing resolution, since the President twice vetoed HEW-Labor appropriations exceeding his spending limits. That amount is just slightly higher than the $259 million spent in fiscal 1972.

House Blocks Highway Trust For Bus, Rail

By DAVID MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Thursday dealt a severe blow to an administration—backed effort to tap part of the $5 billion highway trust fund for mass transit.

By a 215 to 190 vote, it rejected an amendment that would have allowed cities to spend $700 million in highway funds on the construction or purchase of bus and rail rapid-transit lines.

The action was tentative pending completion later of the massive $25.6-billion three-year federal highway bill. Following passage, the bill goes to conference with the Senate, which has approved a similar amendment.

Congressional sources said the House vote "gravely reduces" the chances that the Senate-passed amendment will survive the conference in its present form.

The vote caps more than a year of lobbying efforts which pitted a conglomerate of road builders, truck operators and automotive interests frequently categorized as the "highway lobby" against the administration and coalition of governors, mayors, environmentalists and transit groups.

The effort to open up the fund had been endorsed by President Nixon. But there were major defections in the Republican ranks as the vote broke along urban-rural rather than party lines.

The House bill would authorize significant expenditures for mass transit but not at the expense of the trust fund. Among other things, it would authorize $3 billion in general tax revenues for construction of rapid transit systems.

U.S. Calls Foul, May Withhold Viet Aid

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States has stopped observing two key provisions of the Vietnam cease-fire agreement, saying North Vietnam has failed to live up to all parts of the settlement.

In separate announcements Thursday, the Pentagon and the State Department said mine-clearing operations by the U.S. Navy in North Vietnamese waters has been halted and the chief American delegate to a joint U.S.-North Vietnamese economic commission had been called home from Paris.

By pulling Maurice Williams out of the Paris talks on an American economic aid program, the United States has halted its effort at carrying out Article 21 of the Jan. 27 cease-fire agreement.

That provision pledges that "the United States will contribute to healing the wounds of war and to postwar reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam."

By suspending the mine sweeping operations, the United States is no longer complying with Article 2 of the Paris agreement, which states:

"The United States will remove, permanently deactivate or destroy all the mines in the territorial waters, ports, harbors and waterways of North Vietnam as soon as this agreement goes into effect."

U.S. officials acknowledge these are violations, but they charge the North Vietnamese and their allies started the trouble by choosing those provisions of the settlement they would observe.

Government officials would not say the American actions, or even the alleged continuous violations by Hanoi, indicated the peace agreement was in imminent jeopardy.

"The two actions today are similar to the bombing of Laos this week," one source said. "They are efforts to convince the Communists we mean business, not that we have given up on the agreement."

This official expressed the hope that Hanoi will realize it has tested President Nixon's will to its limit and will begin full observance.

State Department spokesman Charles W. Bray said that whether the agreement can be saved "is entirely a function of the actions of the other side."

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-The United States has suspended minesweeping operations off North Vietnam in an effort to force a halt to fighting in South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

It also halted economic talks with the North Vietnamese in Paris and threatened to cut off proposed economic assistance for North Vietnam's postwar recovery. Secretary of State William P. Rogers said in Washington that unless Hanoi fully honors the Vietnam peace agreement, the Nixon administration will drop plans to ask Congress for reconstruction assistance.

While Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim spoke of the Communist side's failure to respect the unilateral cease-fire declared by the government of Cambodia as one reason for suspending the minesweeping, reports from Phnom Penh told of continuing attacks by Communist-backed forces.

A Phnom Penh dispatch said North Vietnamese-led troops again closed Highway 4, Phnom Penh's only link to the deep-water port of Kompong Som. The U.S.-built road had been reopened only 10 days ago.

All the major roadways from Phnom Penh have been cut by North Vietnamese and insurgent Cambodian forces in an apparent drive to strangle Phnom Penh and force the collapse of the government of President Lon Nol.

The initial disclosure that the United States had halted the sweeping of mines came from the North Vietnamese Foreign Ministry. A statement carried by Hanoi's official Vietnam News Agency said the action was taken unilaterally two days before and the U.S. task force had withdrawn from the coast.

The United States agreed in signing the Vietnam cease-fire agreement in Paris on Jan. 27 to remove the mines. They were seeded in North Vietnamese waters last May in retaliation of a North Vietnamese troop incursion into South Vietnam across the demilitarized zone that separates the two Vietnams.

The North Vietnamese Foreign Ministry said the U.S. suspension is evidence of a "premeditated" plan to prolong the sea blockade of North Vietnam.

Chou Wants End To Arms Race

By CHARLES GREEN
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP)-Prime Minister Chou En-lai on Thursday urged the United States and the Soviet Union, for the sake of all people, to support "the final elimination" of nuclear arms.

"We advocate the complete prohibition of nuclear arms," Chou told newsmen. "In reality, it is the two superpowers that possess the solution to this problem for the benefit of the people."

In a talk with reporters covering the state visit of President Luis Echeverria of Mexico, Chou said the Chinese Communist party leader, Mao Tse-tung, is in good health and will meet with Echeverria. The meeting is expected to be on Saturday.

The Chinese prime minister said "we have no difficulty" in signing the Treaty of Tlaltelolco banning nuclear weapons in Latin America. But he did not appear to be a departing from China's position that it would sign the 1967 treaty only if all other nuclear powers sign without restrictions.

"...We were very clear in giving our support to this idea of a zone free of nuclear arms," Chou declared. "Furthermore, every time we have made nuclear tests, we have declared that never will we be the first country to make use of the nuclear tests. Because of this there exists no problem with you, Mexico, and therefore we have no difficulty in signing the treaty."

Echeverria was welcome to Peking with the most colorful and warmest greeting he has received in any of the six countries visited so far on his month-long world trip.

Thousands of people-one Mexican estimate put the number at 100,000-lined the streets waving and applauding as Echeverria was driven from the airport to his official residence.

At the airport, Mexico's first lady recognized some members of a Chinese acrobatic troupe that had performed last month in Mexico. She kissed one of the young girl acrobats.

When the motorcade moved up Peking's main street, thousands of bicyclists waved and tinkled their bells in welcome.

Secret Client Hid Watergate Documents

WASHINGTON (AP)—Eight cartons of documents, including plans to bug the Watergate, were removed from the White House complex and hidden away by an unidentified employe of the Nixon campaign, court papers said today.

The cartons of documents were said to include lists of campaign donors and the contents of the Executive Office Building desk of E. Howard Hunt, one of the Watergate conspirators.

These statements were contained in a petition filed by attorney Peter H. Wolf, who asked Chief U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica for an order allowing him to keep secret the name of his client—the person who allegedly hid the records.

Wolf said he had told federal prosecutors about the documents last summer, shortly after the burglary and wiretapping of Democratic offices. But Asst. U.S. Atty. Earl Silbert called the allegation "preposterous" and said he had learned of the documents "only a few days ago."

Wolf said his client was employed by the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, and that he was asked the day after the Watergate breakin last June 17 to pick up the cartons at the Executive Office Building, adjacent to the White House.

Wolf said his client no longer has the documents because he turned them back, he said, to the Nixon campaign. Some of these documents are now residing under lock and key in the federal courthouse, where they are tied up in a lawsuit between the Nixon campaign and Common Cause, a self-styled citizens' lobby.

'Hello From Corkscrew'-Losers' Network

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)-"Corkscrew here. Good evening network."

"This is Little Squirrel and I'm looking for a feminine voice."

"Hello from Corkscrew."

"Oh, Corkscrew, this is Little Squirrel and you've got no psychology whatsoever."

Nervous voices. Assured voices. Droning voices. There are always voices on the network, lonely people who have given themselves code names on the parallel telephone circuit that has grown up in the technological morass of the French telecommunications system.

It is part of the losers' Paris, Paree triste, the other side of chestnut blossom posters and the Gay Paree excursion boats on the Seine.

What the losers have found out is that if you dial a non-working number in the Paris system all the people who call it can have individual or group conversations over the sound of a recording that murmurs on and on. "The number you have reached is not a working number."

There is a faint rush of titillation as a masculine voice talks briefly to one that at least sounds feminine. They call themselves Titus and the Queen of Sheba. "Can't hear you so well," Titus says, fighting through a babel of other voices. "Call me directly on my private number. Now Sheba, take this down."

Nixon Wants HUD Money City-Controlled

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon urged Congress Thursday to enact a program designed to permit local officals to spend community development funds free of federal interference.

Nixon sent Congress a measure which would replace seven categorical grant programs administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development with a $2.3 billion-a-year program of shared revenues for cities, urban counties and states.

The President said in a March 8 message to Congress that the legislation would replace such "inflexible and fragmented" programs as Model Cities and Urban Renewal.

He said the special revenue sharing measure, first of four he plans to submit, also would "reduce the excessive federal control that has been so frustrating to local government."

"Local officials should be able to focus their time, their resources and their talents on meeting local needs and producing results, instead of trying to please Washington with an endless torrent of paperwork," said Nixon.

The special revenue sharing legislation would end Urban Renewal, Model Cities, Neighborhood Facilities, Water and Sewer Grants, Open Space and Historic Preservation, Rehabilitation Loans and Public Facility Loans.

Other HUD programs, including housing and community planning, would be unaffected.

Funds already available will be used until then to maintain and support community development.

The proposed legislation provides that the funds be turned over directly to local governments. The funds would be allocated by a formula on the basis of need based primarily on three priorities-poverty, population and overcrowded housing.

Nixon said the measure would provide funds for many communities not reached under present HUD programs.

James T. Lynn, presidential counselor on community development, told newsmen that under the bill every community is guaranteed that it would not receive less cash under revenue sharing than it now collects under programs to be ended.

One major feature of the proposed legislation is that localities and states no longer would be required to submit a separate and complex application which must be reviewed and approved for technical conformity by one or more levels of federal officials.

The National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors said they are in basic agreement with consolidating narrow categorical programs into broad block grant arrangements. But they said there are some substantitive disagreements with the President which will be spelled out after a full examination of the measure.

An Unexpected Vacation...

AYER, Mass. (AP)—The School Committee in an emergency meeting Thursday closed its schools to 1,300 Ft. Devens students until President Nixon releases appropriated funds.

Mrs. Barbara B. Nickerson, school committee chairman, read a statement after a four-hour executive session with selectmen, attorneys, the town treasurer and representatives of Ft. Devens.

The statement had four parts:

—All Ayer schools will be closed next week to allow for emergency rescheduling of classes.

—Schools will reopen the following Monday, April 30, for students who reside in Ayer, including children of the military and for native students from Shirley.

—Effective April 30, the Ayer school committee shall no longer assume responsibility for the education of children residing on Ft. Devens proper.

—Effective April 30, about half of the professional staff, left out of 101, shall be dismissed for the remainder of the current school year per contract agreement as a result of a decrease in the number of pupils in the Ayer system.

The affected teachers have been notified in advance.

Nearly 70 per cent of the 1,300 school children in Ayer are dependents of military personnel at the army base, most of whom pay no property tax to run the schools.

To compensate, the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare traditionally has paid the local school systems to educate the youngsters through federal assistance in Federally affected areas.

Three separate Forth-Seventh Amendments have been suspended by the Nixon administration along with money for other federal programs.

Richardson Sees No Reversal In Base Closing Decision

NEWTON, Mass. (AP)—Defense Secretary Elliot L. Richardson said Thursday he "would hold out very little hope" for reversal of decisions to close New England military bases.

Richardson said New England bases were particularly hard hit by this week's closure announcement because "the facilities in New England were to a large extent older than those in other parts of the country."

"That meant that without very substantial additional investments they could not be adapted to the requirements of the intermediate and long-range future," he said.

Richardson spoke at a news conference prior to addressing the annual meeting of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts.

He said the base closings could "become kind of a catalyst for industrial progress for New England."

He said $2.7 million will be available to the Economic Adjustment Committee to help communities hit by the base closings. Other types of assistance will be available for development, he said.

Richardson said much of the planning for the base closure had been completed before he became defense secretary. But he said he took personal responsibility for making the final review.

He described the decision to close the Boston Navy Yard and the Newport, R.I., navy base as "two of the very toughest" he had to make.

"Once I had come to the conclusion that the Navy had conscientiously sought to arrive at the right answers, there really wasn't anything that I could or should do," he said.

"If I had intervened in the sense of saying, 'Well, I don't care what your reasons are, I'm from Massachusetts and I'm going to step these things,' I would be in an indefensible position as the head of a national agency."

Richardson said the decision to declare military bases as surplus has not yet been made but suggested "some time in June."

He said it was "not in question" that the Boston Navy Shipyard will be declared excess and that much of the property at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee will be available for non-military use.

Richardson said he believed the report on Chicopee of closing Westover will not be "all that great."

He said, "There is a very good chance, specifically in the case of Westover, that the availability of facilities at the field for utilization by private industry can bring about more opportunity for the community."

Connecticut To Restore Death Penalty

By JAMES CARRIER
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD (AP)-The Connecticut legislature voted Thursday to restore the death penalty in hopes of discouraging six types of murder.

After hearing pleas to protect law-abiding innocents, the senate voted 191-7, the minimum required to pass the Act. Gov. Thomas J. Meskill said he would sign it.

Opponents contended the measure was unconstitutional and morally wrong.

The bill would establish six capital crimes for which death could be imposed:

—The murder of a policeman, county detective, sheriff, constable, special policeman, a correction official of fireman, when the victim in on duty.

—Murder committed for pay or murder committed by someone who is hired by the defendant.

—Murder committed by someone previously convicted of murder.

—Murder committed by someone under sentence of life imprisonment.

—Murder by a kidnapper of a kidnapped person before the victim is returned to safety.

—The death of someone from cocaine, heroin or methadone if sold by a non-addicted pusher.

Once guilt is decided, a jury or court then would rule whether to impose the death penalty according to guidelines in the act.

The death penalty would not be imposed if the defendant was under 18, was mentally impaired, was under unusual duress, if his participation was minor or if he could not foresee that his conduct would lead to the death of someone.

If none of those "mitigating" circumstances was involved, the court would examine "aggravating" circumstances, any one of which would lead to automatic execution.

The aggravating circumstances include murders committed in flight from a felony, in especially heinous or depraved manner or if the defendant was paid to murder.

The bill is effective Oct. 1.

Fertilizer

Dear Friends,

This letter is being sent to you because we know you are critically interested in your front lawn and the summer season will soon be upon us.

This is a fertilizer club and it will not cost you a scent to join.

Upon receipt of this letter, go to the address at the top of this list and shit on the front lawn. You won't be the only one there, so don't be embarrassed.

Then make five copies of this letter and send to five of your friends who appreciate good lawns.

You will not get any money or checks, but within one week, if this chain is not broken, there will be 9,216 people shitting on your front lawn. Your reward will come next summer when you will have the greenest lawn in your neighborhood.

You Have To Be Sick

I've done it. I've found a place on campus where you can get some peace and quiet for a few days. You're allowed to lie in bed all day long--in fact, that's about all you can do there. And you get served three hot meals a day--in bed, of course. Your sheets and linens are changed for you every morning, plus you get a fresh pair of P.J.s every day you are there. Your bed is much more comfortable than the one in your dorm; it even cranks up to a sitting position. Not to mention the transistor radio in the wall next to your bed, and a cord to pull whenever you want service. Every morning, your room is completely cleaned and disinfected. Your mother may have picked up your room for you, but this place has a whole lot of mothers waiting on you, hands and feet.

Basically, it's a good place to become lazy. And besides, I'm one of the laziest people I know. On top of it all, your presence in this place automatically qualifies you for having a legitimate excuse for cutting all your classes. There is, of course, one catch. To be able to get into this place, you have to be sick.

The UMass Infirmary. It's supposed to be one of the best college infirmaries in the country. It's the only infirmary I've ever had the pleasure to make use of, but in all honesty, I'd have to say I couldn't imagine anything too much better. I blessed the nurses there with my presence for two whole weeks. Imagine the sheer bliss of doing nothing for two weeks but sleeping and eating and going to the bathroom (which, I forgot to mention, was only a few short feet from my bed). All the creature comforts, the foundations of our civilization. And for people who also insist on getting high, I've found there are a few pain killers they have which can do the trick quite effectively.

Well, friends, the whol deal sounds pretty nice, but I must confess that you can enjoy it all for only so long. You see, not only do you have to be sick to get it, but, believe it or not, you have to be sick to enjoy doing nothing but lying in bed all day long. One of the things that goes hand in hand with being ill, is not being anything else–not being ambitious enough to read your English assignments, not being strong enough to stroll up and down the corridor, etc. So you tend to amuse yourself by laying your head on your pillow and dozing between meals. I think the word is "lethargic".

I promised to mention some of my friends in this column, and here's the appropriate place to do so. Gail, Helinka, and Yvonne brought me some neat Bubble Blowing stuff, which left millions of little pink dots on my sheets. George and Mona brought me a wallet-size portrait of President Nixon and Tootsie Rolls, which I'm not sure was in my diet. Jill brought me some wine, which I'm sure wasn't in my diet. Steve brought me my books and toothbrush. Al brought me my mail. Andy, Arlene, Chris, Penelope, Galen, Gabe, Don, Karen, Bob, Janet, Joyce, and Jan, and all the doctors and nurses who never failed to maintain their sense of humor, brought me good cheer.

The most embarassing part of being in the Infirmary was having it publicized in Editorial Points, but my friends say I loved it, so maybe I did. It just goes to show that nothing is sacred anymore--not even rare diseases. And for those that have to come into close contact with me: no, it's not contagious.

Just so that everyone on campus doesn't dash to the Infirmary tomorrow and try to get admitted, I better mention some of the not-so-pleasant aspects of being a patient there. For one, you can get bored as hell. Once you start feeling a little better, you don't feel like sleeping 20 hours a day, and there's really not too much else to do. You can try the TV room, but all they've got to offer is a million and one jugsaw puzzles. There's a couple of checkerboards, but no chess or checkerpieces, for some odd reason. You can find a lot of books and magazines in there, but it's mostly Readers' Digests and Newsweeks from 1971. The TV gets only a few channels, none of them very well, but who likes to watch TV anyway? Personally, rather sleep.

If you're not sleeping, you're eating. And if you are sleeping, then you can be sure that some nurse will wake you up to take your temperature or give you a sleeping pill.

Everyone asks me how the meals are in there, and I tell them they're about the same as the Dining Commons, for all practical purposes. The big attraction is you don't have to wait in line to get them; they're served to you in bed. Plus, I was getting three meal a day, and I only have a two-meal ticket, for what that's worth.

Eventually, it gets to the point where you realize that maybe this isn't the greatest thing in the world, and maybe you are getting a little behind in all your classes. And when some of your friends visit you and tell you how warm it's getting outside, and how everyone is out by the campus pond throwing Frisbees and taking in the sunshine, then you begin to wonder what you're doing cooped up in the Infirmary.

As Jean put it, "You enjoyed being in the Infirmary that whole time? Man, you have to be sick!"

That's R-a-g-i-n

It is only necessary to point out the mistakes of others when those mistakes have consequences reaching beyond those they were meant to have, or when the mistake is made in arrogance, or in other situations that don't apply here. Stay with me a minute.

Steve Fine, Matt Tackeff, members of the Electoral College: The name is Ragin, not Rigan. Henry Ragin has never been President or Chairman or any of those other extremely impressive shticks as his opponents have been; he is the one candidate who can least affort to have his name mis-spelt.

Robert Frazier, I strongly suspect you of being an asshole. Bob Estelle has been a sports writer for the Collegian all year, whereas he has been a colunist only this semester. What I believe happened is that Bob finally decided two letters to the editor a week was a little silly, and he moved from the letters page to the editorial page while remaining on the sports page. Bob Estelle's sports articles are free of political diatribe, and I for one don't think anyone should discourage him from writing sports, particularly when you seem to dislike his editorials so much. The man's name, by the way, is Robert Welch, and if you continue to take the Birch Society seriously, it probably won't go away as quickly as it will if you dismiss it as an amusing group of harmless paranoids. Please, Mr. Frazier, if you are going to drop names in a supercilious fashion, at least get the names right.

The process is nearing completion, and it's too late to do anything about it until next spring, but it is unfortunate that the next President of S.G.A. will be elected by an electoral college rather than by the Student Body. This is so because those of us who voted in the referendum preferred to defer to student leader types on this question. This should not have happened.

If these words are passing your eye, you undoubtedly read the Collegian, which daily bears witness to the stupidity and incompetence of student leaders. The Campus Center Board of Governors, the Student Senate Committees, the Southwest Assembly, any organization of students who are supposed to represent students, have demonstrated time and time again that at their best, they are incapable of significant activity on behalf of students other than in the parceling of money which was taken from those students earlier. It is from Student Government that the new President will come, all electors being members of Area Governments and the Student Senate. Perhaps, with all the tax loopholes to protect and generations to pacify the United States needs a paractical man to head the government, but on a college campus, where the race against death is being run by twenty-one thousand of us, it is wrong to let those who take student government seriously have all the say in who shall be S.G.A. President. One good yippie could make student government exciting again. When was the last time you were pissed off at Student Government? When did it last make you laugh favorably at something it had done?

Student government needs to be opened up, or shut down. The debate which is conducted at government meetings is absurd. It gives the people involved something to do, but in the process fails to break up the sludge accumulation which inactivity on behalf of an unspoken noble purpose always creates. This year there has been a big struggle to hold the S.A.T.F. down below a certain already outrageous figure, and many semantic hairs were split trying to establish truth as to who should receive the sacred S.A.T.F. money. Obviously, it should be redistributed so that the people who pay the tax get something they want for their mony or not collected at all.

Monday night the New President will receive a mandate from other student bureaucrats to carry on the Parkinsonian task all S.G.A. Presidents must do in order to get paid and receive Trustee Plates from the Registry of Motor Vehicles. Some decent people have gone into and come out of the job, but none of them have felt other than frustration and relief on the night his term ended.

Next year, the question should be put to referendum again, and students should take it upon themselves to say who they want, if they want the job to exist. In the meantime, a high first ballot vote for Henry Ragin would demonstrate a level of sanity previously undetected among the majority of the electors, and if Henry has to lose, as I fear he must under the present system, then hopefully Nick Apostola will not only be elected but stay sane for his term of office. Hoa binh.

Head Ed Still Rising

By Bill Densmore

When UMass School of Education Dean Dwight W. Allen floated aloft last Monday for a one-hour $450 balloon ride, his expressed purpose was to "show that serious educational effort can be pursued lightheartedly."

The balloon ride, and a committment to enjoyable education may seem insignificant, but for Allen the importance of both is academic. Because for Allen this week's education "marathon" of innovative educational ideas is a special success.

Last spring, and again last fall, a group calling itself the Third World Alliance occupied the buildings where the marathon was to be held and forced its cancellation.

Following the two confrontations were several weeks of negotiations with the black and Spanish-speaking protesters, always centered on charges that Allen's school, despite its minority recruitment programs, was racist.

For the 42-year-old Californian who taught 9 years at Stanford before coming to UMass, "it hasn't been very much fun around here in the last year," in his own words.

What does Allen think about those two confrontations? What has he accomplished in his five years as UMass "ed head"? Has he changed education since he took over an undistinguished teachers' school and made it "one of the top schools of education" in the country? What is the financial picture for next year?

With a total enrollment of 1,247 at the School of Education, there are far more minority students on a percentage basis than at the University as a whole, according to Allen.

"Am I Dean of all the school or am I Dean of the white students?" he points out, adding that "an administrator is doing his own thing on behalf of a lot of other people" and cannot spend all his time worrying about the needs of a particular group.

"Anytime you deal with minorities or women it has to be done in such a way that's not patronizing," according to Allen. "There are people who very honestly believe there should be self determination for minorities–I don't."

Short Takes

A new movie theatre, "The Glove," is set to open in early May on Pleasant Street in Northampton, according to partners Stephen Brown and Dennis Curran, who have just leased the building formerly occupied by "The Talkie."

Brown and Dennis, both 24 and recent college graduates, plan to show "good old films," catering to a young crowd and families. They expect to show movies that people might have seen before and would like to see again, such as "It happened One Night," with Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable, set for one of the early engagements.

Brown says they are also interested in screening good recent films, especially foreign movies that people might not have had a chance to see, mentioning "The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie" as an example.

The two young men are redecorating the theatre in the style of the 1930's, with authentic old theatre seats reupholstered in a flowered Victorian pattern. The overall color scheme will be maroon and cream. They hope to create an atmosphere of casual and lively fun to go with the features, and will serve coffee to encourage socializing.

Brown and Dennis plan to open The Glove seven days a week for two showings, possibly three if a matinee draws audiences, especially during the summer. Both were involved in film societies when they were in college, Brown at University of Virginia and Curran, at University of California at Riverside. They do not expect that the film at the Five Colleges will offer too much competition.

Last week the Jerry Lewis Cinema of Northampton announced its closing. The owners cited small audiences and trouble with the projectionist union which insisted they employ a projectionist as well as a manager. With modern equipment, the manager could show the films, said one of the principals, allowing the theatre to break even on a small audience.

The State Department charged yesterday that the film "State of Siege" besmirched the life of Dan Mitrione, an American police adviser who was slain in Uruguay by guerrilas in 1970. The film describes in documentary fashion the story of an American adviser in a Latin-American country who participated in police torture and brutality and is slain by rebels. It was reputed to be based roughly on Mr. Mitrione's life.

Charles Bray, a State Department spokesman, said the film "quite unjustly besmirches and blackens" the life of Mr. Mitrione. He added that no State Department official or representative of the Agency for International Development had participated in torture or condoned police brutality of any kind. Mr. Mitrione, whose death was called "a despicable act" by the White House, was employed by A.I.D. to help modernize the Uruguayan police, the department said.

"State of Siege," directed by Constantin Costa-Gavras, recently stirred controversy when it was banned after first being accepted for showing at the American Film Institute festival in Washington.

"They Need Love, They Get Angry, They Bleed," a documentary report on conditions at the Belchertown, Mass., State School for retarded children and adults will be repeated on WTIC-TV Friday, April 20, at 7 p.m. The program, first shown on January 22, will contain an updated report.

The program documents conditions that are, in the words of a suit that has been filed against the state by parents or residents, "shockingly oppressive, unsanitary, unhealthy and degrading." It points up conditions that contribute to the repression, rather than the improvement of individuals entrusted to the care of the Belchertown staff.

Up On The Hill

Orchard Hill, for many of us, is just a space on the map, situated on the drumlin behind the Infirmary. Living there would be a hassle because you have to walk up and down the hill every–time you wanted to eat or go to class. Busses have eliminated some of the problem, but the Hill still seems like foreign part of the campus. In hopes of making the area a more inviting place to live, some people at Orchard Hill have written a primer for dormitory living in the Orchard.

Beatles Greatest Hits

For a group that broke up years ago, the Beatles are certainly getting a lot of attention lately. First off, Steve Feld reviews their recently released Greatest Hits albums in the first of a two-part series. Paul McCartney had his own television special this week. It receives a blow-by-blow (so to speak) description and analysis, which concludes that the dream is indeed over. Ike and Tina Turner and Ry Cooder played the area this preceeding week, and we got the dope (so to speak) on those. Not to forget our Album Inquest wnich features Todd Rundgren, Led Zeppelin and Bill Quateman.

Danse Macabre

What you haven't seen "Last Tango In Paris" yet? It's a bit too early for that remark, but give it some time. The film has recently opened at Ben Sack's Cheri Comnlex, Boston being the third maior city to luckily exhibit a print of this much--discussed film. Bernardo Bertolucci's film concerns the sexual liason between a middle-aged American and a young, hip French girl who meet in an abandoned apartment for a number of afternoons. Bertolucci's film has been hailed as one of the finest ever made or accomplete hype, pornography disguised as art. For our assessment, see page twenty-one.

On our right is another montage; if last week's quiz didn't feel you, this week-nonsland news account just might. On page twelve is a review of an entertaining new novel called "Cops and Robbers" which appears to make a wonderful scenario for a film. Ever wonder what's the leading recreation area on campus? Most you believe the Campus Pond—well it certainly isn't Horse Hall. For the scoop as to what's happening on, in, and around the mond, see page fifteen.

It's Good News Week, Kiddies

And Next Week, The Comics!

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

Trying ever so desperately to feel the pulse of the college student at UMass, we have found this campus to be littered with dead beats.

But that isn't to say we didn't get any responses from our questionnaire of two weeks ago. We got nearly 25 replies, not bad for a campus with 20,000 students. And most of the people concurred with our hypothesis concerning continuing disinterest in news. Most agreed that being so far removed from issues of national importance breeds apathy.

Some people wanted to hear more about ITT, racism, how local politics relates to national pelitics, assassinations of political figures, how much work politicians actually do, and Latin America. One person even wanted to hear more about Watergate.

But the underwhelming lack of replies to our questionnaire underlined your stout disinterestedness. So we hit you with a quiz about national politics. And oh yes, for those who got 10 out of 11missing only number 1, there was a mistake on the answer key. The answer to question one was Senator Ervin, not Senator Muskie. So go back and correct our mistake. Make sure you do it; our quiz might be the only multiple choice test at college that you'll get a perfect score on.

Respondents were split pretty evenly concerning those who most wanted to read a satire, vs. those preferring an in-depth news analysis. But we think we've come up with something better than the two.

Yep, even the most conscientious of news-seekers have missed a story or two in their day. Here we offer a bundle of little specials that you just might have passed over.

SANTA FE, N.M. Feb. 8 - The New Mexico House voted yesterday to repeal an old law allowing a husband to shoot and kill his wife's lover if he catches the two in bed together. The vote was 61 to 6.

SALISBURY, Rhodesia - A judge known never to have driven a car was asked how he coped with auto accident cases in court. "It's really no handicap," he replied. "I also try rape cases."

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. - Michael Hines is looking for people with two right feet. A recent fire in his shoe store destroyed the entire stock of left foot shoes, leaving him with more than 12,000 right foot shoes.

URBANA, Ill. - Michael Murphy, a University of Illinois student, returned to his campus apartment following a vacation to find his record turntable bad, in his absence, acquired a new set of speakers and an amplifier.

A note, unsigned, gave the reason for the added equipment. The writer said he had stolen the turntable after breaking into Mr. Murphy's room. But the burglar became conscience-stricken and returned the turntable along with an amplifier and two speakers to "complete the set."

The burglar assured Mr. Murphy the equipment was not "hot."

It Would Make A Good Movie

By Carl Greenberg

Cops and Robbers
by Donald E. Westlake
Evans

Donald Westlake has written sixteen novels and the best of them are also among the funniest suspense novels around. Westlake's forte, in his novels, is his ability to create a truly funny line out of common situations or mock-serious situations of his own creation. He is a master of understatement. He will spend pages putting his hero in deadly danger and then top it off with a statement from the hero saying something like "I was getting a bit unhappy".

Cops and Robbers, his latest, is a bit unusual. It is a good deal more serious than most of his other work and the funny lines, which are Westlake's trademark, are not nearly as numerous as in some of his other books such as God Save the Mark or Bank Shot. They are so deeply imbedded in Cops and Robbers that even fans of Westlake may pass over them in eagerness. "Eagerness" because, while this may not be Westlake's funniest book, it is one of his most compulsively readable ones.

Not only do the heros of this book plot to steal $10,000,000 worth of bearer bonds from a Wall Street firm, but they plan on selling them to the Mafia so that they can turn them into cash. The reader really is eager to find out how they plan to do all this and how they plan to get away. The robbery plan doesn't have to be perfect for Westlake to write a good novel, it just has to be crazy. The plot is crazy, though not as crazy as the plot in Bank Shot where the heros steal an entire mobile trailer bank branch, and provides Westlake with the opportunity to develop the situations that he is best at, something like semi-slapstick.

But the big difference in this novel is that there is a serious undertone to the whole book. Westlake digs deeper than he has before into the minds and motivations of his characters. Why do they want to go through all the trouble and risk? Are their dreams of life in Trinidad that powerful? It turns out that once they realize that their position as cops could help them immensely when it comes to doing things illegal, they take note of just how badly they hate the city, the traffic, the crazy people, the filth, and how much they hate their jobs, the danger, the thanklessness, the grind.

Westlake goes to great lengths to make the reader feel just how horrible their existence is. He even seems to have structured the whole book with this in mind. Usually Westlake makes himself the character and narrates the story in the first person, or else writes a whole book in a third person narrative. In Cops and Robbers it's both. Each of the two heros takes turns telling his own view of things and interspersed is straight narrative. Westlake may be trying to say that the view that his two characters have of their lives is a true one and deserve the backing that his narration gives them.

Another consideration that may have been running through Westlake's mind as he wrote Cops and Robbers, is the movie money. Many authors write their novels with the specific intention of trying to sell it later to a movie company. That is probably not the case with Westlake, especially since Hollywood has not, in recent years, made many movies of the type that Westlake's books are actually quite well suited for.

Recently, though, one of Westlake's books was made into a movie - The Hot Rock (from the book of the same title). It was a moderate success and can fairly be described as something similar to the more successful What's Up Doc?

Movie makers don't seem to want to make that kind of movie anymore. A simple, light, funny comedy seems to be out of the range of possibilities in film today. Perhaps filmmakers are getting wary of attempting comedy since critics are so hard to please and so powerful.

If a movie's going to be funny nowadays, it also must have a message. At least if it's going to get produced. Movies like The Hot Rock and What's Up Doc? are rather rare. Perhaps Westlake wrote in the horror of the City to give Cops and Robbers a better chance at making it in the movie world.

While Cops and Robbers would make a good movie, others of Westlake would make just as good.

The publishers especially seem to want to push Westlake as a writer who writes books for the movies. The cover of Cops and Robbers has two actual photos of guys who look just like the heros of the book. It almost seems a demonstration for the movie makers on how easy it is to put the contents of the book on film.

The publishers don't even seem to be interested in selling much of Westlake's other books. They say he has written sixteen books, but nowhere do they list them. They only mention three: God Save the Mark, The Hot Rock, and Bank Shot. Perhaps others, like Spy in the Ointment, Busy Body, or Killing Time are already out of print.

The View From The Hill

It used to be the experimental orchard of the Massachusetts Agricultural College. Then in the early 1960's Hugh Stubbins designed a quadrangle of large, angular dormitories which together could house a student population as large as Amherst college. There was a delay in their completion during which time a group of faculty, concerned over the growing depersonalization of the University of Massachusetts, prevailed upon the administration to adapt the four dorms into an experiemental residential college.

Four of the forty-eight corridor lounges were made into faculty apartments. The remaining forty-four plus four commodious main lounges gradually became centers for education in student residences. Sections of introductory courses were taught in the dorms - as many as fifty or sixty a semester.

In addition to the faculty residents, Preceptors and Faculty Fellows volunteered to identify with the four houses - each of which was named for an Amherst writer - Emily Dickinson, Eugene Field, David Grayson, and Noah Webster. Together they constitute Orchard Hill.

The Hill began as an experiment. It has influenced the rest of the campus. In its eight plus years it remains innovative, controversial, constantly questioning itself and the university and in turn being questioned.

A residential college means faculty and students residing in the same dormitories. Jefferson designed such a set-up for the University of Virginia. Harvard and Yale, copying Oxford and Cambridge, do it well.

The UMass. experiment is more modest--One faculty resident for each 320 students. There has been turnover. The quad can become noisy - especially with the marvelous balconies. But the place has charm, the tall pine trees at the west end and the bowl in the middle, surrounded by fifteen adolescent maples. And increasingly Orchard Hill students share the concerns of community-making in the 1970's.

Although the Hill doesn't have a Dining facility of its own, each dorm has use of a dining room on the main campus for its weekly dorm dinner - traditionally the easiest way for faculty and students to meet one another outside class. Before dorm dinner, faculty residents frequently have an open house. Every Wednesday Webster, where Luther Allen of the Political Science Department has lived since the founding of Orchard Hill, has "Cider and Cheese." Everyone is welcome and while neighbors of the second floor are the most loyal and numerous, there are always contingents from some other floors and occasionally from other houses on the hill.

The inter action between faculty and students takes many different forms, depending on the style and interests of residents. The range extends from foreign languages to engineering. What is shared is concern for the fullest dimensions of student life, a broad and constantly redefined meaning to education.

In the early years Orchard Hill stressed extra-curricular forums and concerts. Since 1968 student participation in the building of educational programs indiginous to the Hill has become a dominant trend. Thus GREAT DECISIONS is now but one of the many colloquia available to students. During the January intercession it took the form of a three credit intensive course during which students presented live panels to a group of community leaders in Springfield and over Channel 22 TV. The moderator, Luther Allen, has conducted this series of public affairs issues for seven years, tying together a national educational program of the Foreign Policy Association and its up to date pamphlet materials with Orchard Hill sponsorship of seven weekly programs. Each has a panel of experts from the five college area. Students ask questions and make comments. Often there is controversy, especially on the recurrent topic dealing with the Middle East. Interest in Vietnam is dwindling but the ecology panels have attracted growing concern. The programs are broadcast live from the main lounpe of Webster House over the five-college educational radio station, WFCR.

Student-faculty deliberations over the development of Orchard Hill educational programs occur in weekly meetings of the Hill's Academic Policy Committee. House Councils have long been active on the Hill. The Area Government was a characteristic Hill innovation, now at least four years old and very active and strong. The Area Director (Jim West) and the Academic Administrative Assistant (Allen Davis) are regularly in attendance despite the late hours OHAG keeps. OHAG gave birth to the Academic Policy Committee, originally a participatory student-faculty group, now elected with strong student, staff and faculty representation. It plans and approves new courses and colloquia, combining strongly felt needs and interests of the community with striking spontaneity and dispatch.

Curtis Johnson of the School of Engineering is an Orchard Hill faculty resident. Prof. Johnson has been teaching an Orchard Hill course that is engaged in planning and executing the construction of a much needed additional building for Orchard Hill. It will take the form of a geodesic dome - hopefully the first of a series that together will meet expanding needs- to be constructed by Orchard Hill students and paid for by Orchard Hill Area Government.

Over the past year Orchard Hill has played host to a number of important musicians, among them Jaki Byard, Gary Burton, Larry Coryell, Byard Lancaster with J.R. Mitchell, The Art Ensemble of Boston, Webster Lewis, Andy McGhee, Koko Taylor and Mighty Joe Young. One of the highlights of the Hill's January semester was the performance of bassist Jimmy Garrison with Ray Appleton, Charles McPherson, and Donald Blackman, the instructor of the "Black Music" workshop during January.

The January semester, in which 175 students and over twenty faculty members participated, was organized according to a number of Areas, or themes. Each one generated a more general morning session, as well as specialized afternoon workshops.

The January semester also included the Great Decisions class already mentioned, and an introductory Photography workshop.

The January semester reflected what have become dominant academic interests on the Hill, while serving as a gestation period, an opportunity to grow in new directions and consolidate what there already was. Very much in keeping with the Hill's eagerness to take risks, experiment with new ways of learning and living, this program has several important lessons for the rest of the campus: given the opportunity, faculty members can be attracted to innovative programs, even during the winter hiatus; learning can be full of joy - the energy level during this session was impressive; and the success of this kind of program depends very heavily on its concentrated and residential nature, where intellectual pursuits are close to the concerns of community members.

As a development on the January work in "Art and Society," a number of faculty and student participants have been meeting regularly in order to create a substantial, interdisciplinary program or institute located on the Hill. The climax of this work was the recent O.H.Festival of the Arts– a week-long program dedicated to exploring the relationship between art and social change. Events included a panel discussion with Tamas Aczel, Susan Sherman, Leon Barron, Acklyn Lynch and Archie Shepp, concerts by Elliot Kemin, folksong artist, and the J. R. Mitchell-Byad Lancaster Quartet, poetry readings, films, meetings with filmmakers Madeline Anderson and Susan Martin, and a lecture by the important Venezuelan painter Simon Gouveneur.

As the shape of the January term suggests, O.H. courses have increasingly tended to fall within several categories: Global Studies, Art and Society, Feminist Studies, Third World Studies, Social Thought and Action and "Miscellaneous," courses that meet general interests (such as photography, cermaics, human sexuality, etc.) Professor Lewis Hanke of the History Dept. who is currently teaching "Race Relations in Latin America," on the Hill. What stimulating, multi-dimensional courses such as Prof. Hanke's are beginning to teach people on the Hill is that strict categorization, even though the categories or clusters of courses are interdisciplinary, is at some point self-defeating.

During the Fall of 1970 O.H. offered eight of its own 390 courses; during Fall '71, 15; this semester thirty-eight courses are being offered. The movement has been from curricular anarchy, through the present attempt to organize what has been successful and important, to a growing realization that real learning refuses to be organized in the way knowledge has been fragmented. If the Hill were to continue to grow organically, it would seem likely that new curricular patterns would emerge that reflected the social problems that the new categories or clusters are now (in a more traditional way) attempting to deal with.

The Academic Policy Committee of O.H. has begun to regard the Colloquium program as an important complement to the regular academic component of the Hill. As a first step, colloquia are now considered within the context of the cluster of which they are parts. In addition to the clusters of three-credit courses, there are two other categories that apply specifically to one-credit colloquia: Health and Physical Fitness, and Skills and Crafts.

This semester there are forty-five one-credit colloquia, among which is "Introduction to Finger-Banging," the carpentry colloquium. Steve Stoia, Webster House's Head of Residence, is a regular participant in the colloquium that in many ways goes beyond the usual "skills" course program.

The colloquium is taught by University carpenters, and was proposed by people who have worked in various capacities in (what was at one time a much more visible O.H. concern) - the "Student-Labor Relations This project offered courses for non-professional University employees and U.M. undergraduates, with the goal of providing a forum in which common problems and concerns could be discovered and acted upon in a more realistic environment than the usual Post-adolescent ghettos that are our classrooms. Support for this kind of project is still strong, although the energies of its early participants have been concentrated on building a Social Thought and Action program.

he adds.

"We've brought people into the school of education who, by graduate school standards, are not admissable. How do you measure the ability of performance.

"What have I accomplished? There are a dozen major things we've dealt with that add up to a package of educational reform within the system. . . . we have succeeded in contributing to the quality of life."

"Marathon is a broad exposure at a superficial level – an attempt to find a way to allow people to know what there is to know. The carnival atmosphere is deliberate. . . I think you can have fun while accomplishing important things."

Allen said the School has:

-pointed out meaningless processes in education.

-allowed those who would traditionally be left out of the educational process easy access to relevant programs.

-make classroom teaching and learning fun.

-caused people to perceive the development of interpersonal relationships as an important part of learning.

He says that through the introduction of modular credit, which he pioneered at Stanford (because when he went to a teacher with a new program idea the teacher said "we can't schedule it."); experimental, "open" admissions for the candidate who feels he is qualified; and "experienced-based education" like the one-year, community action University Without Walls (UWW), a program started by the school but adopted by the University; the introduction of "differentiated staffing" which recognizes that not all teachers are alike; and alternative public schools such as one now functioning as part of the Worcester Public Schools.

A program of relevant educational reform has been created.

"But," says Allen, "you can do something pretty well but it doesn't do any good unless somebody notices it." And there is no doubt that people have noticed what's going on in Amherst.

"We are getting more applications for graduate study than Stanford or Harvard. We're finding really good people and giving them the opportunity to learn.

Staff photo/Bill Densmore

Dwight Allen. Up, Up, and Away.

Our own doctoral students are free within limits that are really related to education."

And as long as sit-ins, marathons, and balloon rides continue to burst from the low-profile buildings north of the main UMass campus, who can help but notice?

"We've developed potential -- we haven't arrived anywhere yet . . . I hope that the school five years from now isn't what it is today."

Now that he is "flying high" Allen entertains some thoughts of taking off.

"If something came along now that was exciting and challenging – I'd consider it. . . at some point its good for the school to have a change . . . its now at the point where it would be possible for me to leave without jeopardizing its development."

"I came here with a three to five year committment. I've earned the right to leave."

If Allen leaves a new Dean would have to be chosen for the school and there are several likely candidates. Dr. Harvey Scribner, recently plucked from the job as Chancellor of the New York City public schools to be a professor at the School of Education, was one speculated on most often.

But both Allen, and UMass Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern have said Scribner is not interested in being an administrator. Scribner said from New York last week that he is primarily interested in teaching.

"Maybe he (Scribner) just wants to stay here two or three years and then move on to a new mountain to conquer," Allen suggests.

There are three top administrators in the School of Education who could become Dean, according to Allen. They are Richard Clark, Assistant Dean for Undergraduates, Atron Gentry, Associate Dean for Special Programs, and Earl Seidman, the School's Associate Dean.

Allen sees no problem with federal funding for at least another year, although 60% of the school's funds are from out-of-state – an exceptionally high percentage as compared with most University departments.

"There's no problem for one more year, and then the thing that's in jeopardy is aid for students," Allen said, adding that the school has 500 students on $3,000 worth of scholarship aid each.

One reason for Allen's success as an administrator has been his ability to get both public and private monies.

"People have got to stop thinking linearly. At any one time in my day I'm working on many different things, I can't say I spend so much percentage of my time raising money."

"I may be in Boston and somebody will say something about money being available from Carnegie, and so I'll check it out."

"If you get those resources you can do a lot of things. When you don't have to worry who's gonna pay the grocery bill you have flexibility in terms of who you can accept."

If the UMass School of Education does have any financial problems, Allen plans to meet them head-on.

"I believe in in-flight correction. I'm very concerned about funding, but the bottom isn't going to fall out of our programs if we don't get it."

Your Environment

The Legacy Of The Pond

By Patrick Coffey

Welcome to your Campus Pond, Bromery Bay. This area is part of the breathing space of our University. The environmental and recreational value of this unique resource is protected because it belongs to all Umies. As the use of between classes time becomes increasingly important to the quality of our lives, we appreciate the wisdom of earlier generations of administrators who have taken the steps necessary to preserve this natural retreat on the Amherst campus.

The Chancellor recently could have said, "Among the most important legacies that we can pass on to future underclasspersons is an endowment of parklands and recreational areas, such as Bromery Bay, that will enrich leisure opportunities and make the beauties of the earth and water accessible to all UMies."

Bromery Bay not only offers many recreational opportunities, but also has been endowed with a scene of ever changing charm. Water activities such as boating, fishing, and skinny-dipping and hikes along mud paths and tar-surfaced trails; these are your reward.

In time of a storming strike it is wild, spectacular, and dramatic; always it is beautiful to behold and fascinating to study. On the outer section of the pond, banks and cliffs of sand, gravel, and clay, up to 17.5 inches high, rise from the beach. In contrast to the nearby busy campus which seethes with activity, the Pond is a sea of tranquility. Plant life is more abundant in off-the-beaten-track areas, with luxuriant grass in some places. Besides coniferous and hardwood upland forests, biotic zones include muddy beach, tidal flats, marshes, tributary drain pipes, and meandering paths. Flocks of transient swans use the pond area. In daytime they feed and rest on the beaches and at night can be found just offshore on Tip 'o the Island. Sit by the pond with us and something nice happens; toss a frisbee, try out the grass or just lay in the sun. You begin to unbend, to untighten. You start to open up, and you learn what it is to really live. To put it another way, you become, for a while at least, a Umie.

Bromery Bay is administered by the Physical Plant Grounds and Services Divisions. A superintendant, Kenny Billings, is in immediate charge. As the campus principal conservation agency, the Physical Plant has basic responsibility for water, goldfish, swans, grass, and kite flying areas. The department works to assure the wisest choice in managing all our resources so each will make its full contribution to a better U.Mass- now and in the future.

A note from the Physical Plant: obey pond regulations! Nature exists on a delicate see-saw. Interference by man can upset this teeter-tottering, so please leave mud, rocks, trees, water, and goldfish as you find them, for others to enjoy. Leave the pond where it is. Don't litter, curb your dog, and have a good day.

With the 1973 park season now in full swing, the pond is being made available for all Umies to enjoy. Yes, spring is in the air and people are in the pond. Many come to enjoy the panorama of austere beauty surrounding the balmy waters. Others came to relax on the sundrenched shores and take in the fascinating sight of Bromery Bay water sports.

Just recently a record breaking 18" rainbow trout was landed. During the winter months ice fishing is a major contest. In past years three prize Physical Plant plows have been pulled from the waters. Fishing is regulated according to state and local laws and no license is required for gold fishing.

The Bay teems with boating activity and a wide variety of ingenious flotation devices are employed. Many of you will have cause to remember stroking while striking (Right On!) in unusual construction boats. Featured last year was Eric the Rat's scale model copy of Tom Sawyer's raft. Rubber life rafts are an everyday sight and Tom Prunier, U.Mass sophomore and Alaskan kayak champion, can often be seen paddling around in his slender, thin-shelled craft. Sailing competitions this year have been discontinued due to mysterious circumstances surrounding the corrosion of a number of fiberglass hulls.

Flocks of transient swans inhabit the bay from April to the end of October. Fiercely aggressive during the winter months, the cantankerous signets and signesses are removed, for public safety, to maximum security confinement at University owned Tillson Farm. A specially trained team of Physical Plant workers are yearly assigned the hazardous task of rounding up the gaggle. Excited crowds of onlookers gather to hiss and oggle as the valiant men in tiny boats set forth, to pit themselves against animal fury such as U.Mass rarely sees. When the flock mysteriously disappeared last spring, there was great concern that the enormous birds might be running among the citizenry. But the birds, it was eventually learned had waddled back to Tillson Farm to demand the release of several ugly ducklings being held there are political prisoners.

In urban Southwest, where seemingly eight out of every ten Umies reside, only a fourth of the campus's recreation facilities and only 3% of public recreation areas are reasonably accessible. Most students must travel well in excess of several. More than 75% of all recreation takes place close to the dorm, after school, and on weekends. As the weather warms students come out of their cloistered scholastic seclusion. The Pond, our Bromery Bay, increasingly serves as a magnificent leisure time and recreation area.

The Pond is one of the last expanses of uninterpreted natural lands on Campus. It is a sparkling jewel set in a crown of architecture. Its waters serve as a mirror to the surrounding Campus. The Pond is such a sight that we should all take a look.

Bromery Bay is helping to bring administration closer to the people. In a pledge (that could have been made) to carry on the fight to preserve our environmental heritage, the Chancellor (should have) said, "We must do everything we can so that people will love this Campus and love it very deeply... to preserve those great areas of natural beauty and an environment in which our students will want to live."

Student Film Carnival Coming

By Leslie Freschet

It's very simple. Several people at U. Mass (and you might be one of them) have put a lot of time, money, and energy into making films. More likely then not those films were viewed by a teacher and a hand full of others including Mom and Dad. Well folks, instead of letting those cannisters collect dust, heres your big chance to reveal your big talents to the big world via the big screen.

On April 24 there will be a presentation of the best student made films on campus. That is, if enough of you get busy and get your entries in. A group of student filmmakers, with the help of Prof. Jack Jorgens from the English department, are ready willing and able to organize judge, and project the first U.Mass Student Film Carnival. "Carnivival" meaning smaller than a Film Festival but bigger than the back room at Butterfield.

It could be the beginning of an increasing awareness on this campus of the energy and talent that a lot of students are directing towards film. Hopefully, if those energies are encouraged with viewings such as these people will start demanding, and the school will start providing, the basis for a much-needed film major here. Right now, if you want to major in film the only way you can do it is through B.O.I.C..... and not without a hassle. Also there is no coordinated film program as such on this campus. True, film courses are infiltrating various departments but we have no film courses that build upon each other. Film here now is like an omeba; it's spreading out a lot but going nowhere.

Anyway, it could be that the carnival could help change that. And it could be you could help the carnival by submitting your films. If you haven't got a film come see everyone else's on April 24th, Thompson 104. Who knows? Perhaps, you'll decide after seeing some of your peer's work..."I'll bet I could do that!"...instead of that "Mabey I'll try Real Estate" feeling Bergman leaves you with.

Sex Oozes At Civic Center

By Mike Kostek

In Concert:
Ike & Tina Turner
Malo
Estus
April 13
At the Springfield Civic Center

This was a strangely lack-luster show that was saved from being a total loss only by the prodidgious talent of one of the oldest of pop musicales, Ike & Tina Turner's endless Revue.

Apparently Springfield considered it to be a pretty dull show also, as only about 2000 invested their five or so bucks in the bill. The Civic Center holds over 8000, so it was a lonely sight surveying the scene from the lofty reaches of the press box.

The line-up was thin to begin with, and matters weren't helped any when they announced that Joe Walsh and his group Barnstorm, who were originally scheduled, had reached a parting of the pays, and were no longer with us. There were a few boos and shouts: "Tell it to Joe, he's the one who split. I think in Detroit.", said the 'nouncer man.

So instead we were given Estus, a harmless, pale Poco-type band. They've got two guitarists who can play fairly well, a bassist who can play fairly well, and a drummer who can play fairly well (although his one lick did get tiresome after the first half hour). They can sing fairly well too, and are well-rehearsed and quite tight. However, until one of them develops some shining talent, or all of them progress to the point where I can remove the 'fairly' from descriptions of them, they'll remain an act that you'll not lose any sleep over. You might even decide to catch up on your snoozing right there. They did do one song that was particularly interesting, "Inside Out You Look the Same".

Malo had promise. I'd heard about three songs of theirs on record, and they sounded good. Besides, Santana is a hell of a live show, and even a pseudo-Santana should make for a good show. No go. Malo has popped out three albums in a little over a year, and each has gown down with nary a ripple. Now this can mean only one of two things: ONE: They're a prolific, terrific band who are so good and/or (different) that they've eluded public exposure thus far, a la Little Feat; or more likely, TWO: They're a nondescript bunch, churning out platters in a get-rich-quick, stale manner dull enough to keep everyone away, a la Black Oak Arkansas.

They came out, moved through a listless instrumental, then ran through all three of the tunes I'd heard previously, "Nena", "Pana" and "Suavacito". Now, they weren't half bad, but I began to get an uneasy feeling that these three were the cream of their repertoire, and it would be downhill from there. It was. After their swift 'hit' trilogy, they saw that they'd played their best tunes, but the audience was only mildly pleased. So, in one of the sleaziest tricks I've ever seen, they started the next tune and began whipping maracas into the crowd. That did it. The kids (at least fifty or so) packed into a grooving knot right in front of the stage howling for maracas. The hired flacks cleared them out after a few numbers, and the crowd again assumed its nonchalence.

And for good reason. There just was nothing really going on. Malo has a drummer, conga player, bassist, organist, male singer, Jorge Santana on guitar and a three man horn section. Of the horns, Fred said it best with, "All these poor tits can play is instant jazz bullion--they drop a cube of Blood, Sweat & Tears arrangements into a gallon of lukewarm Latin stage sweat and they think they can burn trains with it." Right ohm, Fred.

If you were wondering why there's been no successful Santana imitants after four years, Malo gave a good demonstration of the why. Their drummer plays one clumsy rhythm through each song, with the conga player content to fill in, where as Santana is off and running with drums, timbales and congas all setting up beautiful ever-shifting complex rhytlims. Malo does push more Latino soul than Santana does, but they just don't play well enough to pull it off. Jorge has got about half of brother Carlos' inventiveness (that's not saying much), a quarter of his technique, and almost none of his fire. Santana's songs shift in stark and delightful ways; Malo's are stock and predictable in comparison. They've picked through the Latin-rock idiom that Santana originated, taking what they liked (the sinewy guitar runs, the galloping rhythms, the linear organ and Latin vocals and song structures) and remixed them into a pale shadow of their predecessor.

It was with poise and polish that Ike's band took the stage and did a feisty, moving version of the "Theme From Shaft". The band was tight, the sound was mixed just right, and their precision brought out even more the sloppiness of Malo.

Bang, out on stage came Tina and the Ikettes, and the crowd came alive. In the interests of good journalism I sauntered down from the far-flung reaches of the press box and ventured to a point which I believed to be a safe twenty feet from the stage. After one more number, everyone else converged on the stage and I was rammed permanently into an area right in front of the stage. Not that I was unhappy to be there, but the idiots in the crowd made it less than a pleasant time. A fight broke out, various stoned nurds kept falling off their chairs, and everyone was yelling exhortations to sexual congress and variations thereon at Ms. Turner. It is this reporter's opinion that the concert-going crowds in Springfield are the worst to be found anywhere, easily beating out the competition put up from Putney, Vt., Hartford, Conn., and Passaic, N.J.

It wouldn't take much to get these funks and purds on their feet and babbling; any high-powered act can do it, but Ike and Tina were doing something special, dis-playing that something that sets them apart from the simple high-power rut--talent. Tina is beautiful (Ike has to be sick to dangle his wife out there in front of all those white teenage shmucks), and she can dance and perform. The Ikettes, three girls who sing and dance back-up to Tina, are fine performers in their roles. And the band pumps enough vitality along to keep things moving.

As they cruised through their standards like, "Sweet Soul Music", "Get Back", "With A Little Help From My Friends", "Honky Tonk Woman", "Oo-Poo-Pah-Doo", "Proud Mary", "Respect", and "I've Been Loving You Too Long", it became more and more apparent that this band is a show band with a capitol 'S'. They were playing the tunes pretty cheaply, outlining the obvious ups of a song, and doing merely what was needed to highlight the girls, who were the whole show. Thus, the trouble with most Ike & Tina records. There are hundreds of Ike & Tina records, but all of them are flat as a board except for Tina's singing. Without the lights, the dancing and oozing sex, the music gets pretty stale. You can get away with uninspired arrangements on stage with the show they've got, but not on record.

In any case, nothing's going to slow down Tina. Even in the cheap night club atmosphere they created (every song ended with the same sick "b-lum...Blaaaat!", and the slickly babbling MC: "Tina Turner! Tina Turner! Tina Turner! Tina Turner!") her talent shone through with brilliant clarity.

Historical Footnote: As Beaver, one of the cracked photographers here at Poor Richard's, was snapping Tina up and down, he managed to catch her at en embarassing angle. This was during the slow dialogue between Tina and Ike during "I've Been Loving You Too Long", Tina's line came around and she was supposed to say something like 'I'm all ears.' Instead, she pointed to Beaver and said, "Ohhh, You caught me with my nose wide open." Now, I don't know to quite make of that. How's that for investigative, nosy, crack journalism?

Getting Ready For Cooder

By Don Wait

In Concert:
Ry Cooder
Sushil Mukherjee
April 14
At Windham Field House, Putney, Vt.

Last Saturday Ry Cooder and Sushil Mukherjee appeared at Windham College before a less than appreciative audience of ripped high schoolers and other drunken bozos who dragged themselves out of the woods to the show. Even so, the atmosphere was cozy and laid back in the steel-girdered, pseudo-pine paneled basketball court. Next to this reporter sat a real fan: "I came 90 miles to year Ryland P.", was his cry. Uh-huh.

Prior to Sushil's Indian Music set, a disturbing amount of Schlitz and Sloe Gin began flowing on the floor and into too many mouths. These creeps with their flannel shirts and hunting jackets looked like they were glad to be inside and warm. Hillbillies is too strong a word, so let us say, rural folk, instead. The fuckheads. Most of them looked like they were tired of cruising the bars every night, so a distraction like this concert--any concert--was welcome. So they brought the bars with them, and proceeded to ruin what could have been one fine concert.

Sushil's combination of bamboo flute, drone, harmonium, tablas and vibes was introduced after announcements about the bathrooms and coke machine (no quarters, please). What followed was catastrophic. The very humble and soft-spoken Mr. Mukherjee was to endure the half attention and outright intoxication of the boogie audience collected there. At one point the Indian master attempted to appeal to the minds of the audience by explaining the complicated and low-key music. "You must remember, if the music seems to drag in places, that is because this is from India, and life in India often drags." So it does in America.

What they did manage to play was a beautiful, fragile blend of soft ragas and Indian folk music. Very nice, very relaxing.

The nurds made fun of their accents and a clapped absurdly off time. "Yes, you see, it is not easy keeping time", Sushil said. "It is hard work."

Beer cans were popped and joints were passed around for those who like getting high another way. Getting ready for Cooder.

Ry sauntered out and looked at us absently, then set into "Police Dog Blues" by Blind Blake. There they were, those exquisite guitar picking hands deftly chording and picking subtle inflections, while his tempered foghorn voice rang out and sang out in a practiced yet fresh manner.

"Vigilante Man" was next, then Ry started telling us about Fitz McLean, the author of "F.D.R. In Trinidad". "He'd write songs about people doing things. Bing Crosby'd do something, he'd write a song about it; J. Edgar Hoover'd do something, he's write a song about it..."Ry finished his talk and then let "F.D.R. In Trinidad" talk. Things still looked good; Ry was singing spiritedly in a light, shy, quasi-Calipso voice, with more beautifully subtle guitar picking. If only the back-up voices coming out of the audience were more melodic. "Where's the beer?" didn't fit into the mood of the composition.

Ry told a story about someone who taught him a song, "Very religious man. He said that if the words of Billy Graham didn't convert you, 'You must be a debbil hisself.' "

Ry remained contained within himself while relating experiences of his meetings with Sleepy John Estes, the blind blues singer and guitarist from Brownville, Texas. He told us of Sleepy John's one room dirt floor shack with no electricity; "Funny thing, he now plays electric guitar. Has to go across the street to a neighbor's to plug it in." John is also quite poor, and there's only one liquor store in Brownsville. "Owned by Mr. Peevee. Since Sleepy John never had 'nuff money for anything, he makes up songs and sings 'em to Mr. Peevee. If they're good, and Mr. Peevee's feeling good, he'll give John a drink."

Ry really wanted to relate his music to the mob, but it just wasn't there, the bond of common interest between audience and performer that lets the performer open up. It didn't really matter to most of the crowd what Ry was playing, as long as he made noice and was fairly interesting. Pity the poor clowns who were real fans and wanted to hear everything Ry was doing, with studio quality and clarity. "Hey, Ry! Where's your band?" No answer. "Hey Ry!", even louder, Ry had to hear it, "where's your band?"

Ry didn't answer, he just muttered "No fucking way, no fucking way" to himself. Yes, and the turds kept yelling and shouting all night, about Cooder's bandana, and how they missed his band, and where was the beer, and how they stepped on one of the many dogs underfoot, and how good they could play themselves. All as fascinating to hear as it is to read. Cooder's music has to be listened to, not merely heard, to be really effective. I don't think Ry playing in the local bar would be that successful.

The Ry Cooder 'fan' leaned over to me and told me to relate to you dear readers that he was one fan who missed the back-up band. I felt like punching his face.

As the circus in the crowd continued, Ry quickly lost his sheen. His stories became fewer and shorter, his playing became more stock and less daring, and I'm sure he was looking forward to a speedy exit. He should be savored like a fine wine, not boogied to. His shy manner was bruised during his set, and his friends, the tunes he was spinning out for us, grew shy and reserved as the evening went by. When he left, he strode off with the walk of a man glad to go and never to return. He was genuinely surprised to get anough of a hand for an encore, and played "Going to Brownsville" from his first album. His manner now seemed to say, 'all right fuckers, how about this?' and became a man possessed. He was bashing his mandolin, and in turn giving the audience the indirect boogie it wanted. However, the volume still wasn't enough to get us up, but the pseudo-hipsters had a good time clanging their Budweiser cans together. Ry left, never to return, probably gone to kick a dog somewhere--outside of Vermont.

The Best Of The Beatles: 1962-1966

By Steve Feld

It's finally here. The first of the official Beatle re-issues is out in America. Besides sheer inevitability, it owes its present-day existance to two external factors: a similar illegal pressing being blatantly advertised on TV that rushed matters considerably, and the law of supply and demand, where the market is currently starved for Beatle product, and literally dying for good Beatle product. An overwhelming, if delightfully anachronistic, undertaking, it is being marketed as two separate double-records (which can sell for more than one four-record set) with fifty-four of the Fab Four's greatest, starting with "Love Me Do" and ending with "The Long and Winding Road", with stopovers at "Yellow Submarine" and "Strawberry Fields Forever."

The packaging is similar for both sets. The earlier has the original Please Please Me cover (Britain's first Beatle album, circa 1963) as its front cover, and the same photo, only eight years later, as its back cover. This second photo was originally intended to cover Let It Be when it was still being referred to as Get Back, Don't Let Me Down, and Nine Others. The photo positions are simply reversed for the latter anthology. The inside artwork is identical, excepting for the song titles. The picture, taken on George's old estate in Surrey, shows the group amidst some English countryfolk, during the White Album period. Inside, we get a complete Capitol/Apple disc and tapeography, plus the album sources of the extracted cuts. The lyrics to the included songs adorn the inside jackets.

From a 1973 standpoint, these records take on new meaning, and represent a time in history that today seems like a bygone era. Beatle songs possessed a universality, an uncanny ability to make a person happy, vibrantly alive, and undeniably stimulated. The sociologists termed it "Beatle-mania" and there was perpetual screaming and hysterical teenagers of every class, color and sex. Beatle biographer Hunter Davies wrote, "It's impossible to exaggerate Beatlemania because Beatlemania was in itself an exaggeration. Writing about it now sounds like fiction." As proved by their subsequent solo albums, Beatle songs were more than just a sum of the parts. There was something else, intangile, going on in a Beatle song, and it's this magic that is captured so well on these records.

First of all, I'm not going to reprimand Capitol for issuing these albums. They knew it, we knew it; the only real question, as is the case with a live Beatles album, was when. To the contrary, all concerned with this project should be commended for such an exhaustive and definitive overview. These four discs lay it all on the line: the reason the Beatles became the biggest, most successful act in the history of show business, the largest socio-political influence since Hitler, and the most revered songwriters since Gershwin. What these albums contain in terms of present-day values is ostensibly the reason why we keep on going back for more of Paul's puerile nonsense, John's Yoko-ized nonsense, George's Krishna-ized nonsense, and Ringo's consistantly insignificant nonsense.

The Beatles 1962-1966 covers what later became known as the group's pre-acid days. This is the music that started a renaissance in rock (nee rock 'n' roll) at a time when the finger-snapping Las Vegas-type performers held the jugular vein of the music industry by their capped-tooth smiles. The album tries to keep a sense of history, while presenting what was the biggest and best of the Beatles. With "Love Me Do" it fails on the second account. Included mainly for its historical context (the group's first hit), it has since become known as one of the few Lennon-McCartney duds, with more to come in later years. "P.S. I Love You" would have been aesthetically more pleasing.

"Please Please Me" was the group's first No. 1 record in England. If you haven't yet noticed, John screws up the lyrics on the last verse. "From Me To You" was made into a hit single by Del Shannon six months before anybody heard of the Beatles. Shannon, a singer who wrote a good deal of his songs himself, bowed out this time to a certain Lennon-McCartney. Half a year later we understood why: "She Loves You", "I Want to Hold Your Hand", "All My Loving" created Beatlemania, long hair, three weeks straight on Ed Sullivan, a cultural landslide.

Success leads to movies. "A Hard Day's Night" matched the fast and furious pace of Richard Lester's film. Lennon wrote the verse, McCartney the refrain. "Can't Buy Me Love", a song that has since become bastardized on the Hey Jude album, was written after the group's first tour of this country. Producer George Martin, who is never mentioned on these albums, changed a facet of his engineering by this time, placing the lead vocal in the middle, instead of off to one channel. "And I Love Her", the first true McCartney ballad, established Paul in a sub-genre that he remains best in today. "Eight Days a Week" again, opts for history over aesthetics, with the flip side, "Yes It Is" being sheer grace, but omitted. "I Feel Fine" has George (Electronic Sound) Harrison creating the first "heavy metal" feedback with a cigarette lighter against his guitar string on the opening note. John wrote the verse (his style often being distinguished by three-chord up-tempo structures), and Paul (leaning more towards minor chords for a "hook line") wrote the refrain.

John thinks "Ticket to Ride" is the first "rock" song ever. He's probably right. I remember it as a song to tune a guitar by, being in the key of A. In concert, they sped up the refrain and slowed down the chorus. "Yesterday" brought the Beatles whatever reconition from high-brow society they were hertofore lacking. Paul originally referred to it as "Scrambled Eggs" since first thing in the morning he'd hop to the piano while whoever he was living with (Jane Asher) fixed him breakfast. It's in the key of F, and Dylan says it's got to be good if it's in F. The version of "Help!" on this album is culled from the soundtrack album which has, if you remember, a rip-snorting James Bondish prelude. A collector's item, today, is the "Eight Days a Week" single where the working title for the Help! movie was printed as Eight Arms to Hold You. The title was later canned when John and Paul couldn't write a song by that title. By the time of the "Help!" single, the Beatles had become a myth.

By now Lennon and McCartney were pretty much writing separately. "You've Got to Hide Your Love Away" is John's first impressionistic song, carrying the very personal subjective tones of paranoia that is present in his solo works. He said he discovered Dylan with this song: "Here I stand, head in hand/Turn my face to the wall..." The "We Can Work It Out"/"Day Tripper" single adhered to the A-side Paul, B-side John formula that was soon to come prevalent. Ensuing credits: John wrote the minor-key refrain on "We Can Work It Out", George wrote the now-legendary guitar line on "Day Tripper", considered by many as the first Beatles' drug song. "Nowhere Man" is quintessential Lennon, where his reedy voice takes over.

Next is Rubber Soul, perhaps the most pivotal record of the Sixties. "Norweigan Wood" draws its name from a type of hashish, and refers to prostitution. "Girl" has fleeting references to the Christian ethic (John says the Beatles are more popular then Jesus) plus Paul and George on back-ups singing "tit-tit-tit-tit." John, in his first "Rolling Stone" interview said, "We got completely involved in ourselves, then. I think it was Rubber Soul when we did all our own numbers. We controlled it a bit, whatever it was we were putting over, we just tried to control it...." Paul pens "Michelle" and finds the world at his feet. The Beatles have now matured; they become aware of their incredible power and experiment with it.

Leonard Bernstein on a CBS special reveals "Paperback Writer" to be about prostitution and, to this day, befuddles me; the key cryptic line, "Based on a novel by a man named Lear" alludes everyone I ask. George plays a guitar line that rips off "Day Tripper." "Eleanor Rigby" has since become detested by many, being a victim of overkill. Paul wrote it, John wrote the cello and string parts. In a touching gesture of humility, Paul changes "Father McCartney" to "Father McKenzie." The song marks the first truly poetic song for the Beatles, with lyrics reeking of symbolism. Finally "Yellow Submarine", another victim of overkill. Today it sounds hokey, but in the summer of 166 it was majestic. It started a trend in surrealism, added more fodder for the drug lyrics controversy, and became an embryonic stage for Sgt. Pepper. This version is taken from the Yellow Submarine soundtrack album, where John's W.C. Fields voice is brought up during the second line, a line later than the Revolver version. Contrary to belief, John does not say "Paul's a queer" during the sound effects, but rather, "Port's all clear."

Next week: The Beatles 1967-1970.

Todd Rundgren

A Wizard/A True Star
Bearsville BR 2133

By Steve Feld

When last heard from, our all-around rock and roll runt was busily at work building his own recording studio to produce in his words "revolutionary recordings". A Wizard/A True Star is the first of these; perhaps not so revolutionary (one must be aware of Todd's penchant for put-on's and overstatement) but, nevertheless, a remarkably prodigious, playfully ostentatious piece of music. His approach remains the same: he strives to overpower using any ploy afforded by the medium. Be it the artful Dali-esque cover, the feat of technical engineering needed to squeeze over fifty-five minutes of music on a single record, or his startling, highly impressive virtuosity, he leaves no stone unturned as he attacks from all sides in another successful attempt to make the world more aware of his name.

Like Something/Anything?, Todd's new effort is grandiloquent and infinitely eclectic. He lists a dozen other musicians who played on this record, but, for my money, he could very well be pulling an Ian Anderson and be playing everything himself – that's how much he's in control. A Wizard/A True Star, like its predecessor, is loosely a concept album. It's structured by sides; the first flashing us the "wizard" in Todd, the second presenting the "true star". He virtually becomes a one-man jukebox, playing with an incredible number of styles and motifs almost to the point of parody, while offering twenty-two songs ubiquitously segued.

Side one, A Wizard, is a tour de force. Todd has picked up a few more tricks this time around including a course in elementary Zappa. The album starts with the Zappanese sound collages, which lead into "International Feel", a marvelous anthem that opens and closes the side. Following this are a series of songlets: "Never Never Land" from Peter Pan which was an absolute stroke of genius on Todd's part because he makes it sound so captivating; "Tic Tic Tic" is like "Breatless" from Something/Anything?, an instrumental with loads of garish sound effects that, once again, remind one of Zappa in his earlier days; and two hyper-energetic screamers, "You Need Your Head" and "Rock and Roll Pussy" followed, again, by a Zappaesque "Dogfight Giggle" and "Flamingo".

"You Don't Have to Camp Around" is pure McCartney, light and lilting with delightful lyrics. It's these two mentors, Zappa and McCartney, that Todd has modeled most of Wizard after. When one isn't being reminded of We're Only In It For The Money and its many, many splices and no spaces, then Its Raw and its ultra-musical approach that pervades.

"Zen Archer" is a bouncy minor-key tune like "Meekberry Moon Delight" which, for all its 5-plus minutes, destroys the wham-bam-thank-you-ma'am pacing that has dominated the side until now. Its ending, along with some amazing bow-and-arrow sound effects, fades out under the farcical "Just Another Onionhead" and the dadaistic (what else?) "Dada Dah".

It's too bad that the best, most realized song on the album will get little airplay for obvious reasons, but "When the Shit Hits the Fan" remains a stunning up-tempo knock-out number. With "Le Feel Internacionale", as it is now called, our hero, the wizard, vanishes....

....Only to reappear on side two as A True Star. Here, Rundgren is more conventional, sounding very much as he did on his previous solo outings. "Does Anybody Love You" and "I Don't Want to Tie You Down" are the little-boy-Todd songs. "Is It My Name?" has a fabulous semblance to the Who. "Hungry for Love" gets quite philosophical:

"An ounce of sweet Jamaican
A seedy spoon of powder
A half a pint of Bushmill's Nothing gets you high when you're hungry for love."

"Sometimes I Don't Know What to Feel" is a lush r&b song Todd penned himself. It serves as a warm-up for the 10-minute soul pastiche consisting of Curtis Mayfield's "I'm So Proud", Smokey Robinson's "Ooh Baby Baby", a melodic "La La Means I Love You" and the jerkiest "Cool Jerk" in 7/8. (An ironic digression: Jeff Beck, on his latest album, also does a version of Mayfield's "I'm So Proud". The last time Rundgren and Beck crossed paths was at the Boston Music Hall where a bunch of Beck roadies seditously pulled the plug during Todd's act.)

Closing the album is a big, beautiful ballad "Just One Victory" that challenges "When the Shit Hits the Fan" for the premiere piece. Todd's debut of "Just One Victory" took place during his concert here last spring. He was enthusiastic talking about it and rightfully so; it's the coup de grace of a stellar album, just the way he planned it.

A Wizard/A True Star is a convincing follow-up for Todd Rundgren. Side one, A Wizard, is an accurate barometer of how far he has gone, plus of his knowledge in and of the studio, which is, in effect, a separate instrument by itself. His Brobdingnagian presence on record is at its most astounding here, where one can imagine him, surely a dedicated follower of fashion, "flitting from shop to shop just like a butterfly." One sees him an automation emitting musical data, a playful god (Cupid? Pan?) conjuring up magical melodies, or someone to believe in (Peter Pan?) who will escort us to a Never Never Land. But, at very least, he is someone who is fun to be with, and his records remain his most accurate mirror.

Logically enough, his new band is called Utopia and it is preparing to go on tour shortly. Presenting his music is Todd's biggest problem, and something he must seriously consider if this latest tour is to be better than last year's travesty. "Playing music on record and playing it live are two entirely different things", he told me last spring. (Upon which I retorted, "Especially if you play every damn instrument yourself!") A True Star is, hopefully, what we'll get from Todd's new live performance.

This album, like Something/Anything?, shows him harnessing his enormous energy ("Natural Speed" he says) and brilliantly channeling it on a flamboyant album for all to hear. What is so exciting about Todd Rundgren is the fun-house inside his soul, and the way it is astonishingly presented in his music. His next album, reportedly with an 80-piece orchestra, corroborates the fact that this guy knows no limits. I can only wish him good luck and stand right beside him while he blows my mind.

Led Zeppelin

Houses Of The Holy
Atlantic SD 7255

By David Sokol

Part of the beauty of rock music is the possible synthesis of music with lyrics to achieve a total, complete sound. The early Byrds, Procol Harum, and the Beatles, to name just three, have successfully merged the vocal and instrumental forms, resulting in a total sound which is valid on at least these two levels. On their earlier recordings, Led Zeppelin have come up with compositions which have been quite satisfying, both musically and lyrically. "Babe I'm Gonna Leave You", "Thank You", "Tangerine", and "Stairway to Heaven" have all made the ultimate use of Led Zep's available facilities, and because of these songs, I've kept coming back for more.

Led Zeppelin's fifth album, Houses of the Holy, has none of the excitement or integrity of their earlier material. It sounds, in fact, as if it were a compilation of all the tunes which they had the good taste to leave off their first four albums. On first listening, I kept expecting a good song to come along, but was continually disappointed. Although early Zeppelin was successful with its hard rock songs like "Your Time is Gonna Come" or "Immigrant Song", as well as with their more sensitive stuff, they have now tried to expand and become more versatile. The result is most disappointing. In place of the sensitive and good hard rock, Led Zeppelin is now heavilly into attempted satire, which comes off sounding like joke-rock.

Unlike Donny Osmond, whose voice is maturing and becoming deeper, Robert Plant's voice appears to be rising, now lacking any of the depth which it periodically displayed. The lyrics throughout this album (which, as I mentioned earlier are so important) are memorable only because they are consistantly atrocious. Putting these two factors together, it is apparent that the vocals come close to being a complete zero. Although the instrumentation is not bad in itself, Led Zeppelin material has never been worse. The ballad attempts fall flat and never get off the ground. "The Rain Song" and "No Quarter" are just plain boring. Whereas it is really enjoyable to go back and listen to old Zeppelin, it requires a lot of will power to sit through these. Unlike "Stairway to Heaven", "No Quarter" never builds, but drags on, seemingly forever. Jimmy Page's guitar work, which is generally forgetable on this album, is actually quite nice here, the song's only saving grace.

The two musical "parodies" are almost as tedious. "The Crunge" is a James Brown take off, complete with truly cliched lyrics, and Plant's asking "Has anybody seen the bridge? I'm just trying to find the bridge." Give me James Brown any day. The other example of the aforementioned joke-rock is "D'yer Mak'er" which is a quaint goof on old rock and roll which just doesn't come off. The lyrics have got to be the worst yet. Sha Na Na they're not.

The other four songs fail because of the combination of inane lyrics and forgetable melodies. "Dancing Days" and "The Ocean" are based on ridiculous riffs which don't merit being repeated. The sound of the drums on these two songs as well as a couple of others is another disappointment. The drums are extremely over-recorded and completely lack the mellow tunings which were so apparent both live and on their earlier recordings. John Bonham's drumming, which was once a real asset to the group sound, now merely adds to the headache which is Led Zeppelin's Houses of the Holy. John Paul Jones's experimentation with such overused instruments as mellotron, synthesiser, and synthesised bass comes off sounding extremely unspectacular. It's as if he were using these instruments for the mere sake of using them, as they add little to the total sound.

If any one of the songs on Houses of the Holy come close to being enjoyable, it would have to be the album's lead off "The Song Remains the Same". The music brings back hints of the old Zeppelin, but again the lyrics don't make it and Plant's voice is just too shrill and unconvincing for my liking.

If this record is an indication of where Led Zeppelin is going, it would seem that they are following the general pattern of a good group gone bad. It is quite unfortunate, but it is no longer surprising. With few exceptions, once rock stars achieve massive popularity, their "good music potential" seems to run out. Superstar status and inflated egos have destroyed many a fine rock group and many a fine rock star. Look at what's happened to Neil Young, Rod Stewart, the Grateful Dead, Jeff Beck, Jefferson Airplane, the Byrds, and Steve Stills, to name but a few. Now we can add Led Zeppelin to the long list. Many rock groups are biting the dust these days.

Columbia KC-32761

By Andrew MacKenzie

This album is definitely a borderline case. Just about everything I can think of to say about it contains one of two phrases: 'just barely' or 'almost but not quite'.

To begin with, Quateman's voice and music sound almost but no quite enough like Graham Nash to be considered an imitation. Happily, his writing manages to rise above the cloying sticky-sweetness so prevalent in the latter's work – just barely. But there is still far too much of a look-at-me-I'm-a-poet - and - extremely - innocent quality to his style, even though he does almost but not quite make up for it by singing with great sincerity and vitality.

Sincerity and vitality are about all his singing has going for it on this album, however. By this I don't mean to imply that he has a bad voice, because, as I mentioned before, he does sound amazingly like Graham Nash. What seems to be lacking here is self-confidence. His vocals are often double-tracked or else buried as far down in the mix as possible and his phrasing is not infrequently awkward. This being his first album he was probably and understandably somewhat unnerved by the pressures of Columbia's mass-production methods. This nervousness unfortunately makes its presence known, in the pacing of the album as well as in his vocals.

Musically, he is definitely a case of 'just barely'. Most of his songs are based on old, sometimes downright corny progressions to which he's injected just barely enough variety to keep them from dragging, usually. The harmonies he occasionally overdubs onto his main vocals, however, are almost always inventive and ear-catching.

And now a word about arrangements. Bill Quateman's album is not particularly guilty of the sin I am about to mention, but one or two of his songs were absolutely and unnecessarily ruined and they were just the straw that broke the camels' back, as it were.

I am becoming convinced that all major recording companies have a specially-programmed computer hooked up to a Moog synthesizer, and whenever a producer decides that the overall sound of an album is not full enough he simply throws the tape into the computer, which scans the tape, then programs the Moog to add a thousand violins, all playing the same note, in the proper key and tempo. This, of course, greatly improves the album because, as we all know, violin music is beautiful. Why, just think: thanks to this computer, what used to be an ordinary trip to the supermarket is now a culturally enriching experience!

But anyway, back to Quateman. This album is what he calls a "compromise between electricity and wood". In other words, this is an all-acoustic album, with the exception of electric bass and, on one cut, guitar (The guitar, I might add, is played by Elton John associate Caleb Quaye). Yet this is not an especially laid-back or moody album. Most of the songs are up-tempo and some of them really rock. Aside from a tendency towards playing only rhythm, his backup band is more than competent and on occasion exceptional.

This album represents an almost but not quite (Thought I forgot, didn't you?) auspicious beginning for Quateman. There's some good listening here, but there's also a lot of room for growth and maturity. Maybe if he were to work with a few of his more experienced contemporaries the quality of his own work will become more uniform.

Paulie Hams It Up On TV

By Sal Video

The emphasis was on music last Monday night, when Paul McCartney performed on American television for the first time in three years, when he played "Let It Be" with a band called the Beatles on the Ed Sullivan Show. McCartney played sixteen songs and songlets interspersed with some insipid footage of English folk, drunk relatives, and a completely choreographed Busby Berkeley travesty. By the end, it fare half-good and half-bad which, in light of Mr. McCartney's more recent activities, is more than we had the right to expect.

The first song, featuring McCartney and his band Wings before a live audience, was something of a mystery. Those familiar with Ram should have recognized it as the ending of "Ram On" from side two. Here, McCartney has developed it into a separate song for inclusion, no doubt, on his new double-album with Wings, to be out within the month.

The setting shifts to Paul and his folk guitar singing very informally. "Blackbird" goes by; "Bluebird", a new one, passes; an up-tempo "Michelle" segues into "Heart Of The Country." Cut to a filmed segment of the band kicking around while a live performance of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" is on the soundtrack. This segment, as well as most, was filmed quite dramatically by Gary Smith and Dwight Hemion, who last produced the Burt Bacharach specials. Lots of long tracking shots, flashy angles, slow dissolves, and other cinematic devices since adopted for televised concerts prevailed.

After a commercial, we are transported to a concert hall where Paul and the band are ready to start. With the maestro at keyboards, we hear "C-Moon", the B-side to "Hi Hi Hi" sandwiched between two takes of "Little Woman Love", the B-side of "Mary Had a Little Lamb." Paul now seems a bit nervous; maybe it's the clumsiness of his piano ... he tries to move with the beat, maybe it's lack of confidence. The exhuberance of his Beatle days is not there.

Another new song: "Only My Love"; a cringingly lush love song guaranteed to give you a cavity. The show has now reached its first low point.

"This is Liverpool, where I was born...." Right away you know that whatever is coming up is going to be awful. Anything that starts with Paulie getting sentimental over his childhood years can't be too encouraging. What we get is Paulie, his Dad, his Auntie Gizzie, ad nauseam for a round at the local pub, getting drunk and singing Irish folk songs. Jes folks, y'understand. And guess who's there? Gerry Marsden, that's who; the brains and brawn behind Gerry and the Pacemakers. Maybe he and Paul will jam. What a super-session!! But they don't. More Irish folk songs. This whole segment was done cinema verite.

Oh insipidness! How your kingdom reigns! It's Busby Berkeley time. Picture Paul wearing a false mustache, prancing about while scores of dancers form wild designs around him. Yes, sir. If we tuned in late we would have sworn it was Robert Goulet wearing a wig on a Bob Hope Chrysler special. But it's Paulie debuting his new song "Gotta Sing, Gotta Dance."

When this is over we finally get to hear the theme song Paul wrote for the new James Bond flicker, Live and Let Die. Sorry folks, we're not impressed. The song plays on over some wild chase scenes from the film.

Another nadir is hit. English countryfolk smack in the middle of Piccadilly Circus singing their favorite Beatle hits. How nice! Yup, an old drunk performs "A Hard Day's Night"; an elderly lady sings "She Loves You" to us, two elderly women team up on "Yellow Submarine", plus other people, just as colorful, doing "Ob-la-di Ob-la-da", "Can't Buy Me Love" and "Yesterday". The Beatles must have been quite a phenomenon for these people.

At this point in the show the only place we can go is up. We are back with Wings, live on stage, for what proved to be the show's highlight. Paul is ready to boogie. A new song, "The Mess I'm In" leads into a good performance of "Maybe I'm Amazed" which beat the album version by a mile. Paul is on bass with Wings, and here he is playing the Rickenbacker bass he had during Magical Mystery Tour. For the concert's closer he does, by golly, "Long Tall Sally"; the same Little Richard song that used to close his Beatle concerts. Now that could only mean one thing! Paulie sure misses them Beatle days.

We're back to the opening shot where Linda and the boys convince Paul to sing "Yesterday." Very nice, but the vocal gets soaked in reverb and strings are added, taking away the spontaneity previously created. Add the closing credits and you've just witnessed James Paul McCartney.

One must, in the end, take into account several things before placing the final judgment on Paul McCartney's TV special. Namely, the medium is not ideal for rock music; the sound is shitty, the picture is small, the results suffer greatly. Second, no matter how schmaltzy McCartney gets, it's still McCartney. Surely James Paul McCartney is at least as good as Lennon's One To One show. We are aware of McCartney's penchant for hamming it up when the camera's on; Paul did nothing out-of-character in his show, so we really have nothing to complain about. What is sad is that the magic generated by John, George, Paul and Ringo onstage and on record is more than a sum of its parts.

To think of James Paul McCartney, as a show by an ex-Beatle is, in essence, to be disappointed. To think of it as a show by a performer who has written many very nice songs would be somewhat better. It is a large consolation, but unfortunately, a necessary one.

Ludwig: A Passionless Decadent Vision

By Bradford Goff

Ludwig (The Mad King of Bavaria) written for the screen and directed by Luchino Visconti

When a new film by Luchino Visconti comes along, the film enthusiast automatically gears himself to a new variation on the theme of decadence. Two of Visconti's distinguished works of the past--The Damned and Death in Venice-- have done well in capturing the social turmoil which gives life (or more appropriately, death) to any period of excess and decay. With his latest work, Ludwig (The Mad King of Bavaria), we expect just the sort of excess that befits a king--and we get it. But, sadly enough, the vehicle is a near-dismal failure, and even devoted followers of Visconti will be at a loss, wondering what went wrong.

In choice of subject, Visconti was certainly perceptive enough. It would be hard to find a better champion of excess and decay than Ludwig II of Bavaria. The Mad King's nineteenth century extravagance in light of dwindling funds, European wars, and conspiring state officials has become legendary. His fascination for grandiose castles has become our fascination, thanks to Walt Disney, and his hereditary madness due to sovereign intermarriage has made him a curiosity of Western civilization. Coming to the throne at age 19 in 1864, he slipped through progressive degrees of madness for 22 years and was finally deposed, dying shortly afterward in suicide by drowning.

For Visconti, this royal nose dive was apparently perfect inspiration for his own extravagance--namely, an emphasis on decadence and lavish cinematography. He boldly attempts to draw Ludwig through 22 years of deterioration involving the unrequited love for Empress Elizabeth of Austria, his mocked devotion to Richard Wagner, his marriage of convenience, and his scandalous eccentricities (among them loves for fairy tale architecture and fairy tale stable boys.) All this is engulfed in scenes of snow covered alps, tented and tasseled barges on clear blue lakes, misty evergreen forests, and lavish exteriors that rival the magnificent gawdiness of Italian Renaissance palaces.

But Visconti's purpose is more basic than just story or show. He seriously attempts to conjure up a vision of Ludwig's pursuit of passion and his essential failure--or at least his fatal mistake of believing the pursuit of material to be equal to the pursuit of pure feeling. Visconti has given us a king who is groping for personal meaning--and this meaning takes the form of building castles, backing down-in-the-dumps artists, and generally having a good time. Unfortunately, this runs head on into an era and class where systematic control, formality, and pompous language are the norm. Apparently, Visconti hoped to establish a dichotomy between king and era in order to give substance to poor Ludwig's madness. Unfortunately, the director never manages to escape the binds formed by the historical plot line, the interiors, exteriors, costumes, and makeup. Collectively, these demand a romantic and passionate handling because they are so emotionally charged. Visconti's fatal flaw has been to hold back on romance, where he previously let go of all the stops, as in Death in Venice. To control the inherent passion (and undercut Ludwig), he gives us a series of conflicts which never really succeed in controlling anything. There is lavish ornamentation verses a sterile system of manners, beautiful men and women verses inflated and meaningless action and language, the most romantic of settings verses an insipid screenplay. What this amounts to is a constant building up of emotional content coupled with a simultaneous process of tearing it all down. At times (and this is often) when the mechanism is so apparent, the process becomes almost ludicrous.

For example, Visconti's and Enrico Medioli's screenplay pays too much attention to its own words and phrases (like Ludwig's "I am an enigma and want to remain an enigma--to others and to myself.") The formality is often out of sync with movements and emotions. The action becomes so stilted at times as performers grasp for sensible meaning in their lines that motion lacks the grace demanded by the visuals. Consequently, movements are harsh and jagged under the guise of formality. In addition, Visconti's fondness for classical scores is working here against the production. In Death in Venice, Mahler's third and fifth symphonies appropriately filled the production with a subdued pathos. However, in Ludwig, the full, rich orchestral selections from Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, Lohengrin, and Tannhauser, as well as selections by Schumann and Offenbach, succeed only in mocking the essential passionlessness which the director has produced. It becomes almost impossible to tolerate the Empress chatting about the cost of Linderhof castle as the heart-rending love and death theme from Tristan melts even the most casual listener.

And from all of this the spiraling paranoia of the king is supposed to emerge. But unfortunately, this is not quite so. Ludwig is usually adequately and occasionally briliantly played by Helmut Berger (Martin von Essenbech of The Damned). It seems from his rare moments of greatness that he could have done a consistently fine job with improved material. But, as it stand, the script pretty much restricts him to frustrated young Ludwig and maddened old Ludwig as editing shifts him back and forth in time through supposed levels of madness. As the young king, Berger gives us the struggling aloofness of an inexperienced young monarch. He has perfected that steely gaze and air of subdued perversion that gave him power as the pederast-transvestite-mother-raper of The Damned. However, Ludwig's levels of madness emerge not so much as chronic insanity but as increasing frustration in light of his own ineptness. This might produce a broken-down and pitiable old man, but the signs of madness are too scarce to indicate a budding paranoiac. Sure he builds expensive castles, but he is still little more than the court fool.

The true madman emerges, almost unexplainably, as an unshaven face and a mouth full of rotted teeth. The older king's madness (very rotted teeth played against the pearly whites of everyone else in the cast) is a good deal more effective than than the young monarch's frustration. Ludwig's fleeting attempts at passion have been sufficiently bastardized into an occasional homosexual orgy or a lustful interest in some all-to-willing, ambitious young actor. As the king sits perched in his massive gilded bed, second only to the throne of St. Peter, we can't help but wonder how he got where he is. He is ashamed of his physical and mental deterioration and refuses to see the still beautiful Empress. Threats on his castle and restrictions on spending are prey to his paranoia. He struggles to hold his throne, his possessions, and his sanity but all slip away. Berger, at this stage, is tremendous--still biting in nature but worn out by his constant fight to hold on. He is hateful and suspicious yet self-controlled as he floats on a swanboat in his artificial grotto. He is full of haughtiness and still piercing with his glare. Nevertheless, he is his own court fool and has lost the knack of pleasing himself and the kingdom.

His opposite is Romy Schneider who is perhaps the brief shining light of the film. As Empress of Austria she is exquisite in beauty and grace. As unrequitted lover of Ludwig, she mocks him and his struggle for passion since she is obviously the sole passionate being of the film. As actress, she often seems to mock the film itself, probably aware of the banality of her lines. She delivers them with a haughtiness and charm which lifts her above the production, rarely carrying it with her. In her arrival at Herrenchiemsee castle, she merely stands before it, gazing around and smiling, as it at a child's prank. And upon entering the hall of mirrors and chandeliers, she merely laughs so as to shatter its illusion of greatness. In these cases and others, her timing, motion, and attitude are captivating and delightful.

The other performers are unfortunately swallowed up in the production. Trevor Howard as Wagner is tragically restricted to looking embarassed over Ludwig's accusations and to romping with a dog who definitely steals the scene. Helmut Griem, who delivered fine performances in The Damned and Cabaret, can only stroll around and look handsomely worried as one of Ludwig's aides. Other performers merely blend in.

As director, Visconti has gone still further from past works in developing his grand operatic style and flare for fine technique and composition. His career as director, dating back to the early forties, has shown a gradual shift away from Italian neorealism to a greater and greater willingness for contrivance and self-consciousness in his films. Ludwig is a far cry from the slice-of-life documentation in La Terra Trema (1948). However, his use of ravishing color in Senso (1954) and his formal preoccupations with romantic meloncholy and moony encounters in White Lights (1957) already set the trend. And in Rocco and His Brothers (1960) he is already fascinated with the lure of the decadent. Finally, in The Leopard (1960) he has developed a form which is virtually reconstructed documentary and the costumes, makeup, sets, and properties are entirely self-conscious. The Damned and Death in Venice are only a step away in terms of decadent vision. Thus, Ludwig is certainly no surprise from a director who has tripped down the path of increasingly colorful style and theme. In Ludwig, Visconti again tackles his vision of man's passion, as he previously did in Death in Venice. But at least in Gustav von Aschenbach's cravings for young Tadzio there is a consistently passionate vision. Granted, it would be difficult to take two hours and 53 minutes of passion from King Ludwig, but Visconti, in a way, blew it by continually undercutting the free flow of emotion. Maybe going the way of all flesh would have been too much, but Visconti's balance, as it stands, just doesn't work. If he must have decadence, then he should loosen the binds as in Death in Venice. If he must have formal control and sterility, then he is more at home in Nazi Germany of The Damned where the Third Reich provides the systematic control. But he hasn't yet found a vehicle to contain both in opposition. In Ludwig, passion and sterility do battle and neither is victor. Each only mocks the other and the unfortunate victims of this mockery are the performers, director, and film itself.

A Twentieth Century Danse - Macabre

By Jim LaMacchia

Last Tango In Paris, a new film by Bernado Bertolucci now playing at the Cheri III Cinema in Boston, has received a great deal of attention in recent months from both critics and filmgoers. The film is surrounded by controversy, and the response from reviewers has ranged from unqualified praise to loathsome rejection. Pauline Kael, the oustanding film critic from The New Yorker Magazine, has suggested that Last Tango In Paris is to film what the performance of Stravinsky's Rite of Spring was to music, and that the film represents a new dimension for the art of the cinema. Others have dismissed the film as nothing more than an over-rated porno-flick for intellectuals. In spite of the particular nature of the response, Last Tango In Paris is one of those films that demand some response, and the unfortunate aspect of all of this critical controversy is, that the film has become an object of criticism, something one is expected to have a position on, and this can cloud the emotional impact of this outstanding work of art. A great deal has already been written about the merits of particular techniques employed in the film, and, thus, this review will primarily focus upon my personal experience of this tremendously moving film.

In LastTango In Paris, Bertolucci is presenting the viewer with a nightmare world in which the characters are desperately attempting to come to terms with personal loss amid a backdrop in which real love seems to be impossible to realize. The film opens with a shot of the character Paul, played by Marlon Brando, standing beneath the trestle of an elevated tram, dishevelled and cursing at the noise which disrupts his already shattered nerves. His wife has commited suicide the previous day, and he is wandering the Paris street, miserable and utterly alone. He encounters the film's other major character, Jeanne, played by Maria Schneider, when they both meet in an abandoned apartment they are each, coincidently, considering renting. Paul is sitting on the floor amid the rubble of broken furniture, and he moves toward Jeanne who is initially bewildered by his presence. Then, in an extremely brutal manner, they copulate against the squalid, peeling wall. It is a completely mechanical action, performed in their clothes and coats. They agree to meet here in the future, with one important stipulation imposed by Paul. They must not reveal their names, their past, or any other details about their life outside of the room, to each other. Their liason is to be completely anonymous, devoid of the intrusion of identities or personalities.

The reason for Paul's demand becomes clearer as the film explores the lives of these two individuals outside of this room. Paul is a forty-five year old American who has been married for five years to the owner of a cheap, Paris Flophouse. His wife, Rosa, has been continuously unfaithful to him during this period, and when the film opens, she has just committed suicide. Paul is confused about the reasons for her death, and the film goes on to portray him as an utterly hopeless, lonely, and quickly declining middle-aged man. He held ambivalent feelings toward his wife, and his disappointment and love-hate attitude toward her emerge in the film's most intense scene, when Paul sits by the corpse, refering to her as a "fake Ophelia," and bemoans her unfaithfulness, and his loneliness and desperation. The film makes it clear that the liason in the apartment is an experiment; an attempt to determine the extent to which love is possible without the accoutrements of identity or roles. Jeanne is the daughter of a now deceased Colonel in the French army. Her boyfriend is a shallow "cinema-verite" director making a film for French television, which is the study of a young girl in love. It is obviously a superficial, romanticized view of love which the middle-class will readily devour. In a scene after Jeanne decides to marry her director boyfriend, he refers to his romanticized vision of love as "pep love," the new generations version of this experience. During the filming of this pseudo-epic of which Jeanne is the subject, it becomes clear that in many ways Jeanne is still a child inhabiting her childhood world, yet caught between the world as she experiences it with Paul, and the world of her boyfriend. Paul sees the world as a desperate, ugly, even brutal reality, in which love, if such a thing is possible between two people, is born of desperation, loneliness, fright, and necessity. Jeanne's boyfriend views love as a romantic, almost saccharine experience; the kind of love which lacks depth and has become a packaged commodity sold to modern man in popular literature. At one point, Paul tells Jeanne that one can only know love after one has peered into "the arse-hole of death."

Marlon Brando.

One can watch their relationship in that sordid apartment slowly evolve from a completely animal experience where they, at the outset, tell each other their names by making animal noises, to a relationship in which Paul genuinely cares for Jeanne. He discovers that animal sexuality is not a possibility for human beings when, despite his determination, he relates to Jeanne episodes from his past. The film very subtely suggests, that the liason in the apartment is an initiation and purgation in which Paul comes to an understanding of love and Jeanne becomes immersed in the dark underbelly of human experience. This emerges clearly during the scene in which Paul, in a manner reminiscent of Lady Chatterly's Lover, sodomizes Jeanne and makes her repeat epithets against the family and repression.

The film further suggests that the attitudes of Paul and Jeanne's boyfriend toward life are reinforced by both age and the environment each inhabits. One morning, Jeanne goes to the apartment and discovers that Paul has moved out the table, chairs and mattress, and she interprets this action as an end to their liason. She is terribly upset by this apparant rejection and, in panic, retreats to the security of her boyfriend's world. The film slowly and carefully has created an intense atmosphere of pathos with its exploration of these characters' lives, and from this point onwards, the vision becomes increasingly desperate and gruesome, almost unbearable. Paul encounters Jeanne on the street, and he no longer appears disheveled. He reveals to her his circumstances and the recent events of his life, offering to bring Jeanne to his "flophouse" to live with him. He begins to exemplify a last, desperate thrust toward life and the impression that he is not entirely defeated when he tells her, "Things end and you begin again." They end up in a Tango hall where a danse contest is being held. After drinking quite a bit, Paul and Jeanne enter the dance floor and disrupt the staid "rite" with bawdy movements and laughter. Paul pulls down his pants and shakes his buttocks in the face of the outraged hostess. Both Paul and Jeanne seem painfully aware that their relationship is over, and as the last tango of the contest is danced, they sit in an empty corner and seperately masturbate, each locked within himself and moaning with despair. The scene produces the same crushing effect as the dance hall in They Shoot Horses, Don't They? Jeanne rejects Paul's offer to live in his flophouse, and he chases her through back streets to her apartment. When he enters, he put on her father's army cap and salutes her as her hero. In a voice mixed with cynicism and sincerety, he tells her he has crossed the continents in pursuit of her. She fires her father's service revolver and kills him. As he lies crumpled on the floor, she matters that she doesn't know him; he must be a madman, and that he tried to rape her. Jeanne's rejection of Paul is a very complex matter. He is so cynical and bitter that it is extremely difficult for her to come close to him.

The incredible acting performance of Marlon Brando and the fine direction of Bernado Bertolucci transform a potentially trite plot into a penetrating and insightful study of the breakdown of human relationships in the modern world. Last Tango In Paris is permeated with the sense of loss, and it displays the loneliness and desperation of an aging man confused and frightened by a nightmare reality. The use of superlatives to describe the acting of Brando would make his performance seem trite. He displays, as usual, an amazing ability to convey a whole range of emotions and substratum of feeling. Bertolucci allowed Brando improvises with material from his own life. One senses the film conveys a great deal of autobiographical information about Brando, and that his portrayal of Paul is much more than an actor playing a movie role. Bertolucci is a fine director who very carefully utilizes montage, setting and music to support the major emphasis of his film. Although the locus of the story is Paris, one never sees sprawling gardens or architectureal monuments. Rather, the film shows back-streets, dingy subway stations, and squalid rooms.

It is appropriate that this film about the decline of romance should take place in Paris, the fallen city once the perennial symbol of love. Bertolucci is exploring the dark underbelly of human experience, and he refuses to garnish his bleak portrait of contemporary life. As Paul stands on Jeanne's balcony and dies, the camera cuts to a rear view of dirty tenaments which surround this danse-macabre. Bertolucci seems to be wondering aloud if love is possible in the modern world, or if we are condemned to the superficiality of "pep love." Again the image of the danse is used in a film to convey the sense of hopelessness and futility that seems an accompaniment of modern life, viewed as a gruesome danse of destiny. Often, scenes are connected in the movie with a shot of a subway moving in and out of the city. One is reminded of the musings of Leopold Bloom in James Joyce's Ulysses: "Trams passed one another, ingoing, outgoing, clanging. Useless words. Things go on the same; day after day: squads of police marching out, back trams in, out." Last Tango In Paris seems to be in the same genre of recent films like Sunday, Bloody Sunday and Bergman's Cries and Whispers, which explore the breakdown of human communication and touch, and in which the "silence of God" is experienced as more than the silence of the spheres, but appears now as the silence of human beings and their inability to contact each other through love. Last Tango In Paris is the most shocking and brutally realistic of these movies, and, at times, the vision is unbearable. It is an incredibly deep study of the complexity of human relationships in the modern world. Bertolucci refuses to mitigate his excruciating vision or provide easy solutions to the breakdown of the century.

Last Tango In Paris introduces a very new dimension to the cinema art which leaves me with very ambivalent feelings. I have never seen a film explore with such depth and unrelenting honesty the interiority of human experience. The intimate portrayal of the lives in this film made me feel like an intruder or voyeur. At times, I felt I did not have the right to participate in so personal a situation, as when Paul agonizes at his wife's bier. Last Tango In Paris is almost too real, and is an experience which should transcend the payment of money, taking a seat, and watching these lives on a screen. I saw this film on the first Saturday night that it played in Boston, and it was obvious that fashionable Boston society was there as expected. This seemed to cheapen this film, which should not have been the topic of conversation in surrounding bars. It seemed almost irreverent to chatter about the soul of man, which had just been exposed in all its rawness and ultimate loneliness. In Last Tango In Paris, Bertolucci is transforming an intensely personal experience into a public event. The accumulated effect of the film left me shaken and inwardly crying. The vision of life presented by the film left me so unnerved, that I could not speak for several hours. With scenes and lines playing over and over again in my head, I wanted to be alone and away from the crowd. The film left me with a haunted and terrified emptiness in the pit of my stomach which I will never forget. You must see Last Tango In Paris; you will never be the same.

All the time, she keeps running off with truck drivers. I always was a sucker for a happy ending. And now about this, listen. "He switched off the motor and lights and moved over to her, kissed her, wrapping both his arms around her squirming body. She responded as she had before, her mouth opening quickly to his and her tongue playing around his lips first, then thrusting into his mouth. She moved in against him." That's from "The Sleep-Over Babysitter," a real favorite of mine. (Cackle) I'm also very fond of "The Hooker Contest" and "Cycle Nymph." All by promising young writers, very impressive. They blend eroticism with tender brutality as well as I've seen anywhere. The portraits of loose and aggressive women are truly realistic."

Mrs. Masters (formerly Mrs. Johnson); co-author of Human Sexual Inadequacy—

"As a sex expert I am shocked at the dirt and misinformed trash passed off as serious research by the writers of Male. It's really shameful to see the pseudo-studies they present as real; Month after month that rag makes up that nonsense to play on men's fantasies and make a buck. Garbage like, "When Call Girls Do It For Free," "The Nymphomanica Tapes" and "Nurses As Bed Partners." All they ever say is that women are all running around with bloodshot eyes desperate to hop in the sack with anyone that's handy. And then those technique studies, those are really a laugh. "The Sensuous Mouth; oral techniques of lovemaking," bullfeathers, it just tells you to stick out your tongue and say aaahh. And "A Woman's Sex Organs: everything you should know for maximum pleasure/Illustrated," illustrated my foot. Real clumsy stuff a fourth grader could draw from memory. The guy who wrote that one would be lucky if he could find a woman's genitals. What really burns me though is that page "You And Women." Real amateur psychiatry, by a "Dr. Robert Barbfel," what a phoney. He gets questions about what type of girl is the most likely to go to bed and where to go for a hooker. He writes back to eat oysters and treat her rough. Real sweet. Male is just a stinking rag for cheap guys. They've taken a nice wholesome subject and made it dirty. Just a bunch of frauds. It makes me sick. That's all I got to say."

Gen. Omar Bradly (US Army Retired)—

"Each month I sit by the mailbox. Waiting for my copy of Male. At my age you haven't got much to do. And stories about our brave soldiers killing Nazis. Brings back fond memories. Although I never did see a Nazi camp full of ravaged women. I'm sure there were many all over Europe. Because the stories are written by old army men. And soldiers never break their honor. I've read "Raid On The Nazi's Sex Circus Stalag" seventeen times now. And it still does something to me. There's another one I enjoy. About a soldier that hides in a Nazi SS HQ for fourteen months, then escapes and destroys the command post. It makes me feel proud inside. My all time favorite is "The GI Bordello Busters." About a wine and women pleasure palace and the OSS. Killing twelve Nazi generals just before D—Day of Overlord. One thing bothers me though. I once added up the Nazi generals killed in Male. Stories, and found that more were written about than had ever been assigned to the western front. Perhaps some of our boys have told the same stories twice."

Marlin Perkins: Director of the St. Louis Zoo—

"As a life lone conversationalist and TV star, I am appalled at the depraved nature of the Male and animal stories. The first issue I ever saw had "Our 34-Hour Battle With The Giant Manta Ray." I nearly died. It's really just a lot of phoey written by some hack for the men, insecure on their verility. Well, I've got the courage to say it, killing isn't manly, it's senseless and silly. Each issue has at least one animal killing spree, like, "I Escaped Louisiana's Killer Barracuda" or "The Incredible Battling Wolf of Montana." They all sound like they're paying tribute to the animals determination, but they still always end up dead, it's repulsive. Recently they've switched to a new tact. They pretend to write articles deploring such cruelty, but they still have to revel in all the blood and gut details of pet torturing and alligator poaching. It's really shameless, if they were going to write true stories about animals, they should tell about the animal mommies and daddies giving their children protection, the way people mommies and daddies take out insurance from Mutual of Muncie. I'm tired of old men thinking up new ways to kill young animals for Male."

"The ads in Male are some of the best I've ever seen. Zingy, far out. Ya know, headlines like, "ARE YOU MAN ENOUGH? DO YOU HAVE A HAIRY CHEST?" That always sends me. Ya know, the things like $6.98 8mm battery operated projectors with 3-D glasses and a screen thrown in. The blurb says it shows both blacknwhite and color. Far out. You know Joe Weider? He's trying to take over from Charles Atlas, rest his soul. Joe'll make your arms bigger, your chest bigger, make ya gain weight make ya take off weight, or even teach you to be a killer, it all depends which ad you read. Where else can you get copy like this? "UNLEASH A DEVASTATING COUNTER—ATTACK ON YOUR OPPONENT THAT NOT ONLY CATCHES HIM UNAWARES BUT RENDERS HIM HELPLESS, IN PAIN INSTANTLY . . . and if you decide . . . CRIPPLE HIM OR PUT HIM AWAY FOR GOOD." Isn't that something? Did ya feel the power? You can learn all that in just thirty days. Real dynamite. Male is the only place I know where you can sell hell out of fake sideburns, fag underwear and Forest Ranger School. Ya know the products are getting better too. June issue got TELECULT POWER. The ad starts out with the inventor telling about how he willed his sister to go over to the corner and eat biscuits, then all the people who've wished for money, lovers, Cadillacs and governorships. All it takes is $6.98 and Mr. Dublin will send you his book with all the secrets. People rolling dice right fifty times straight and walking out of Vegas with $500,000. Grows hair back, see through walls. Unreal."

Martha Mitchell: former Attorney General—

"I am always pleased to see a bright young lad with a copy of Male magazine. It's never too early to begin educating our youth on the horrors of organized crime, and I know of no better source than in the monthly, true stories of Male about the courageous young men who battle the slimy oppressive tentacles of underworld corruption. "Four Against The Mob," "We Hit The Mafia's California Connection," "Mafia Contract For A Doublecross Killer," and "We Fought The Treasure Bandit's of Texas," are just great for teaching our kids about the vice of money and "The Bill Collection Racket: How To Fight Back," "How To Beat The Loan Swindlers" and "You Can Beat Detroit's Phony New Car Warranties" are surefire crime stoppers, that aid in maintaining American personal tranquility and security. If you ask me, Male should be made compulsory reading in all schools so that our children could learn about the corruption in the cruel world before it's too late."

"The page "Stories For Stags—fun and gags," is the most consistently funny oasis I know of in this world's desert of suffering. Whenever I tour one of our Army bases overseas, I always see the men turned to that page, just doubled over in laughter. Believe me, without that kind of support, alot of those boys never would have pulled through. Let me read you a few of these. "Getting married is like going to a restaurant with friends. You order what you want, then when you see what the other fellow has, you wish you had taken that." Isn't that something? Here's another. "A famous doctor recently disclosed his invention guaranteed to keep people from walking in their sleep. He calls it a double bed." I enjoy these more than I can tell you. Whit with cracker—barrel wisdom, real Americana. I'll read you one more. Jane: "Do you cheat on your husband?" Sue: "Who else would I cheat on?" I contacted the man who sent that in, he's now on my staff, yes sir, I haven't had material like that since vaudeville. With Male, you hit your head, right on the nail."

Billy Graham: world famous evangelist—

"As a world famous evangelist, I try to be a guiding light to the lost sheep of this great nation. Whenever I see a wayward soul, peering through a copy of Male at the newsstand, I take him by the hand, and right then and there we kneel to the Lord and ask his forgiveness. Male is a cheap excuse for a political journal, and has simply become an outlet for kicks among the poor misled souls who have lost the light. Sex is a beautiful thing, but this magazine has made it ugly and base. I am shocked to find this garbage finding its way into the hands of our young impressionable generation. Remember that idle hands are the devils playground and a copy of Male is a one way ticket to Damnation. While I don't claim to be an authority, I think a good deterrent to the spread of this filth, would be to castrate anyone caught with a copy of Male."

Jerry Rubin: campus radical—

"Like Male is my favorite reading material. I rip it off the newsstand every month. All the chicks and blood are really something I can get off on. Really, Male is really great stuff. The story I really like is "No Cycle Bastards Will Steal Our Treasure." Heavy rip off the establishment stuff, really. I also like the coverage they give to the girls that guerillas and terrorists keep back at their camps. I can really identify with those girls who get ripped off, pushed around and loved all the time."

"I got no sympathy, I got no sympathy at all, for those g-d d-mn-d s-ns -f b-tchs, commies, pinkos and perverts that read s-ckin sh-t like Male Rag. The f-ck-n b-st-rds just wanna get their ever lovin r-cks off. I'm bringin a bill to the Senate quick, that would stop the presses and clamp down on the irresponsible -ssf-ce radical-lib elements, who p-ss me off with their naked flesh and lack of respect."

Hugh Hefner: editor and publisher of Playboy—

"In my opinion, Male provides the second best entertainment for men, available at the newsstand. I am by far too modest to tell you what I feel is the best magazine today, but I assure you that Male is #2. I've always enjoyed the pictures in Male. The one thing that does make Male unique though, are the sexual tours, compiled by Males roving reporter. I'm always pleased and thrilled to see articles such as "The 'Backwoods Sex' of Small-Town Girls" all those poor girls run out of the city by the vice squads. And "Strange Female Lovemaking Practices Around The World," did you know they go in for group sex over in Red China? I also liked "World's Wildest SEX CLUB" and "The Girls of Hawaii." Did you know that from London to Honolulu there are girls just dying for a good time. They've got tapes to prove it. I think that if one is to enjoy life, he should live by a new and vital philosophy, like mine. The articles in Male will help, but for the whole philosophy, completely explained, you'll just have to read the magazine I am too modest to mention."

Theater

THE BOYS IN THE BAND

Mart Crowley's play about a surprise birthday party at which seven homosexuals and one questionable straight male gather. The joke is on the host. The bitchy repartee is often quite hilarious, although it has the bear-the-soul bitterness of an old Joan Crawford film. It was a breakthrough-of-sorts five years ago, today we just wonder why. A homosexual friend attended a rehearsal, after which he lit a cigarette, signed and said: "My God. They were all hippies." Performance Center, Academic Building II, Hampshire College, 8.

THE HOUSE OF BLUE LEAVES

John Guare's tremendously entertaining, beguiling, poignant little play about a group of weary misfits who gather in an apartment in Queens the day the Pope comes to speak at Shea Stadium. Absurd, devistatingly funny and sad; one of the best American plays of recent seasons. Performed at Theatre 14 Smith College, Friday and Saturday, 4/20 and 4/21, 8.

MACBETH

The UMass. Theatre will close the Spring semester with its production of Shakespeare's Macbeth. The play will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium on May 2-5 and 9-12 at 8:30 p.m. with matinee performances on May 5, 6, 12, and 13 at 2:00 p.m.

Under the direction of Jim Young and Carol Korty of the Theatre faculty, the UMass production confronts the audience with a unique and challenging concept of Shakespeare's classic tragedy of "o'erleaping" ambition and murder. The director and cast have rooted their interpretation in a world of myth and ritual appropriate to a Stonehenge-like culture. The staged experience is an exploration of the intense animalism of Macbeth and his tribal macrocosm. Strongly juxtaposed against this animalism are the sensations of imagination and conscience birthing within Macbeth, a man conditioned by his tribe to violence and destructiveness.

The scene designer, Jeff Fiala, has created an environmental theatre space which evokes similarly earthy, violent, and jarring qualities. The actors and audience spaces are not defined by the traditional proscenium arrangement. The audience sections are separate from each other, and the action of the play is sometimes around, above, and below the various audience "cells". Thus each audience member is likely to have a very different, but dynamic perspective of Macbeth.

The costumes, designed by June Gaeke, are a further extension of the primitive, mythological context of the production: furs and leather are the primary materials used.

Tickets for Macbeth will be available at the Bartlett box office beginning April 23 (tel. 545-2579). Tickets are $1.50 for UMass students and $2.50 for the general public. However, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings (May 2, 3, 9, and 10), all tickets will be $1.00.

Films

Woody Allen's very funny comedy about a shmeil who falls in love,loses his girl, runs away to South America, and becomes a guerilla leader of a band set on overthrowing the government of a Banana republic. The plot is continually interrupted by some of Allen's funniest gags: his embarrassing attempt to buy pornography, the surprise appearance of J. Edgar Hoover at his trial for treason, and the superb opening and closing pieces involving Howard Cosell: one a play-by-play of a political assassination, the other a play-by-play of Allen's wedding night. The best film by Allen to date and it recalls the best of the Marx Brothers. With Louise Lasser. Mahar, Friday and Saturday, 4/27 and 4/28, 7, 8:30, 10, 11:30.

BONNIE AND CLYDE (1968)

Arthur Penn's romanticized portrait of two of the Thirties most infamous criminals. Undoubtedly his best film, perfectly judged blend of comedy, violence, and love. The almost childlike world of fantasy which Bonnie and Clyde create around themselves, their arrogant yet innocent belief in their own myth, is excellently depicted through Burnett Guffey's evocative photography and the superb performances of Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway. Campus Center Auditorium, Thursday, 4/26, 7, 9, 11.

BUODO SAVED FROM DROWNING (1932)

Jean Renoir's early masterpiece, taken from a popular play, concerns a magnificent tramp named Buodo who is saved from suicide in the Seine by a Parisean antiquarian bookseller. Buodo insists that his rescuer now must take responsibility for him. Renoir staked much on this film, which was produced with complete freedom but was a complete commercial failure until the enthusiasm of film societies rescued it after 1945. It was based on a famous play that ended with Boudu accepting his responsibilities. Renoir changed the ending and made it a justification of joyful anarchy, contrasting this against the middle-class bookseller's plodding towards material comforts. Renoir gave Michel Simon as much freedom as he wanted in the interpretation of the role and he creates an enchanting character. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 4/22, 7 and 9:30.

BREATHLESS (1959)

Jean-Luc Goddard's first film; one of the most influential films of the French New Wave and of the Sixties. A young gangster, after stealing a car, is returning to Paris when he casually kills a policeman on the highway. Penniless in Paris, he seeks out his American girl friend, and tries to pursuade her to flee with him to Italy since Police inspector is closing in. Goddard's first feature is marked especially by its acerbic, derisive tone, its easy confidence, its personal contemporary (if somewhat flowery) expression of story and language, its unconventional editing style, and its vision of Paris, where destiny overwhelms two lovers doomed to separation and death. This was Jean Paul Belmondo's first major role, and his interpretation of an anarchic criminal, confused bitter, and cynical, made him famous. Jean Seberg, all feline ambiguity, has never been better directed. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Tuesday, 4/24, 8.

BROTHER SUN, SISTER MOON

Franco Zefferelli's youth operetta about the life and times of St. Francis of Assisi. He escapes the materialistic vacuum of his father's home, sees visions, and builds a commune-like mission for his band of fellow believers in the outskirts of Assisi. The film ends with a visit to the Pope and the sumptiously appointed finale recalls the best of Cecil B. DeMille by way of the worst of Busby Berkeley. A hokey stab at relevancy, beautiful to look at, but shallow and shapeless. Graham Faulkner plays the limp-wristed Francis, his sexless laison with Judi Bowker is meant to represent the purity of the celebite life, but it appears to be a fag-to-fag hag relationship. Alec Guiness plays the Pope in the greatest headdress since Carmen Miranda last blessed the screen with three-foot garlands of fruit piled on her head. With Guiness, its bejeweled, Donovan plays the plodding score. Beings Wednesday, 4/18, Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

CABARET (1972)

The best American film of last year is this dazzling musical portrait of Berlin immediately prior to the Nazi takeover. It's the best musical since the great M—G—M musicals of the Fifties and effectively alters the genre since the musical numbers are prisms through which we view the action. They are written by Fred Ebb and John Kander, who improved from the stage production. The direction of Bob Fosse crystallizes the gaudy night life of Christopher Isherwood's "Berlin Stories" from which this film was adapted. Liza Minelli is splendidly full-bodies as Sally Bowles with Michael York, Helmut Griem, and Joel Grey.Best Picture citation by the National Board of Review; eight Oscars, including direction, actress, supporting actor (Grey), film editing, and music scoring. Paris Cinema, Springfield. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

CITIZEN KANE (1941)

More has been written about Orsen Welle's celebrated film debut than of any other sound film. The film explores the career of a newspaper magnate during the early part of the century from multiple points of view. It was acclaimed as the greatest film of all time in 1962 and 1972 by a poll of international critics taken by Sight and Sound Magazine. Few great films are as much fun or as technically dazzling. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 4/24, 7 and 9:30.

CRIES AND WHISPERS

Ingmar Bergman's magnificent new film takes place in a nineteenth century manor house where two sisters await the death of a third. The film explores continual Bergman themes with a clarity and intensity unlike any other film you may ever wish to see. Hypnotically photographed by Sven Nykylist, the film has the mood and feel of a dream and suggests the works of Edward Munch in its composition and Strindberg in its design. The acting by a quartet of Bergman's favorite actresses is superb, going beyond the realm of naturalistic acting.

The film has the power of ritual; a devastating emotional experience. Amherst Cinema, Amherst; Academy of Music, Northampton.

DARK PASSAGE (1947)

One of the best of the Forties criminal melodramas, topped only by The Maltese Falcon. The film is concerned with an excaped San Quentin convict who is concealed by an artist in a petty flat. The escapee is Humphrey Bogart, his accomplice in crime is Lauren Bacall and they have never played in a film with more charm and humor. The film which takes place on the outskirts of San Francisco harbor, is directed with a tense impressinist vividness by Delmer Daves. He has a great way with small, parsonal relationships, such as Agnes Moorehead's prying, vicious bitch and Houseley Stevenson's plastic surgeon. Visually, a beautifully orchestrated film; one of the best of the late Forties. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 4/26, 7.

DARK VICTORY (1939)

Bette Davis plays a socilaite dying of a brain tumor this greatest of tear jerker dramas. When she's planting geraniums and her eyesight fails her is one of the most wrenching moments in the history of three handkerchief melodramas. Directed by Edmund Goulding, it remains one of Davis's most often cited best performances. With Humphrey Bogart in a supporting role. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 12/22, 7.

THE FIXER (1968)

John Frankenheimer's respectfu, but altogether flat and heavy version of Bernard Malumud's award-winning novel. The story tells of persecution in Poland during the early part of the centry. Alan Bates plays a Jew who is a victim of Anti-sematic laws and his performance has a low intensity and feeling that makes it the best thing in the film. Otherwise Frankenheimer works off the Dalton Trumbo script as if it were stating revelations about human cruelty. It's the old Hollywood message film handsomely photographed on location but burdened with all-too-reverent approach to its material. Frankenheimer made two extraordinary films in the early Sixties, All Fall Down and The Manchurian Candidate, but has since not fulfilled the promise of his early work. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 4/21, 7 and 9:30.

THE FRENCH CONNECTION

A fact-based account of how police track down a shipment of heroin in New York City which is a fast, flashy, and fascinating thriller. The grittiness and chaos of New York City is captured at breakneck speed and brutality by director William Freidkin who has fashioned perhaps the stylish and finest thriller in some time. Gene Hackman plays a boorish detective who, as the antisocial, antihuman, detective, somewhere between Bullitt and Joe, the latest film cliche. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, Saturday, 4/27, 4/28, 7 a d 9:15.

THE HARDER THEY FALL (1956)

Humphrey Bogart's last film is a return for him to a more typical Fortyish part. Based upon a novel by Budd Schulbert, the film concerns the brutal world of boxing. Bogart plays a broken down journalist, a bit on the wrong side of the law, who gets integrity in the last reel. Featured are the wonderful Jan Sterling and Rod Stieger in a strong performance that matches Bogart's Replacing The Big Sleep Campus Center Auditorium, Saturday, 4/21, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE HEARTBREAK KID

A refreshingly peculiar comedy about the transiency of love and marriage. Charles Grodin discovers on his honeymoon that he is no longer in love with his wife, Jeanne Berlin, and falls head over heels for beautiful and sensual Cybil Shepherd. As Groudin goes about getting rid of his wife and sharing his beauty, we are provided with many brillantly acted, hilarious scenes. Director Elaine May uses a simple, detached approach to exploit the comic potential of this unusual situation. The film has a wonderful naturalism; there are many slow dolly shots and almost no background music. Unfortunately Ms. May used this detached approach in her treatment of the characters as well. The viewer is not allowed to feel anything for the characters, especially poor Jannie Berlin, who is mocked for her suburban Jewishness, milked for laughs, and disposed of mercilessly. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT (1935)

Regarded by all those involved in its making as a low-budgeted quickie, this film astounded (and worried) the Hollywood studio heads by becoming a box office sensation and by winning five Academy Awards-Best Picture, Best Director (Frank Capra), Best Screenplay, Best Actress (Claudette Colbert) and Best Actor (Clark Gable). It has been the only film in the forty-five year old history of the Oscars to win all five major awards. It worried Hollywood establishment because it lacked all the standing component parts a successful film contained in the early Thirties. Claudette Colbert starred in this Columbia made film because her home studio Paramount was punishing her for some minor transgression; it was the best punishment she ever had. It, too, made Gable a super-star and he has never been more likeable in a film. The success of this benign, delightful comedy changed the style og that genre for the next decades and continues to be one of the best remembered films of the Thirties. Mahar. Friday, 4/20, 9.

THE MALTESE FALCON (1941)

John Huston's first film, and a wonder of the detective genre. It is a near-perfect visual equivalent of the Dashiell Hammett thriller from which it was adapted. The film concerns Humphrey Bogart as detective Sam Spade who gets involved in a fight for possession of a statuette called The Maltese Falcon. John Huston already had an established reputation as a scriptwriter when he directed this, his first film. It is a faithful adaptation of the original novel with a style that reflects the essence of Hammett. In fact, its style and pace still make it one of Huston's most memorable films. Although the two earlier versions passed almost unnoticed, they are part of the development of the American film noir in the literary tradition of Hammett and James Cain. Humphrey Bogart was well known as an actor at the time, but this film was really the first to introduce the famous "Bogie" characteristics that made him a star. Sidney Greenstreet gives one of his most unforgettable performances as Kasper Gutman. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 4/22, 8:45.

THE PHILADELPHIA STORY (1940)

Tracy Lord, a brittle heiress, is divorced from her husband, C.K. Dexter Haven, who still pursues her, and is courted by a gossip columnist, Mike Connor. George Cukor's version of Philip Barry's glossy comedy about manners and morals of the upper class is deft and engaging. Often hailed as one of the most successful films of its type, it is especially memorable. Director George Cukor's sense of timing, pacing, and use of dialogue has rarely been more evident. The chemistry between the three leads make the film irresistable. Katherine Hepburn came to the film following her success with it on the New York stage. It revitalized her sagging career. She won the New York Film Critics Award as Best Actress of the Year. Grant, too, coming from his success with the two classic screwball comedies, His Girl Friday and Bringing Up Baby, both directed by Howard Hawks, gives another memorable performance. The true star of the film, though, is James Stewart who, in the film's second lead as a gossip column, steals the film and an Oscar from the hands of the deserving Grant. Mahar Auditorium, Friday, 4/20, 7.

SAVE THE TIGER

John G. Avildson has the mind of a juvenile anarchist. Hik films Joe, Cry Uncle!, and now this gem, work off of frightening premises as if they were some great philosophical cornerstone. This film concerns itself with the corruption of the great American hero, Willy Loman in his last ditch attempt to make good. Jack Lemmon plays a garment manufacturer named Harry who concotes a grandoise plan to fool both his customers and creditors through blowing up his warehouse and using his insurance money to finance those orders. Harry suffers from a grand social diseade called materialism and his illegal plot presented as an honest cure to his plight. It's a little like shooting your nose off because it's bleeding. Producer-screenwriter Steve Shagan believes in the worth of this man and its an altogether satisfying achievement in hollow rhetoric. Jack Lemmon's peformance is arch and unsatisfying; it's an ugly comeback role for him. John G. Avildsen directs in a sleek, pompous way as if the film was some sort of primer in achieving the new consciousness. Bunk. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE SOUND OF MUSIC (1965)

SOLYENT GREEN

SUSPICION (1944)

Joan Fontaine plays a woman who marries Cary Grant then suspects him of wanting to kill her. One of Alfred Hitchcock's best melodramas of the Forties. Fontaine won an Oscar for Best Actress. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday 4/22, 8.

TELL ME THAT YOU LOVE ME, JUNIE MOON (1970)

A tender little novel has been wrenched into a grotesque melodrama, thanks to the deadly touch of Otto Preminger. Marjorie Reynold's novel concerns itself with the odd liaison between three of societal misfits who meet while recuperating at a mental hospital. They atteinpt to escape, one dies. Preminger is a fine director of epic nonsense and blowsy drama, such as Exodus and Anatomy of a Murder, respectively, but when he attempts to mold something as fragile as this, he only succeeds in making a play do-gh sculpture. Liza Minnelli plays the title character and is competent enough, Ken Howard and James Coco are featured. One senses from Preminger's recent work a complete emotional detachment from his subject, it's as if he's watching his characters, and the results can be found in soulless dramas like this one. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 4/21, 8.

THAT MAN FROM RIO (1963)

TREASURE OF THE SIERRA MADRE (1947)

In Mexico, in 1920, Dobbs two down-and-out hoboes, meet an old-timer, who tells them he knows where gold is to be found if they can raise the money for equipment. They set off for the bandit-ridden Sierra Madre and strike it rich. A morality fable on greed and human nature in a typical adventure setting. Huston sets the harsh realities of Mexico against two North Americans whose main desire is for wealth and for the luxury, comfort, and women it will buy. In contrast is the philosophic old-timer (played by John Huston's father) who learns true wisdom from the peaceful life of the Indians and who laughs ironically as the gold dust blows away among the cactus in the final shot. The fable is not at all schematic and is brough brilliantly to life by the powerful characterizations of the men continually at each other's throats and by the harsh re-creation of a hostile nature and a primitive urban environment. To reduce it to a "tragedy on greed and the poetry of failure" is to simplify it, since its apparent simplicity covers many levels of meaning. This is Bogart's most famous role, but Walter Huston, though less impressive, is a match for him all the same and won an Oscar for his performance. John Huston won Oscars for direction and scriptwriting and himself appears in a bit part as the man in the white suit. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 4/26, 8:45.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE (1932)

As one critic has put it, "We can't imagine an audience that wouldn't be delighted and dazzled by this perfectly played, exquisitely judged, faultessly paced, comic masterpiece--and if you don't believe all those superlatives could apply to one movie, you don't know Ernst Lubitsch." Herbert Marshal and Miriam Hopkins play a pair of con artists who discover each other and pool their resources to make crime a fine art. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 4/22, 7:30.

THE UMBRELLAS OF CHERBOURG (1964)

Genevieve who works in an umbrella shop, is in love with Guy a service station attendant, but he has to leave for military service. He does not write to Genevieve because he is wounded. She discovers she is pregnant and married Roland for security. When Guy returns he marries Madeleine. Several years later, Guy and Genevieve meet briefly. This charming musical comedy in which all the dialogue is sung, as in an operetta, could be described as "poetic neo-realism." It has exemplary sets by Bernard Evein. Thompson 104, Tuesday 4/24, 7 and 9.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ATHLETE

Walt Disney Studio has, unintentionally, made the first G-rated homosexually oriented film. It puts the "Bijoy" to shame. The film concerns a young man who is raised in the jungle and is found by a good, black physical education teacher. They return to the Midwest where the boy becomes what the title tells him to be. Disney Studio goes all out in this film, not only are they attempting to cash in on the fantasy world of thirteen year old girls with their star Jan-Michael Vincent (the good looking one on the cover of "Tiger Beat" and "Fave"), but they throw in some social consciousness to boot. Still one has the feeling that the film's primary appeal is to, to use the vernacular, chicken queens, and has put a new twist on the rating called "G". Calvin Theater, Northampton.

YELLOW SUBMARINE (1968)

This feature length cartoon is a surrealistic voyage through Pepperland with Sgt. Pepper's Lonelyy Hearts Club Band as they try to conquer hate with love. This feature length animated film is blatantly anti-Disney and breathtakingly original. The score is also remarkable, and includes many standards, Beatle hits, plus a few songs written by the Beatles, especially for the film and also some lush theme music by George Martin. The Beatles like everyone else have long since abandoned their hope for love as panacea, but a breath of this Haight-Ashbury idealism is quite refreshing in 1973. Mahar, Saturday, 4/21, 6, 8, 10, 12.

Letters To The Editor

An Explanation And A Defense

To The Editor:

Since SPECTRUM wasn't given the opportunity to defend its budget Wednesday night before the Student Senate (the small elective body that makes decisions for students), here is an explanation of what happened and a defense: Nick Appostala proposed that the budget be cut in half. Paul Hamil took the floor and said that SPECTRUM was a "nice" magazine and the four-page fold-out was very "nice", but he couldn't understand why SPECTRUM couldn't publish a less expensive magazine. DRUM, he said, puts out a high quality magazine which costs less. Why can't SPECTRUM publish a magazine like DRUM. O.K. The reason Mr. Hamil doesn't understand these things is because he doesn't know anything about graphics or about art. SPECTRUM is published by Woodland, Andrew, and the color separations are done by Unigraphic. DRUM is published by Gazette and its color is done by World Color. If you compare Gazette to Andrew you will find that the photographs are clearer, the halftones better defined, the paper stock heavier, glossier, which makes the type more readable and causes the photographs to reproduce better. The typesetting is more consistent and error-free; and the cover stock, feel it, is textured and rich; and take a look at the color. Unigraphic colors are brighter, clearer, more distinct, balanced and contrasted. I'm speaking now of the differences in the publishing companies, not in material of DRUM and SPECTRUM.

DRUM has a budget of $33,000 a year. SPECTRUM is budgeted for $13,000 for next year. DRUM hopes to put out four issues (about thirty pages an issue) with eight thousand copies of each issue. SPECTRUM puts out two issues (about eighty pages apiece), twelve thousand copies each. DRUM prints about 120 pages and 24,000 copies and is funded for 33,000 dollars a year. SPECTRUM printed 160 pages and 24,000 copies and is presently funded for 26,000 dollars a year. Which magazine is more expensive?

Now, there's something else. Hamil actually picked up the magazine and referring to the fold-out, said, "This is very nice." He said this somewhat sarcastically. Now whether Hamil is aware of it or not, that fold-out is a reproduction (not the best or most expensive reproduction, but a reproduction nonetheless) of a painting by William Patterson, who is an excellent artist of the University community. A work of art like that is not "nice". Mr. Hamil doesn't seem to have developed any sense of criteria for what is good either graphically or artistically. What is important about that fold-out and the rest of the magazine is that it reproduces the art and photos in a manner which sometimes compliments the work and at least gives one an idea of what it's like. Woodland is not the most expensive publishing company. It is a little better than average. Like the University, eh?

Now, as SPECTRUM publishes art, photography, fiction, nonfiction, and poetry, it is (hopefully) a representative reflection of the culture of the University. If you want to represent that culture in a cheap magazine, re: in a magazine which is smaller, costs half as much, looks half as good, it is your perogative to do so. But if you cheapen the reflection of your culture then it is obvious that your value of that culture in itself has cheapened. You do not think as much of culture as you do of services (Area Government, Campus Center Fees, WTOY et cet) and if that is true, Mr. Hamil and fellow senators, then I suggest it is the fault of the American Value System, but in any case it is something that should be changed.). It certainly should not be projected onto the University and the students of the coming years. If you have read the current issue of SPECTRUM and you react favorably to it, tell your student senator you want the budget changed, or write a letter to the Collegian, or start a petition or something, for God's sake. Hamil and people like him have made a mess of this university for long enough. Clean it up. Clean it up.

People Walk Below!

To The Editor:

"A quarter dropped from one of the top floors of a residential tower would have the same effect as dropping a hatchet." Residents of Southwest were warned about throwing things out of windows. Apparently some "fun-loving" people did not take heed of the warning. On one occasion a few weeks ago, a plastic bag full of water was dropped from John Adams tower and it smashed the roof of a car parked below! Just recently, some fool threw a chair out of the 19th floor lounge of J.Q.A. Two of my friends came within 15 feet of being pulverized. It is also dangerous to walk near Washington tower on a weekend because beer bottles fly out of windows.

This is our home and I resent the fact that we have to walk around on weekends on constant air-raid alert! Never mind bottles, now we have to look out for flying chairs too!

For those of you that do these fun things, may I remind you that PEOPLE WALK BELOW THOSE WINDOWS! Are you ready to take the responsibility for seriously injuring someone? Remember, you don't know who those people are below you,--how would your like to knock a good friend off the head? Come on. Grow up, please, before you kill somebody!

Never Again!

To The Editor:

After reading the letter entitled, I thought about Hitler, I had the urge to punch the person, if thats what you want to call it, right in the mouth. I called up the Collegian office, and was told it was meant to be a satire. Satire or not, it smells of putrid, idiotic, ignorant bigotry. Six million of my fellow Jews died because of incidents like this. I will not stand by while, satiric or not, letters are being written like this.

When Six million Jews are slaughtered, no one makes satire of it. Six Million dead Jews is no joke to me. If it is to some one let that person get in touch with me. NEVER AGAIN!

Is Bob Estelle A Phony?

To The Editor:

As I have previously been informed, writing this letter in reply to Bob Estelle's editorial is silly because no one normally graces his irrational ego trips with a reply. Some day he will graduate and write his tracts for the John Birch Society where a pro-Nazi mentality is appreciated. Meanwhile, his latest offering on Nixon being a phony (how mild can a condemnation get?) espouses a certain vein of thought that I find curious.

What has John Maynard Keynes' sexual orientation got to do with the merits or current relevance of his economic philosophy? Mr. Estelle goes to great lengths to prove that Nixon is a phony because he adheres to the teachings of this "liberal fag." The obvious implication is that there is something wrong with people who are either liberals or fags or worse, both. The further implication is that the art, literature, music, law, religion, sports or anything created by liberal fags is also worthless. Herein lies that pre-disposed authoritarian mentality that leads to the extermination of Jews, blacks, Indians, homosexuals, Armenians, etc. But then of course only liberal fags were singled out. Does this mean that Mr. Estelle is willing to tolerate, condone, or even applaud the works of conservative fags, for among his philosophical comrades there must be a few?

Bob Estelle seems to be having phallic problems all over the place with liberal fags, Dick the prick, the gun control laws. Just as the Communist regimes today are ruthlessly anti-homosexual, in the coming Nixon Commie State Bob will find his anti-homosexual talents useful. Or is it possible that, considering all his difficulties with phallis symbols, Bob Estelle is a phony? Only his "sister" really knows.

Vote For Roy Perdue

To The Editor:

The Student Government Association presidency is an important position in the continuing fight to protect student rights at the University of Massachusetts. For the first time in quite a while there is a candidate who has an intimate knowledge of the problems of the areas at UMass. This man is Roy Perdue. His dynamic leadership changed the Orchard Hill Area Government from a weak, non-functioning body to one of the strongest area governments on campus. It was under his leadership that the students of Orchard Hill gained control of Cultural Enrichment Funds and UMass Building Authority funds, as well as acquiring a major voice in the running of Orchard Hill. The Orchard's example has led the way to stronger area governments across campus and to recognition of area governments as viable ruling bodies by the Student Senate and the people of the areas.

Roy is also no stranger to Whitmore or the Student Senate having gone to both places numerous times to fight for the rights of the Orchard and the areas. He spent a year as the editor of the Orchard Hill newspaper, The Sage, and then two years as president of the Orchard Hill Area Government.

His experience and his knowledge of the university, the senate, and the areas, as well as my personal experiences with Roy, have convinced me that he is the best person for the position.

I urge the members of the area governments and the senate to cast their votes Monday night for Roy Perdue.

Jive!

To The Editor:

I like to suck tit as much as the next, But as far as my mother goes, her's goes too far in the direction of her navel.

As far as the women's lib movement goes, I wish it would. Seriously now, don't you think you're being a little bit absurd, hypocritical, and down right nasty. You can jive, and I can jive, but your jive stems from hate, or maybe just prejudice. Ever since third grade, when I first got fucked, this heap of bullshit has been smeared and gushed at me as I go from cunt to cunt. All you girls are looking for is a surrogate father and you don't see the real person underneath your fantasy. Jive. Your perception seems a bit slanted, unlike mine, Jive. Meanwhile, you should try to keep out of trouble, and be careful not to rape anyone.

As far as my perception goes, and you wish it would, taking a quick overview of the female population of UMass., I've seen a very dense population of crawdads, heafers, and the dreaded bell bottomed blues. We might see a rare example of venerial material, but damned if their not in a world of their own. In closing, as I mount my desk to type this, I would like to add,

I'm sad, too bad, you didn't come with a penis
Medical Science will soon fix this bias
But till then giris, why not come and try us.

Student Courts: Justice On Campus

There is a small group of concerned individuals on this campus who, through the last few years, have tried to administer justice, truth, and the American way; all with one bang of the gavel. These dedicated dealers in law mete out justice on a campus full of crime. They perform a function that most administrators refuse to perform.

The Student Judiciary and the Student Attorney General's Office are these brave souls. The Student Attorney General's Office isn't in Washington or even Boston, although from such an impressive name one might think that. The office is on the eighth floor of our very own Campus Center, humble establishment that it is. The purpose of the Student Judiciary and the Attorney General's Office is to handle legal and semi-legal disputes that undergraduates fall into on campus. The Judiciary is the branch that will try the offender, the Att. General's Office will supply him with an advocate at his trial and make sure that a prosecutor is there. Violations of the Code of Student Conduct will swing this mighty legal system into action in an attempt to get at the truth. Violations of this Code include unauthorized, removal of property, lewd or indecent behavior, mass disturbances, and misuses of library or other academic material. Contrary to popular belief these rules were not handed down with the Ten Commandments.

Recruitment of advocates (lawyers for the Court System) is haphazard, at best. An ad is placed in the MDC, the respondents are put through a brief training period where they are associated with an older and more experienced advocate. After this period the junior Perry Masons are ready to go out into the world and slay every Hamilton Burger. Not enough people respond to the call for a career in law to have a freer screening process. Advocates are assigned to cases by their experience. A new advocate might be put on a shoplifting case because it is the least complicated.

Selection of judges in the past has been done by a committee of nine people. Three student senators, three justices, and three former justices (who could ask for anything more) have made up this body. In the future, justices may be chosen from the area governments and the Student Senate with no participation from the Judiciary. There are of course different levels of courts: the dorm court, the area court, and the University court; the only way to find the truth after that is to see the fifteen year old Perfect Master.

Besides the fact that the average UMie doesn't even know the Courts and the advocates exist (unless he's read this column) there are a few problems. First, the courts mete out justice only to undergraduates. Does this mean that only undergraduates are capable of crime? The University is a community, one cannot mete out justice for one section of the community. There must be some overall guidelines. Graduate students, faculty, administrators, undergrads, and employees should all be prepared to different judiciary systems when on this campus. There must be a judiciary system that is detached from the administration; justice cannot become another department in Whitmore.

Under the present system undergraduates are the only people who can be defendants. Yet, haven't other members of this University bent if not broken laws. While rent control has been established in many cities in this state, we at the University have been faced with a strange dilemma not only have rents gone up but services have disappeared. This could be the basis of a legal or semi-legal action. If undergrads are subject to the University courts for charging something from the University there [illegible] why aren't others? This University needs an all encompassing court system that will deal with as many offenses as is possible — don't expect the court to start hanging murderers from lightposts! Until this happens the court system cannot be looked on as a serious light unless you're a defendant.

The Money Manipulators

To fight a war or revolution, you must have an army and weapons with which to arm it. To have this, you need money. And if you're not rich, you must get someone to give you the money you need.

Most governments don't have this kind of money. They have to borrow it. And the only people who can lend it to them are multi-millionaires who have the necessary funds available. These multi-millionaires are known as international bankers. They lend countries with deficit budgets the money that they need to upkeep their countries. The only problem is that the money comes with strings attached. You see, these international bankers wanted to control the world so that they could have a monopoly on all of the business in the world. Very low money to governments so, in return, are able to put enough pressure on the heads of their governments to do what they want. And if a ruler gets out of hand, these international bankers simply arrange for his country to be attacked by another country which they bankroll.

But they also have set up the Communist governments, they just LOVE people like Lenin and Mao to set up the kind of world that they want. Lenin was formally asked to overthrow the czar of Russia (a fact he had failed. But to stick with help from the banking dynasties of Rothschild and Warburg. Lenin had what he needed. He asked. Formally, was manipulated by John D. Rockefeller and Jacob Schiff (Kuhn, Loeb & Co.). This is where the Communists got started.

These master planners, the international bankers, then sought to control the United States. They knew that if you control a nation's economy, you control that nation. The only problem was that the United States built on a free economy where the money was backed by gold which was a stumbling barrier because of the intrinsic value of gold. The United States also operated on a sound budget and, therefore, did not need to borrow money from any international bankers. But the master planners succeeded in getting their man into the White House in 1912: Woodrow Wilson. Wilson had an adviser by the name of Edward M. House who was to the Wilson administration what Henry Kissinger is to the Nixon Administration. This administration passed two of Karl Marx's main ideas for gradually setting up a communist state. The first was the graduated income tax, which destroys the incentive to earn more money (but not in all cases). The second was the Federal Reserve which puts the control of the nation's economy in the hands of a private organization that has been controlled by the international bankers.

Throughout the years since then, they have controlled the presidency through their organization known as the Council on Foreign Relations (see my column "The Bureaucracy"). These presidents have run deficit budgets and have borrowed money from international bankers in order to make up the parts of the budget which can't be paid for by tax revenues. The interest alone on these loans is the third largest item in the Federal Budget. And these bankers get the money by having the Federal Reserve print up more and more paper money without increasing the backing of this currency. Thus, the American dollar has less value. This, my friends, IS THE MAIN CAUSE OF INFLATION TODAY IN THIS COUNTRY!

Yes, the government, through the Federal Reserve, is the main cause of inflation, through deficit spending. The only way to cure this problem is to return to a currency with a sound opening and to abolish the Federal Reserve. We also need to enter new bankers which do not have the backing of the international bankers who control the Council on Foreign Relations. What we need is less government, not a bureaucracy which rules and dictates solutions at home and abroad. Thomas Jefferson once said that the government which governs best is the one which governs least. We need such a government which can restore the balance of power which has been usurped by Federal officials. We also need to return to honest hard organizations which, while it is not perfect, it is the best that anyone has ever come up with. The case for limited government is beautifully presented in "The Law" by Frederick Bastiat, a Frenchman who lived in the mid-1800's. The book is available, for one dollar, from the Foundation for Economic Education in Irvington-on-Hudson, New York. This company also puts out "The Freeman", a monthly magazine on liberty and the free competitive system. It is available, every change, just for the asking.

To really learn what this is all about, read "The Law" and "The Freeman". These political-[illegible] should answer any questions about capitalism as well as explain the fallacies of socialism.

Your Head

Rites Of Spring

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Spring energizes and potentiates the feelings of those who experience it. The first sensations of warm days tap and arouse thoughts, images, memories, associations and emotions. Our experience is heightened poetically, philosophically and instinctively. No one can fail to at least take note of the glorious spectacle of birth and rebirth everywhere.

Winter is experienced at least partly as a season of insulation. The outside world is faced with sweaters and overcoats. As children we spent less time playing outside and more time imprisoned by school rooms—days which lost their sunlight by mid-afternoon. Our play was more restrictive, less expressive, confined to the indoors. Spring is a time for emerging, a season of hopefulness, and often of dramatic romantic optimism. Those whose inner state allows them to resonate with this optimism experience a euphoric sense of well-being.

The person who meets spring in a more depressed frame of mind, who feels pessimistic about himself and the possibilities of achieving satisfaction in his life may, however, feel isolated by contrast. If the sense of personal failure is primarily in the interpersonal sphere, or more specifically in the romantic-sexual situation, then the experience of spring can be particularly painful. The insulation of winter protects in other than purely physical ways. Somehow spring demands both intimacy and openness in a special way.

Spring fever, that annual affliction characterized by melancholy and nostalgia is to some degree suffered by almost everyone. Few of us are total optimists or total pessimists though we may for a variety of complex reasons wish to see ourselves at one or the other extreme. Spring somehow reminds us of our great successes and terrible failures; of opportunities taken and missed. It raises great hopes for the future but anxieties as well.

Above all, whoever we are, Spring reminds and reaffirms how richly emotional we as human beings are.

Classics Society To Present Plays

The Classics Society, an organization of students interested in ancient life and literature, will sponsor a variety program of English plays by Natalie Marra and A. E. Housman and of dramatized Latin stories from Petronius' Satyricon, a Roman novel which Fellini's movie of the same name has once more made famous.

The program is titled, Cena Trimalchionis, or A Party at Trimalchio's, and it will be presented on two nights, Monday, April 30 and Tuesday, May 1, in Thompson 106, at 8:00 p.m. Admission will be free, but the public, in order to reserve seats, may obtain free advance tickets at the Classics Department office, Herter 537, or may reserve them by calling 545-0512.

The Cena Trimalchionis is a surrealistic kaleidoscope of dramatic pieces, each of which reflect man's constant fear of death. In "All About Trial Eve," an original one-act play by Natalie Marra--who is an undergraduate major in English literature at the University--a bevy of lucky girls who won sexual attentions from Jehovah and Zeus discuss their legacy of deadly boredom.

In "Fragment of a Greek Tragedy," an English play in Greek style by poet A. E. Housman, a chorus of observers mouth automatic, but useless responses to the shrieks of a dying woman.

The cast of Cena Trimalchionis is made up of students majoring in Latin literature: graduate students, Austin Chinn and Carole Law; undergraduate students, Edward Butterworth, John Donnelly, Marilyn Hendrickson, Craig Kneeland, Marybeth Shepard, and Diane Steen. Edward Phinney of the Department of Classics, has arranged and directed the program.

Mater Misella (Carol Law) discovers that witches have stolen her baby in the Classics Society production of Cena Trimalchionis by Petronius, in Thompson 106, April 30 and May 1, at 8 p.m.

Cum Laude 3.2 For Class Of '77

The following Faculty Senate recommendations have been endorsed by the Administration and will go into effect as indicated:

Beginning with the class of 1977, the minimum average for cum laude will be raised from 3.0 to 3.2. No degree higher than cum laude will be awarded automatically on the basis of the QPA alone. Higher honors will be awarded only through departmental (or BDIC) honors work or departmental recommendations. This will be mandatory for the class of 1977 and optional for graduating classes prior to that time.

We urge all departments to establish internal guidelines to facilitate the implementation of these new procedures.

UMass Dance Group Concert Tonight

By CHRISTOPHER RUDKIN

The University Concert Dance group opened its Spring Concert Wednesday night with an exciting two-hour performance of faculty and student choreographed works ranging from classical to interpretive modern dane. The concert will be performed tonight and Saturday night as well in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00.

Marilyn Patton's Moving In and Out opened the concert with lively color and motion, but the mood changed repeatedly with Bruce Smith's macabre Trepedation Suite, Paula Frausini's introspective Two Faces, and Andrea Watkin's emotionally charged Encounters.

The dancers showed a level of skill equal to many of the professional dance companies, which have performed at Bowker. Junior David Smith gave a virtuoso performance in several of the dances, particularly Daniel Peterson's Tarcossic Dialogue.

On the whole, the dancers seemed strongest in modern and technique, which is stressed in the Dance Department. If some dances lacked depth in choreography, they made up for it in stage presence and projection, a quality which was unusually noticeable in the concert. Many of the student-choreographed works stressed acting skills, which as director Marilyn Patton pointed out, is an outgrowth of the student's exploration into new dance styles.

Tap dancing in 1973? Marcia Thomas and Hal Boyer were a surprise in (This Could Be. . . .), a spotlighted tap number that lifted completely out of the preceding tone of the concert.

The music the dancers use is mostly a college of modern and electronic music with two original student compositions included. More live music would be an asset to this group, which has such a strong sense of projection.

While the dance compositions were shorter than many professionals pieces, their diversity was one of the concert's strongest points. Thursday and Saturday night's performances will be a different program which promises to be equally exciting and surprising.

Ms. Vexler-Determination Plus

By JOHN BOCK

Anne Vexler may come back a national champion in Women's Gymnastics this week. But if she doesn't she will still have left her mark on Women's Gymnastics at UMass. Ever since she was the fourth place finisher in the Floor Exercises at the Nationals her freshman year Anne has been working harder and harder. Not just to win the Nationals, but to improve herself as a symnast and prove herself as an athlete.

When Anne came to UMass she wasn't just any run-of-the-mill woman gymnast. She was the New Jersey State High School All-Around Champion and the New Jersey Senior AAU Champ. Maybe that isn't much to brag about, but the fact was her high school didn't even have a women's team until her senior year. Anne comes with expertise that she achieved working out at 7:00 A.M. in the high school gym on the uneven bars and on vaulting, being spotted by the men's coach and coached by her mother. (Who, by the way was a National AAU, Balance Beam Champ herself and alternate for the 1948 Olympic team.) In the afternoon she would work at floor exercises and on the balance beam, with the boys team.

People watching Anne work out in Boyden automatically assume that she is a Phys. Ed. major. Nope. She married Norman Vexler, a former UMass All-Around performer, on October 9, 1971, and that began a whole new way of thinking about herself as a competitor, a student, and a wife.

Anne experienced bad shin splints her freshman year and that summer dislocated an elbow in summer camp. Her sophomore year she took it easy and did no vaulting and had a mediocre year all around in competition. She almost hung it up. The first semester of this year she didn't compete. "I wanted to stay with Norman, but at the same time I realized that competing wasn't out of my system. Being married has helped, because Norman convinced me that it was more important to go into the gym healthy and work on the things I could do well."

It was good advice because in her first try at the All-Around, since her freshman year, she won it and this year captured the Eastern Regional All-Around title, earning her a berth on the UMass team that qualified for the Nationals and again making herself one of the top contenders.

When Anne returns she will entertain thoughts about packing up and moving on down to State College, Pennsylvania where she will assume the position of Director of the Nittany Gymnastics School. She will be instructing young women from 10 and 11 up to 17 years of age."

Said Anne, "I am just finding out that I like coaching. It's nice to work with young girls that don't have a lot of mistakes."

Anne has been a part of one of the nation's best women's teams. She has had men and women coaches and has met some of the leading gymnasts of the times. What has it meant to her?

"The girls on our team are very demanding and independent women and aren't bothered by details. They are part of the reason I came back. I missed them and UMass. Being with these women who are very confident of themselves as athletes has been quite an experience. They aren't afraid to do what they want to do and do it well. That means a lot to me when I compete."

It would have been easy for Anne to quit after her freshman year when she had all the laurels, or when her injuries were bothering her last season, or right after she was married.

But she didn't. Anne came back and is doing better than ever; perhaps because she is determized, but more likely because in her own words, "I have to do it in order to feel good."

Pats Obtain Two Players

BUFFALO (AP)—The Buffalo Bills of the National Football League traded three players to the New England Patriots Thursday and received three players in return.

The Bills sent middle linebacker Edgar Chandler, fullback Wayne Patrick and linebacker Jeff Lyman to the Patriots in exchange for middle linebacker Jim Cheyunski, guard Mike Montler and defensive end Halvor Hagen, a club spokesman said.

Chandler was the Bills' regular linebacker for 2 1/2 years before suffering torn ligaments in his left knee during the opening game of the 1972 season. He underwent surgery and missed the rest of the 13 games.

Patrick lost his starting fullback job to Jim Braxton and Lyman was picked up on waivers from the St. Louis Cardinals last fall. Lyman, a rookie, saw action in only one Bills' game.

Sox Lose 5th Straight

BOSTON (AP)—Mickey Stanley socked a three-run homer Thursday as the Detroit Tigers got 16 hits to whip Boston 11-7 and sweep a four-game series with the Red Sox at Fenway Park.

Woody Fryman, 1-6, survived home runs by Dwight Evans and designated hitter Orlando Cepeda to collect the victory with relief help from Tom Timmerman. Cepeda also singled home a run.

Boston, after winning its first four games of the season, has since lost five straight.

Eddie Brinkman got Detroit rolling in the second with a two-run single after Aurelio Rodriguez—who had four hits—singled, Stanley doubled and Ike Brown walked to load the bases.

Stanley's shot over the left field wall came in the third following a walk to Frank Howard and Rodriguez' second single.

Al Kaline singled home Tony Taylor, who singled and stole second in the fourth inning, and Detroit picked up another run in the sixth on Bill Freehan's double and a single by Willie Horton.

Ted Donahue: The Tension Got Him

By MARTY KELLEY

From the Backline—The tension was in the air but you really couldn't feel it. There was action at center court but you really couldn't see it. Customarily they pit the two best tennis players in the corners. And in front of a gallery of near 100 partisans, much more of a battle went on inside than it did on the outside. Defeat for Ted Donahue welcomed no solace.

Ted Donahue just happens to be the number one tennis player for coach Steve Kosakowski. When Teddy plays, he meets the best the opposition can field. Donahue's game consists of a lot of legs, a strong backhand thrust, stronger wrists, and a lot of pride. William Young from MIT, perhaps the finest college tennis player in the East, will attest to that. For under the radiance at the Boyden tennis courts, the Texan met Mr. Donahue, guts and all, and put him away. It was a day Donahue won't forget. And he showed it.

Tennis is a major part of Donahue's life. When he gets across from the net, it's just you and he. His concentration is intense. The game means that much to him. It's part of his culture. Teddy Donahue's been around. After you've gone around a few times in life you tend to stick with something you enjoyed. Teddy found tennis.

He's played in Europe; he's played in stuffy resorts. Donahue may be kidding when he says he used to be married, had a child, is a Navy vet, and is 26 years old. It's just his nature that he's loose as a goose.

Against Young Donahue knew he was to be challenged. But his reputation was Teddy's catalyst. As they squared off the crowd, somewhat informed by a "Sinclair Foster" piece in the Collegian, turned their attention to the corner court for the Young-Donahue matchup. Then the circus began.

It was Young and Donahue and the set trudged on. With each shot the tension increased. So did the frustration. So did Donahue's ire. Unable to break service at 15-30, Young battled back with three gem shots and the set was his. Teddy knew he had his shot at him and lost it. Young had too much talent to be caught now. Donahue knew it and he started to show it.

Instead of trying to beat Young Teddy slowly and with great pain and anguish decided to beat himself.

The game of tennis just by its own one on one design, requires tremendous concestration. You add the precision involved and the respect that you should have for a top flight opponent like Young, and suddenly your mind gets ahead of your body with worry as with Donahue yesterday afternoon. Teddy saw defeat after he couldn't break service and he helped it along in one of rudest displays of sportsmanship this writer has seen.

If I were in Teddy's shoes I might have surveyed the situation before I threw my racket at full speed into the fence after losing a point. Swearing and kicking his water didn't leave a favorable impression of Teddy Donahue to the gallery which had to be turned off by his antics.

But Donahue didn't care for them. He should of. His match was with Young. After the match the MIT senior told me he understood Teddy's repeated swearing and pouting. But did the gallery? There's got to be more to sport than winning.

Netmen Engineer Victory Over MIT; Amherst Today

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

M.I.T. had William Young, the number one tennis player in New England, but had more, much more than did the visiting Engineers. Yesterday's 6-3 victory by the Minutemen pushed their win total to 4, against no losses.

In their first big match of the year, the Minutemen pulled through in strong fashion, and one question remains, can they do the same to Amherst this afternoon?

Today's 3 p.m. meeting on the clay courts of the Lord Jeffs now becomes the most important match of the season. As Coach Kosakewski remarked, "If we can beat Amherst on Friday, we'll have our undefeated season."

The Amherst meeting is a make-up of last Thursday's scheduled match, postponed on account of wind and cold. Probably the best preparation afforded the netmen was the high level of competition they faced against the Engineers from M.I.T.

It's funny what the home court advantage means, even in tennis. Two years back UMass defeated M.I.T. by an identical 6-3 score. Last year, the Engineers took on the then-Redmen on their four indoor courts. The verdict: M.I.T. 6-3. Back again in Amherst, the home team found themselves the victor. Is the home court advantage a mere coincidence?

Unlike basketball, hockey or even football, tennis fans do not yell or cheer while the action is on. Fans cannot really set a tempo or generate enthusiasm, or bubble with excitement. Instead tennis followers sit quietly and clap at appropriate moments. So wherein lies the advantage?

Mostly the edge derives from the variety of surfaces upon which each team plays. Even among hard courts, the difference can be shocking and take quite a bit of getting used to. In addition, tennis is a tremendously psychological game. Knowing that there are supportive onlookers present makes the game of concentration that much easier.

Oh yes, who won those matches yesterday? Well, Robert Schpeiser took a 6-4, 6-2 decision at 2nd singles, while Captain Steve Ferber pulled out at three-setter (2-6, 6-1, 6-3) at third singles. Then Mike Philipp took the two set route to victory at fifth singles while Fred Braley made four wins in singles for UMass by 6-4, 6-0 scores. (Oh yes, Young did win, defeating Ted Donahue in 6-3, 6-2 fashion.) It was 4-2 UMass, entering the doubles, when Braley and Ferber teamed at third doubles for an overwhelming 6-0, 6-1 victory to give the netmen their most important victory to date.

Schpeiser and Philipp, at second doubles added the whipped cream, winning 7-5, 7-5 for the 6th Minuteman point.

Once again, today's the big one. Recall that two years ago Amherst clobbered UMass, on the Amherst clay courts 8-1. Last year, near Boyden, UMass did in Amherst by a 6-3 score. So the home advantage holds five and guess where the netmen are playing today—on the Lord Jeffs clay courts.

UMass has a team with depth. Amherst has a clay court advantage. Call this one even. Call this one big!

Hitters Face UNH In Yan-Con Action

By MIKE BROPHY

Coming off their loss to Springfield College, the UMass baseball team will play an away-and-home series with New Hampshire this weekend. The squad will be looking to regain some of the hitting composure that was lost in the mid-week encounter with Springfield, when the Minutemen could muster but seven hits.

"This could turn out to be a big series for us in that we have to prove to ourselves that we are capable of shaking that loss off and continuing on from here," said Coach Bergquist in an interview last night. "We must count on a stronger performance from everyone out on that ball field, whether in the batters box or at their respective positions."

The loss to Springfield remains a mystery to most who follow the squad and also to those who are involved directly with the squad. Why isn't the pitching, that was so spectacular last year, holding up through this campaign?

Last week and before, the weather could have been used as an excuse, but now that it is warming up, the excuses become thinner. Performance will be the key word in the comeback of the UMass pitching staff. And comeback they must. For although UNH is not noted for its great hitting . . . college ball teams do not get to Omaha without the pitching that UMass has the potential to possess.

Pete Collins, freshman first baseman, has stepped into the starting lineup after a dazzling two-home run performance against Boston University. He is a local product and one may be sure of seeing a lot of him during the next four years at first base for the Minutemen.

Gorillas Meet Wesleyan

By HOWIE BLOOM

With a 4-2 record under their sticks, the UMass lacrosse team will take on the Wesleyan stickers on the upper Boyden field at 2:00, Saturday afternoon. Bring your beach blanket, cause it's gonna be a hot one.

That was meant to be taken more than one way, lacrosse fans. The Wesleyan ruffians have the power and muscle to give the Gorillas fits, bumps and bruises they'll never forget.

Thus far, the Cardinals' record is identical to UMass', 4-2. The visitors' wins have been at the expense of Baltimore, Fairleigh Dickinson, Hobart, and Lehigh, while only Bofstra and Northern Kentucky University have beaten the Wesleyan club.

Goalie is Wesleyan's strenest position, as their netminder has given up an average of only 8.4 goals per game. This record is comparable to that of UMass' own John Ratledge, who has also given up less than ten goals per game.

The Cardinals will certainly be prepared for the Gorillas. Last week's match against Adelphi attracted a great many spectators. One was none other than Tim Daniels, assistant coach of Wesleyan, who was in attendance to scout the Gorillas. Rumors have it that Daniels was very impressed with the home squad.

The lineup for the Gorillas will remain about the way it has been for the past few games. John Ratledge, who has been doing an outstanding job, will be in the nets. On attack will be the high scoring line of Fred Michels, Frank Garahan, and Peter Connolly. The trio is scoring goals at an average of about five per game. The starting midfield will consist of Hirsch Seidman, Dwight Blomquist, and Jackie Moran. People should come to the game just to see if Blomquist intends to make scoring from 50 feet out a habit. Finally, the defensive corps will have big Bill Blaustein, Rich Lally, and John McCarthy.

UMass leads the series against Wesleyan, with 14 wins and three losses. The Gorillas defeated the Cardinals last season, 14-3, coincidentally. May this year's score be 15-3.. just for the sake of coincidences, of course.

Tracksters Take On Dual Foes

By WALT POWERS

When die-hard New England track fans talk about the Quality of New England small-college track, the teams most frequently discussed are Springfield and Central Connecticut. Both teams have good, all-around strength, and both are blessed with a number of brilliant performers.

Tomorrow, at 1 o'clock down at Llewellyn Derby track both these teams will take on the Minutemen, and Coach Ken O'Brien expects it to be the closest tri-meet of the year. After two strong showings in a row, the Minutemen cannot afford to take it easy.

Springfield and Central Connecticut should score heavily in the weight events, but the improvement of Ed McAloney and the presence of Dennis Boisvert will prevent these teams from dominating these events. Overall, UMass appears to have the edge in depth, but the meet will be determined by the battles for first place, and there'll be some great ones. The New England Champion UMass 440 relay team should remain undefeated despite the loss of Dennis Busa's team injury. But Tony Pendleton will need a better than average performance to beat Springfield 's Abe Davis. Davis is the New England indoor champion at the long jump and A New England class triple jumper, and he'll give Bobby Adamson, Tom Gillaris, and Peter Ryan sense of their toughest competition of the season.

In the distance events, Gillis, Thomas, and Co. will be facing [illegible] Springfield's Charles Duggan was New England runnerup in the two mile last year, was new England runnerup in cross-country last fall, and this winter was the New England indoor mile in a time of 4:11.6. Bob Lane of Central Connecticut ran a 9:08 two mile at the New England Indoor Championships, a record.

That's just a sample of the performances levels of these three teams. UMass has to be considered as the favorite in this meet. But they can't look past it. A routine victory would cement their rise to the New England top five.

JACK'S THIS SPRING IS... Tom Gagnon, UMass freshman record holder in the cross-country and the indoor two-mile, charges down the stretch at the 50' relays. He'll be showing for the outdoor record honors against Springfield.

'Crumble The Ivy Crimson'

Harvard Yard, Cambridge, Mass.—She stood rather listless in the rather humid April still. Her open side faced the archaic Field House with three floors of dressing rooms, dilapidated shower rooms, and wall plagues honoring the Track and Field greats from the class of '29 . . . But of her 42,000 empty seats, the mood within was different from that of the October frost . . . No tailgaters, no booze, no Harvard-Dartmouth travesties . . . Just plenty of lacrosse. And with that Ivy backdrop, it meant that much more . . .

Lacrosse at Harvard doesn't quite earn the respect the Johns' carry in other sports. But the rich kids in the upper elitist strata do find the time to tear themselves away from pre-med worries and Radcliffe bitches to practice the Indian game. Believe it or not outside of John Hopkins and Maryland, top two collegiate lacrosse powers, the Cambridge school gets the best frosh talent. But then only a metamorphis known to Harvard and the rest of the Ivies takes place . . . And it's sickening.

Harvard's Harvard and it ain't gonna' change. The mystique that pervades its antiquated tradition makes her one of the proudest academic institutions in the country. In some respects the proud lineage and the die for Harvard logo stands out in her proud athletic heritage. It's true of most of her sports. But lacrosse . . .

Nixon's Watergate Role Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) Republican Sen. Edward Brooke said Sunday it is difficult to understand how persons working with President Nixon would not have told Nixon about the Watergate bugging before it was done.

"It is inconceivable to me that they would not have told the President about this matter," Brooke, from Massachusetts, said in a televised interview on NBC's Meet the Press. "In fact, that they wouldn't have asked for his approval or disapproval."

However, Brooke said later: "I am not trying to make a case for him, but conceivably they could have concealed it from him."

Developments in the case involving a break-in and bugging of Democratic party headquarters at the Watergate office building last June continued with reports of involvement and denials of the reports.

A federal grand jury which has been hearing testimony on the matter for the past month is expected to return additional indictments this week.

A Senate investigation source has said eight new indictments are expected.

In other developments: -Charles W. Colson, former White House counsel, said he has had no knowledge or involvement in any way with the Watergate matter. The Los Angeles Times said in its Sunday editions that Colson reportedly has documentary evidence the administration tried to cover up the Watergate affair and is ready to testify. Colson said the story "is just plain wrong."

-At Key Biscayne, Fla., deputy White House press secretary Gerald L. Warren refused to comment on published reports that the names of presidential aides H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman have come up in the grand jury inquiry.

Abortion Advocate To Speak Here

By MARK VOGLER

Bill Baird, a nationally known advocate for the legalization of abortion and the rights of women, says he expects trouble from "local feminists" and "right to life Catholics" when he visits UMass this week.

There are plans to do a workshop Wednesday afternoon on the establishment of abortion clinics as multi-service community assets, and then a lecture in the evening on "the unfinished battle for abortion".

He was invited to the Southwest Residential College of UMass as a guest of the University's pre-law advising board and the SW assembly.

"I've already received one threat", Baird said Sunday "So I have an idea of what to expect when I come to the University".

While at his abortion clinic, on Long Island, New York Friday, Baird said he received a telephone call from a woman who identified herself as a student from UMass.

"She told me that I better not show up on Wednesday, and that 'we don't want any man to talk on a female issue,'" he said.

"Why, I've got news for her. . . no woman ever got pregnant without a male—except for one unusual case which is still under some doubt."

Baird said that the women's movement has caused him the most frustration in his "ten year battle" to legalize abortion and to secure the rights of women.

He refers to women's liberation as "one of the sickest movements that ever existed."

"They are an example of blatant sexual chauvinism which should be exposed just as the male oppression of women. The frustrating thing is that they sent their women to see me for abortions," Baird said.

"Then they turn around and tell me that I can't speak on a certain topic because I'm a man. They're trying to substitute one brand of discrimination for another, and that's wrong."

Finding fault with the other force he must contend with—the "right to life Catholics"—Baird says it's "hypocritical for the same group to advocate the death penalty while opposing abortion. For this, he cited the case of Governor Mescoux from Connecticut.

He said that of the 20,000 abortions (all successful) his clinic has made since its inception in 1965, 63 per cent were Roman Catholic and 3 were nuns. Baird's clinic is reported to be the only one in the United States which doesn't require parental permission regardless of age.

A film of his abortion will be shown at the workshop Wednesday which Baird said may draw flacks from "the so-called feminists who see this as degrading women".

"I'll challenge any woman to any kind of debate on what I've accomplished in the area of birth control (not because of women's rights, but in spite of it. It's my to female this movement which has [illegible] a cause I've devoted my career [illegible].

While Baird says he is "fight to my death" to support an abortion, he claims he hates someone opposed to their methods of birth control.

"Oppression is wrong. I've never been understanding of any form of oppression. Every individual has a right to be free," he declares.

Women Gymnasts Win Nationals

By JOHN BOCK

Des Moines, Iowa The University of Massachusetts Women's Gymnastics Team compiles 165.70 points, the highest in its history, and captured the coveted team title of the 5th Annual Intercollegiate Association of Women's Athletics (AIAWA) National Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championship. For the Women's team brought the first national championship title to be won in the UMass history.

Seventeen teams competed for the title and UMass came out of the pack to edge Southern Illinois by two tenths, while with Springfield College languished back in fourth place, a point 5.05 points behind the winners.

It was a team effort all the way down the line as the women pulled together on the first event, balance beam, and scored a 33.05, their best in a long time. Janet Fischer pulled out of a cringe and clinched an 8.6 to lead the UMass Amazons through a controlled but cautious and managed a seven high of 32.65 and Sheila Armstrong followed with a [illegible] high of 8.1 to Margie Fischer had some trouble on the floor exercise and pulled down a 7.9.

Floor Exercise is one of UMass' better events, and scored 33.35, but found life a little better. Cindy and Nancy tumbled their highest, defeated their foes and scored a decisive 8.35 score to capture the lead, while Sheila, the only freshman competing for UMass, scored a seven coming the way, scored a [illegible] high of 8.1 while being the lead off tumbler. Ms. Harper followed with a shaky but profitable 8.35.

High score on the vaulting was Jeannine Harper who grabbed a respectable [illegible] and received a 8.05 in return. The UMass team was in the lead now by virtue of the other three performances, [illegible] which, [illegible] with an 8.4, and Sheila finished with an 8.25.

The Student Senate: A Story In Itself

By STEPHEN FINE

The Student Senate is engaged in the chore of budgeting Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) groups with money provided by the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF).

For a layman who has no idea of what an RSO group is, or what SATF is, it might be a good idea to go down to the Student Senate one night soon to find out not only what these terms mean, but also how the Student Senate operates. The Senate meets every Wednesday night in room 163 of the Campus Center.

This year the Senate had allocated approximately $642,000. This money was obtained from the $16.75 tax on 17,000 undergraduates first semester, and 16,000 students second semester, and an $18.25 tax placed on 400 swing shift freshmen.

About 1/13 of this, or $47,000 was spent on administering this money and for the upkeep of the RSO office, located in the first floor of the Campus Center. This office not only administers the money of the Senate, but also serves as a bank for the financial accounts of about 350 RSO groups.

Funds Used For Other Groups

The rest of the money is channeled into funding various groups, such as the Belchertown Volunteers, the Student Homophile League, and the Collegian. The process by which these and about 35 other RSO groups are funded, began last semester when the Senate's Budgets Committee started to consider groups' "rationales," which are the reasons the group thinks it should be funded.

At a Budgets Committee meeting, members ask group representatives questions about the functions in which it serves the campus community, how many members are in the group, and what its goals are. It is interesting to note that the RSO Office has no listing of how many members there are in any RSO-funded group except the Student Senate. According to one reliable source, one group, funded with about $3,000 had to invent ways to spend the money, due to a lack of membership at meetings.

After the rationale for funding is approved by the Budgets Committee, it goes before the Senate for approval. Any group whose rationale has not been approved by the Budgets Committee can still appear on the Senate floor in an effort to gain operating funds.

Once this rationale has been passed, the same process is followed when the group presents a budget to the Committee. This time, however, they must justify all of the expenditures they have assigned to specific categories, such as supplies, transportation and operating cost. The Senate, by a 2/3 vote, can amend any section of a group's budget.

Down On "Junkets"

The number of categories a budget has depends on how big it is. A budget like the Collegian has 35 categories this year (fall 1972-Spring 1973), its biggest being $133,000 for printing costs. Others included $130 for photographic lighting equipment, $3,000 for darkroom renovation, and $1,345 for transportation. In the budgeting process for next year, the Senate has been particularly tough with groups in the transportation category, especially conferences or "junkets," as they are sometimes called.

The most important aspect of these sessions, for that matter any session of the Senate, is the way it spends its time. Throughout the discussion concerning an issue or a senators into doing homework, or just plain boredom.

"Parliamentary procedure freaks out everyone who attends the Senate for the first time," Larry Ladd, president of the Student Government Association has said.

Parliamentary procedure is a tool that is used to govern the meeting of the Senate. With approximately 100 people wanting to speak their minds on a particular issue, some semblance of order must be maintained to prevent everyone from speaking at once. Parliamentary procedure is supposed to insure order is upheld, and chaos doesn't erupt.

Attention Problem

The main problem that has developed from using it however is that it alienates many people. Debates that deal with concrete issues, sometimes end up in debate about parliamentary procedure.

For example, the question of whether a "point of parliamentary procedure" takes precedence over a "point of personal privilege" could be quibbled about, until "Roberts Rules of Order", the parliamentarians bible, is consulted.

The "freak out" process Ladd talks about has obviously taken its toll for the representation of minorities has all but dissipated in the Senate's chambers this semester. Fifteen black senators who had been authorized from New Africa House left because of their inability to cope with Senate procedures.

Such representation, however is not completely gone. Numerous black groups this semester have been approved for funding. So while groups such as these are springing up to increase the services to the students on campus, the group facing the biggest problem of all is the Senate itself.

Discusses Abolishing Itself

An example of the way in which the Senate spends its time wrapped up in parliamentary procedure was a recent debate over whether or not the Senate should exist at all. Senator Peter Lewicke, who proposed the motion, said he was not basically sure there should be a student government, and wanted the Senators to decide if they should exist any more.

Lewicke, attired in a green shirt and standard dungarees at the time, has an aura of being at peace within himself.

He speaks softly, and many senators on the other side of the chambers ask him to speak louder when he talks. He appears to be one of the last remnants of the '60's strike days left in the Senate. Sometimes many meetings go by before he says anything. When he does talk, it is usually about a topic that everyone thinks is so obvious, they keep their mouth shut.

This night, however, Peter has stepped beyond the bounds of reality for senators by proposing the Senate abolish itself. To many, it is very prestigious and complimentary to a part of the Senate.

Noted orators of the body range in class, rank, and experience. The one thing that can be said about all is that each possesses his own style.

Different Styles Dominate

David Booker, a junior and Speaker of the Senate, has a Shakespearean style that makes him sound at times as he addresses the Senate, as if he were reciting Hamlet's famous soliloquy. He is well versed in parliamentary procedure, and knows exactly how to get what he wants when he speaks.

S.G.A. President Larry Ladd envelopes the best qualities of friend, politician, and diplomat. His darkening long blond hair and beard fit his jovial personality. Speaking to him is like stepping into his living room and being given all the comforts a person could want. When he speaks before the Senate, it is usually on something he thinks is of great importance.

Newly-elected Treasurer Paul Hamel is noted for his intense knowledge of the financial accounts of the Senate. Paul's "magic blue book" a computer listing of RSO finances, helps the Senate get by most meetings with all kinds of interesting tidbits on the status of RSO groups. Bespectacled in plain black glasses, with a lean build, Paul holds the key to many groups' futures with his knowledge about Senate finances.

Peter Lewicke has his own style. He just speaks out on issues he sees as being wrong.

The first order of business that comes on his motion to abolish the Senate vote is to consider the legislation now, rather than wait a week for a report from the Governmental Affairs Committee.

Charged To Gov't. Affairs

It is important to remember that this motion has appeared on the Senate agenda as a bill and must have a report on its merits from a Senate committee. Since the Governmental Affairs Committee is responsible for the conduct of all Student Government Association elections and considering questions relating to the philosophy and functions of student government, the committee is vested with his piece of legislation.

Unfortunately, since Lewicke has not been present at the committee's hearing on the bill, the committee has not considered it.

Peter explains to the Senate that he realizes the bill was a bad one, but says he wanted the senators to think about the purpose of the Senate.

David Booker explains the best way to eliminate this bill from the agenda is to have the Senate report out of the "Governmental Affairs Committee of the Whole" with no report.

"Governmental Affairs Committee of the Whole" is a procedure in which the entire Senate temporarily becomes the Governmental Affairs Committee and can act in its capacity with its powers. Reporting out with no report is just a formal way of saying this bill has been considered.

After going though this formality, the Senate finally votes down, in a role call vote, the Lewicke legislation that could have ended it all there for the Student Senate.

This piece of legislation was only one of many considered during the Senate meeting. The time spent on it was about 45 minutes. Many more came after of greater importance, and demanded more time to discuss and to think about, due to the complex nature of issues involved.

Seniors Planning For Own Day

By DON GLICKSTEIN

Phoenix, D.J., and Flesh and Blood are the groups currently being considered to perform at Senior Day, May 26, according to a report heard by the Senior Committee last Thursday.

The Committee also heard reports about commencement speakers and the class gifts.

The Senior Day subcommittee announced that tickets for the traditional beer bash would go on sale around May 1. Tickets for Senior Day cost $1 for seniors and $2 for guests, and include the price of beer and machines, the bands, and a mug, designed by Roger Roche who also designed the University's logo.

In other business, the Senior speaker sub-committee reported that 10 students had applied to be student speakers at Commencement. Of the ten, 2 were women, and one was black. In recent years, the student speakers have been white males. This is the second year speaker positions have been open to anyone interested; previously, the class officers, now abolished, or the Student Senate President represented students during the ceremonies.

The Senior Committee, in a meeting two weeks ago, had voted to inform the Commencement Task Force that a minimum of 3 student speakers would be selected in order to represent the diversity of the class. The Task Force, meeting last Monday, was cool to the idea, preferring one, or at the most, two speakers. A member of the Task Force suggested that taped speeches or interviews could be played during the 15 minute processional into the Stadium.

Members of the Senior Committee suggested Thursday that the ceremony could be cut shorter if the "fake diploman" -- in reality, diploma covers--were distributed at Whitmore during the week preceding Commencement, rather than at the Commencement itself. To console parents, it was suggested that a substitute diploma might be presented to the student. The real diplomas are mailed out to the graduates during the summer.

'Housemouse' Ceasing September Publication

By ED FOGARTY

Commuter Assembly publication said "Housemouse" will not be published after next September said Alex Mackey, Commuter Assembly member in an interview last Friday. He said there is not enough student interest or material to print to continue the publication.

"Housemouse" has been issued monthly since January and contains information on rental and housing problems in the Amherst area.

"We have received very good response from all sources but the students," said Mackey. "We received one letter from Essex County Legal Services of Orange, New Jersey, praising our publication."

The last issue to be issued next September will be entitled "A First Time Renter's Guide." It will contain information for students renting for the first time in the Amherst area.

The April issue of "Housemouse" will be distributed at the Everywoman's Center, the Student Union Lobby, Watroba's Market, Louis Food, Hastings, Angies News, Lizotte's News and Varley's News in Northhampton on April 29. The issue will contain articles on lease breaking, combatting rent hikes, and a "model lease" proposal.

"I'm sorry we have to stop publication next September, but what can we do. There's not enough student help to keep it going," said Mackey.

Greek Week Begins Today

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

April 23rd to April 29th is Greek Week. The whole idea behind the week and the many scheduled activities is to give all Greeks a chance to get to know each other better.

As one of the activities planned for the week is a Marathon Run for the Cancer Fund tomorrow. The marathon will begin at the State House on Tuesday morning with Lieutenant Governor Dwight Iglehing the torch to be carried by the runners. There will be eight sororities and thirteen fraternities from campus participating in the marathon.

Each house is covering about four miles of the ninety mile distance from Boston to Amherst. The marathon will begin at 9:00 a.m. in front of the State House and finish up in front of Haigus Mall around 8:00 p.m. with Chancellor Bromery taking the torch from the last runners. A car parade will accompany the last runners into campus.

Along with the runners there will be a bus full of people which will be stopping along the way from Boston Amherst to collect for the Cancer Fund.

Debi Jose, Chairwoman of the Service Committee of Greek Council and the person in charge of the marathon explained that besides the bus, money will be raised by Sponsors who are pledging so much money for each mile ran in the marathon. Most of the sponsors are businesses from Amherst.

There will also be collecting on campus in four places for the Cancer Fund by the Greeks on Tuesday, also.

"Last year we raised $600 on our Marathon day and there is every indication we will raise more than that this year," said Debi Jose.

CEQ Hosting ECO Fair

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (the student ecology group) will host an Environment Fair from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. today in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. The fair will have tables by area conservation groups, University organizations and departments concerned with environmental quality. Handouts on recycling conservation issues, and environmental courses will be available.

There will be a diverse selection of environmental films being shown continuously from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. They will include the FLOODING RIVER, TRAGEDY OF THE COMMONS, WASTED WOODS, POPULATION ECOLOGY, GARBAGE, GRAND CANYON, UNBANKING.

Everyone is invited to drop in for the films and displays.

Correction

In Friday's story about the proposed abolition of the Student Senate, Tom Merrigan was identified as the chairperson of the SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) committee, and Barney Schneider was identified as a member of the committee.

According to the two, their action in presenting the proposal was taken as students, and not as members of the SWAP committee.

Rally Today

There will be an important meeting today at 7 p.m. for all those who signed at Wednesday's rally to work on the Committee to Support Wounded Rose. Also anyone else interested in helping in fund raising and other support activities is urged to come. Room to be announced, please check IV schedule.

UMass Formally Objects To Faculty Union Ties

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass administration has raised a formal objection to an attempt by a coalition of unions to represent the 1,400 faculty on that campus.

And Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery announced Friday that he has appointed Tim Bernstein, a professor of industrial relations at UMass, as his special assistant for professional labor relations.

At a meeting before the state Bureau of Personnel and Standards last week in Boston the UMass administration objected to the collective bargaining efforts because it claimed not to know what organization is trying to represent faculty.

The question is a legal one, which union organizers think is an effort by administrators to stall a union election, since unofficially it is well-known who is pushing collective bargaining on campus.

Presently a coalition of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), an affiliate of the Massachusetts Teachers' Assoc. (MTA); and the UMass chapter of the American Assoc. of University Professors (AAUP) want to hold an election to determine a bargaining agent.

But the University contends that the faculty has not shown they want to be represented by such a coalition, because they have never signed statements—union cards—to that effect.

According to Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, "the merged organization was not the group which appeared on the original cards."

About two months ago the MSP group obtained the signatures of 30% of the UMass faculty in favor of unionization, but this was before the MSP became allied with the AAUP Amherst chapter.

Cadwell Ray, co-campaign coordinator for the local MSP—AAUP coalition, and an economics professor at the university, says the name issue is a legal technicality because a poll of faculty conducted early last week by a Springfield marketing firm showed exactly half the faculty respondents in favor of unionization.

The poll was criticized after its completion by Gluckstern as possibly illegal. Last Wednesday he said such a survey was "not quite the same as running a political poll" and might have violated labor laws.

Gluckstern noted the present controversy over the poll and the name of the union seeking bargaining power "hints at" a polarization of faculty and administration which "makes me a little apprehensive."

The dispute must now be submitted to the state Labor Relations Commission for legal and binding arbitration. Once it is settled by the labor board the university is next expected to contest the inclusion of academic department heads in a bargaining unit, as proposed by the MSP—AAUP coalition.

Chancellor Bromery has implied that he wants department heads outside a bargaining unit because he considers them administrators.

As the union proposal moves into a more delicate stage both administrators and MSP—AAUP officers are forced to speak in guarded, legal terms in order to avoid violating labor laws.

As an example, after last week's Boston meeting, both administration and labor released formal written statements detailing their position.

Ray, speaking for the union coalition, said:

"We are convinced that the university pursued this tactic to prevent the faculty from having a free and democratic choice . . ."

The university statement said:

"Our sole purpose in questioning the name that will appear on the ballot was to insure that there will be a free, fair and untainted election in which the faculty can decide for itself whether or not to have collective bargaining."

Student Dies At Sugarloaf

By MDC STAFF

Mark L. Conway, 20, of Belmont, a junior at UMass was killed Saturday when he fell 250 feet from Mt. Sugarloaf Reservation in South Deerfield.

Conway was hiking with three other students when he fell from a narrow ledge down the almost sheer face of the southeastern point of the mountain. It was only 15 yards away from the point where a female College student, Karol B. Hammond, became the first person to die on the mountain when she fell in October, 1965.

Dr. Louis Roth of Conway, the medical examiner, ruled the death, caused by multiple injuries, a fractured skull, broken legs and a crushed chest, was accidental.

Daniel Moith of Southwick, also a UMass student attempted to aid Conway by mouth-to-mouth resuscitation until help arrived. Police were summoned when a neighbor at the foot of the mountain heard shouting from the hikers.

The South Deerfield Fire Department emergency vehicle was sent to the scene and crew members, still applying resuscitation, brought the youth down the mountain and out of the woods. However, Dr. Boeh pronounced Conway dead at the scene.

Conway had hiked up the mountain and was seated near the edge of a sheer drop-off with a fellow UMass student, Mark Adamchek of Indian Orchard, when, according to Deerfield police, Conway apparently lost his footing or balance, "and just slipped away" about 1:30 p.m.

Investigating Patrolman Arthur Skinner said Adamchek had fainted away momentarily. He heard a sliding sound and by the time he turned back Conway was gone and only screams could be heard, Skinner said.

Other UMass students were also on the top of the scenic tourist spot overlooking the Connecticut River Valley. State police aiding in the investigation said one saw exactly how it happened, but it was speculated that Conway had too, starting as he tried to move or shift position.

Police said Conway and Adamchek were "outside the safety fence" that borders the area on the edge of the single lane roadway to the mountaintop. The roadway is still closed and chained, but hikers have been climbing to the top via a trail for more than a month now.

Tuition Hike Opposed

BOSTON (AP)—Dr. Robert C. Wood, president of the University of Massachusetts, said Sunday he is opposed to attempts to raise tuition rates and have students bear more of the costs of education.

"Raising tuitions at the present time would be a serious mistake, and the relief to the taxpayers would be very small," Wood said on radio station WEEI's Bay State Forum program.

Nixon's Role Questioned

—Former Atty. General John Mitchell issued a statement Saturday saying reports to the press about grand jury testimony were not factual and that the leaks should be investigated.

"The press reports being leaked out of the grand jury Watergate investigation stating that John Mitchell was the instigator of support for the defendants and counsel fees paid to their lawyers is absolutely contrary to the facts that have been testified to the grand jury," Mitchell said. He appeared before the grand jury Friday.

Brooke was asked if he agrees with those who insist that the President can't escape major responsibility for the Watergate affair without an explanation at least of why he didn't know what was going on.

"Of course, I am one of those that agrees to that," Brooke replied.

Meanwhile, The San Jose, Calif., Mercury reported Sunday in a dispatch from its Washington bureau that Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst may resign after the Watergate investigations are complete. He has already withdrawn from the case.

A source who identified himself as a friend of presidential counsel John Dean said Dean might now help Nixon "clear the White House of those that have besmirched the office of the presidency." Dean reportedly has been named by a former White House aide as among those present when plans were made for the Watergate bugging.

Gas Geysers May Pollute Lake Mich.

WILLIAMSBURG, Mich. (AP) - State officials are voicing concern that a series of gas eruptions around this Michigan community will reach nearby Grand Traverse Bay on Lake Michigan and cause extensive damage to underwater life.

The gas geysers have been plaguing the area since Wednesday. All 85 families living in and around Williamsburg have been evacuated and are staying with relatives, Sheriff deputies said Sunday.

"The geysers seem to be leapfrogging," said Sidney Dyer, geologist with the Michigan Department of Natural Resources. "The gas seems to be following the bottoms of the creeks that flow from here to the bay."

Evidence that the geysers were nearing the bay was strengthened Saturday night with discovery of a new large crater on a farm only two miles from the bay. The new geyser, about four feet wide and seven or eight feet deep, is a mile closer to the bay than any others discovered.

Dyer said the slope of the underlying rock in the area indicates the escaping gas should head for the bay. But he added that if it shifted south, the populated areas around Traverse City would lie in its path.

Dyer said the gas, part of a several billion cubic feet pocket some 6,200 feet underground, is being pressured into extremely pourous limesione, which results in the surface eruptions. State officials believe the pressure is being exerted by an Amoco Production Co. well being drilled some four miles south of Williamsburg, in the northwest portion of the state. The Amoco well is about 6,000 feet deep.

Amoco denies that its well is responsible for the eruptions, but company officials are taking steps to be certain they won't be blamed for any further problems.

State officials reported that Amoco is bringing in drilling equipment in an effort to bleed off some of the pressure and lessen the chance of an explosion.

Dems May Get Control Of Senate

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The possible retirement of up to five Republican senators will reduce the already slim chance of the GOP to win control of the Senate in the 1974 elections.

The five are among 15 GOP senators whose terms expire in 1974. None of the 19 Democratic senators whose terms expire has indicated a likelihood of retirement.

Democrats, nearing the end of two decades of congressional control, currently have a 57-43 edge. Though more Democratic-held seats are going to be contested in 1974, GOP strategists at this stage would be satisfied with holding their own.

Hanging over the 1974 situation is the Watergate case and the fear that, as one Republican put it, "it's not going to be a good year for Republicans."

In all five states where Republican senator remain silent on re-election bids, Ohio, Oklahoma, Utah, Vermont and Kentucky, GOP officials fear retirements could lead to Democratic capture of the seats.

In Ohio, Sen. William Saxbe, nearing the end of his first term, says he has made up his mind but won't make an announcement until next February. At least one fellow Republican advises privately that the word is that Saxbe, frustrated by the difficulty in getting things done on the Senate, will retire.

In Oklahoma, Sen. Henry Bellmon, like Saxbe a first-termer, is expected to decide this month whether to run again or retire to his farm.

The Republicans say they have no major candidate of stature to run against the Democratic possibilities, Gov. David Hall or former Rep. Ed Edmondson.

In Utah, Bennett, 74, is widely expected to retire. He won't discuss with reporters whether he will seek a fifth term.

Jean Westwood, former Democratic national chairman, has indicated interest in running in Utah.

Former Utah Republican State Chairman Kent Shearer suggested GOP prospects "fashion contingency plans" for Bennett's likely retirement. Possible candidates include Salt Lake City Mayor Jake Garn, former state chairman Richard Richards and Atty Gen. Vernon Romney.

In Vermont, 80-year-old Sen. George Aiken is a shoo-in if he runs. He declines to discuss the matter, as usual.

If he doesn't run, Republican factionalism could be a problem in a state that has never elected a Democratic senator but has its second Democratic governor of the past decade.

In Kentucky, Republicans imply that Sen. Marlow Cook's silence on a second term bid is merely an effort to create some mystery and keep the matter submerged until after state and local elections this year.

Democratic Gov. Wendell Ford may challenge Cook, and there are a variety of other Democratic possibilities.

Most of the 19 Democrats are considered fairly well entrenched. Republicans plan major efforts against Connecticut's Abraham A. Ribicoff, Alaska's Mike Gravel, and South Dakota's George McGovern.

ARVN Fight For Phnom Penh Supplies

By RICHARD BLYSTONE
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese infantry and armor fought off attacks near staging points for vital Mekong River convoys to the Cambodian captial of Phnom Penh, killing 35 Communist soldiers, the Saigon command reported Sunday.

Government losses during the fighting Saturday 10 miles northwest of Hong Ngu were put at two killed and 14 wounded.

The town and four nearby infantry positions were shelled Saturday and early Sunday, with three soldiers killed, the command said. In adjacent Chau Doc Province, Communist gunners shelled three hamlets and four government positions, killing two civilians.

The Saigon government said the besieged ranger camp at Tong Le Chan on the Cambodian border 50 miles north of Saigon received 188 rounds of mortar fire between dawn Saturday and noon Sunday, but no South Vietnamese casualties were reported.

In the northern sector, 725 rounds of shellfire hit around the defense permiter in mountains to the west of Hue, reportedly wounding 10 South Vietnamese soldiers.

The command said saboteurs mined a train south of Tuy Hoa, near the coast 235 miles northeast of Saigon, wounding one crewman. A road nine killed one civilian and wounded another, seven miles west of Cu Chi near the Cambodian border northwest of Saigon.

Terrorists threw a grenade into a home at Giong Trom in Kien Hoa Province 45 miles south of the capital, killing one civilian and wounding one, the command reported.

Radio Hanoi claimed that Cambodian insurgents wiped out an entire Cambodian government battalion and captured 100 weapons during their successful assault last week on the saltwater fishing port of Kep.

Another Hanoi broadcast said that district and village elections were held Sunday throughout North Vietnam. The balloting was for posts on administrative bodies and people's councils, it said.

A third broadcast contended that more than 10,000 U.S. military men remain in South Vietnam despite the American pullout required by the Paris peace agreement. The U. S. Embassy, while maintaining its policy of refusing direct comment on Hanoi broadcasts, insisted that only about 300 American military personnel remain.

QUESTION TIME—Tied to a tree, a captured Viet Cong soldier flinches as a Cambodian soldier grabs him during an interrogation. The prisoner was captured recently during a skirmish along Route 30, about 12 miles south of the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh. (AP)

WMPIRG's Role Discussed Tonight

University undergraduates sitting on the Board of Directors of the Western Mass. Public Interest Reseach Group (WMPIRG) have scheduled an open meeting for tonight at 7 p.m. in Rm. 908 of the Campus Center. The purpose of the meeting, will be to further discuss the role UMass students will play in WMPIRG this fall. Also, due to a vacancy in the UMass delegation to the WMPIRG Board of Directors (UMass students are entitled to four of eight seats) an election will be held to fill that position.

Noting that during its first eight months of operation WMPIRG has initiated several projects including: a suit against the Western Mass. Electric Co. and the Mass. Department of Public Utilities, intervention in the relicensing proceedings of power-producing dams found to be environmentally harmful to the Connecticut River, prescription drug and dangerous toy studies, and most recently, a probe into the planned but possibly unneeded super-highway to be routed through the Berkshires.

A step in the direction of public interest research is the Small Claims Court Project which has trained several UMass students to aid victims of unfair business practices in seeking redress through the Small Claims Court. More information concerning this oroject will be forthcoming in a few days.

Any member of the University community who is interested in these or any other aspect of WMPIRG is urged to attend this evening's meeting.

Collins, a member of the House Education Committee, talked about problems which University employees and students may encounter if the legislature approves Governor Sargent's proposals for reorganization of public education in the Commonwealth.

Collins also talked about the ever-increasing parking difficulties confronting University employees and students.

Persons wanting further information after hearing tonight's program can reach Rep. Collins at Room 38 in the State House in Boston, telephone 1-617-727-8946.

Chinese Tourer At Amherst

Dr. W. Montague Cobb, editor of the "Journal" of the National Medical Association, will relate his "Impressions of the People's Republic of China" tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Lecture Room Three of the Merrill Center, Amherst College. Films will accompany the presentation. The event is open to the public without charge.

The former president of the National Medical Association, Cobb led a delegation of doctors on a 15-day tour of China in October of 1972. The delegation covered more than 3,000 miles and focused on the major population centers of Kwagchow, Shanghai, Peking, and Changsha. The group observed health care delivery systems, clinics of various types, and rural and urban communes.

Cobb received his bachelor's degree from Amherst College in 1925. In 1955 Amherst awarded him with an honorary Doctorate of Science degree. His medical studies were pursued at Howard University where he received his M.D. in 1929.

A member of the Howard University faculty since 1929, Cobb currently holds the rank of Distinguished Professor of Anatomy. He has been chairman of the National Medical Committee of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) since 1944. The Executive Committee of the White House Conference on Health in 1965 included him as a member. He received the Distinguished Service Medal from the National Medical Association in 1955.

Both planned senior class gifts are legal, according to another report given by the Class Gift sub-committee after consultation with the University Corporation Counsel. The gifts are contributions to the Handicapped Persons' Cart Program and to the Street Academy System of Springfield, Inc.

The wording that will describe the class gifts on the Commencement program was also approved.

Student Task Force member Denise Magnell reported that there will probably be a profit of $4,000 left over from the Commencement Task Fund. This Fund is raised from the $10 Commencement Fee that every senior pays. She noted that a budget had not been submitted for next year's senior class in the Student Senate, and that she would look into whether the $4000 could be used for the Class of '74.

It was learned from informed sources not on the Task Force that the featured commencement speaker will be Mrs. Shirley Dubois, wife of the late W.E.B. Dubois, founder of the N.A.A.C.P. and a leading black educator, writer, and leader. It was also learned that ex-Celtic basketball coach Bill Russell may be given an honorary degree.

The next Senior Committee meeting will be Wednesday, April 25 at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, room to be announced later.

Science Grant Announced

U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke today announced that UMass has been awarded two grants totalling $97,900 from the National Science Foundation.

One grant, in the amount of $59,800, will allow the University to undertake a two-year study into the development of a Master of Science Degree Program. Dr. Geoffrey Boothroyd of the Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering will be the principal investigator.

A $38,100 grant will support a two-year research study into general communications networks. Jack K. Wolf of the Electrical and Computer Engineering Department will serve as principal investigator.

Hispanic Course Offered

In the fall of 1973, the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures will offer one section of Spanish 126 as supervised self-instruction. Such a method of language learning will be most helpful to highly-motivated students who, for different reasons, cannot attend the regularly scheduled meetings of the traditional courses.

Anybody interested in registering for this course (Spanish 126-S1) must be interviewed by one of the following:

1) Professor Juan Zamora, 407 Herter Hall

2) Mrs. Fresia Bradford, 422 Herter Hall

3) Mrs. Nina Galvin, 403 Herter Hall

Covering Up

"I can say categorically that . . . investigation indicates that no one in the White House staff, no one in this Administration, presently employed, was involved in this very bizarre incident." Those were the words of President Nixon on April 29, 1972. The "very bizarre incident" he was referring to was the now notorious Watergate scandal.

Last week, President Nixon seemed to indicate he had second thoughts on the matter: ". . . as a result of serious charges which came to my attention . . . I began intensive new inquiries into this whole matter. There have been major developments . . . If any person in the executive branch or in the Government is indicted by the grand jury, my policy will be to immediately suspend him."

It is almost certain that Nixon could not have known about the bugging strategy in advance. However, it has become increasingly obvious that the men closest to him knew full well what was going on, and for some strange reason kept the information from the President. This can only mean that Nixon is not only deficient in his judgement of men, but that he also has inadequate lines of communication for keeping himself informed about the work of his subordinates.

The current Watergate scandal is only one incident in a long line of scandals in the Nixon administration. As in the past, the President has chosen to attempt to cover up the misdeeds of his staff, when instead he should be more willing to bring them out in the open, for his own sake and for the sake of the American public.

MDC News Coverage

The most important thing discussed at last Wednesday night's Collegian staff meeting was the nature and quality of news printed in the daily paper. Collegian News Editor Bill Ballou said, "The Collegian doesn't do the job as well as it could." Bill Ballou is right, the Collegian isn't doing the job it could.

Many things happen around UMass that are of primary concern to students, which they never become aware of. Part of the blame must be attributed to the Collegian for one of its major constitutional purposes is to provide "A truthful, comprehensive and intelligent account of events in a context which give them meaning to the University community." To date, the paper's superficial coverage of the news only touches the tip of the iceberg when the reader needs to know more of what's underwater.

For example take the issue of unionization of the faculty at the UMass campus. Faculty unionization has far-reaching ramifications for UMass-Amherst, yet minimal Collegian coverage has not provided the reader with the insight to know what consequences may result far the UMass community and students in particular.

Many students have heard of the Student Government Association and the Student Senate, but what do they know of their functions and capacities. What kind of power does the Student Senate have and how does its decisions, if at all, effect students? Can and does the SGA President act in the students' interest? What kind of power does the SGA President have to voice and actualize student concerns? The Collegian doesn't provide the type of coverage necessary to come close to giving informed answers to these questions.

If however you are satisfied to know what went on at Monday night's Selectmen's meeting or Wednesday night's Student Senate meeting, you will find an account in the next day's paper. If you want to know more, such as the consequences or the reasons for actions taken at those meetings, forget it. The Collegian does not provide that type of in-depth coverage.

The Collegian could improve its coverage through a reorganization of the News Department. Since it handles the major gatherings and reporting functions of the paper, it's a good place to start. This in fact was suggested by Bill Ballou at the staff meeting. Currently none of the reporters on the staff are paid. A reporters work is strictly on a voluntary basis, with coverage largely at his or her discretion. The News Editor can refuse to print a story turned in, but cannot order a reporter to a beat or an assignment. The News Editor has no power of the purse, leaving coverage by the Collegian largely to the whim of the reporter.

Even though some reporters have chosen to cover a few beats their coverage suffers also. Ed Fogarty, the only reporter on the town beat, sacrifices a lot of good leads and in-depth coreage, because he just doesn't have the time or energy to devote to investigation. All he can really consistently cover is the Selectmen's meeting. Steve Fine, the Student Senate reporter has the same problems. It would be nice if the News Editor could put more reporters on these beats, or if Ed Fogarty, for instance, could head a subdivision of town reporters to investigate those leads he doesn't have time for himself. However the News Editor has no authority to do either, and there are not many volunteers.

All this is only part of the reason why much information doesn't reach the reader. Students get so little information on incoherent random events, that it is hardly worth getting that information at all. It would be more beneficial to receive more information on a few important events, than a little information on many events.

Sentiments, in many ways, similar to the ones above moved the Collegian staff to organize a committee to explore ways to gather and report better quality news. The committee has an excellent opportunity to improve things for the Collegian. In order to best do this it may be wise to consider the best way to conduct the committee's operations. Input from outside the Collegian bureaucracy may allow the members of the committee to more clearly define the weaknesses of Collegian coverage, as well as point out more specifically what goals to work towards and the best way to achieve them. Although time factors may inhibit such input, a rigorous committee investigation, characterized by hearing the opinions of the readers, consultation from those qualified, and even outside participation could exploit an opportunity to its fullest and hopefully lead to a better newspaper.

Superbuildings

The semester has just about had it, but before everyone skates through their finals and heads home, I urge a long hard look at some of the edifices we've been staggering in and out of lately. There are really some architectural gems on this campus, seemingly built with everything in mind except people. I won't go into the dirt and mud and all that stuff, for that is another story.

The best place to start, I suppose, is at the proverbial top, (i.e. Whitmore). Whoever designed it ought to be made to walk in and out of the building one hundred times a day for the next seventy years, if it lasts that long. Having to fight a wind from inside a building is just too much. It sounds and feels like a hurricane when the door opens, in preparation for, I suppose, the chilly reception awaiging you inside. It's a fortress of cement protecting the almighty computer from outside harm, with little humans running around satisfying its every whim. It's such a temptation to drive on up that stupid ramp and park the car in the lobby. One thing in its favor, though, the coffee's cheaper in the snack bar, and so are the hamburgers, french fries, sandwiches, etc.

From there it's but a few happy steps to that hallowed institution of languages. Herter Hall. Try and find a men's room some day without going crazy. Take a wrong turn on your way to class and voila, you're outside again. And if there's nothing on your schedule for a couple of hours, then wait for the elevator. And there's a wind tunnel here, too, to start off your day just right. Herter's a real trip.

And now across the "yard" and into the sauna bath, Bartlett Hall. The heat is on all year around here, and there's more floors in one part of the building than the other. Good things about this place are: some of the best profs on campus, the best murals, and a nice view from the rear.

Crawl down the grass a ways and there she blows, the tallest sinking whatever this side of the Mississippi, and the pride and joy of the campus, may heaven help us all. This big, ugly monstrosity has about as much class as the Campus Center, of which I will speak in a moment. Let's face it, it didn't take much imagination to come up with a design like this. I guess you could call it "early brick tower" or something. And I just can't wait for it to open, to chase a book from the fifth floor up to the seventh, back down to the third, up again to the eighth, a stop at the top to take in the view, back down to the sixth, and then the hell with it! Ever wonder why tall libraries are scarce? Think about it. This one's a real winner.

And now we shuffle on down to the "waffle", the Campus Center Ltd. This one looks like they started with a concrete pyramid, and gave up. The only thing resembling it anywhere is a subway kiosk in Boston. All we need is a fallout shelter sign out in front. It has some redeeming values inside, however, the least of which is the giant ripoff known as the Doffee Shop. Cement everywhere, and the highest prices in town! Wonderful.

I suppose you're wondering who appointed me architectural connoisseur? I just thought it'd be fun to write down some of the remarks heard on campus concerning out lovely edifices. And besides, its getting so that to express political opinions on this page is hazardous duty, not that it makes a difference with me, as there is always next week. And as someone so graciously put it the other day, "There's something about this place that makes you want to leave." And sometimes I guess it seems that way. But as long as the weather stays good, and the new library stays closed, I guess we can all live with it.

Renovations And Equalized Rents

To The Editor:

In reference to a letter in the Collegian of April 11, 1973 entitled "Financial Equality" we would like to clarify our position on the matter.

The Rents and Fees Committee has discussed the possibility of equalized rent for this campus. Out of our discussions and subsequent inquiries we have strongly felt that equalized rent would be a reasonable idea at some future time. For the present however, we feel that the dormitories of this campus are far from equal in terms of physical/structural attributes.

We intend to re-examine the possibility of equalizing rents if it appears there has been an equalization of the physical characteristics of the dormitories. At this point it's important to look at some facts about major renvation.

1.) The cost to renovate Greenough, Chadbourne and Hamlin each was approximately $300,000.00;

2.) Spreading this cost over 325 students works out to $923.00 per student approximately;

3.) Allowing payment of this cost over a 15 year period which is the estimated amount of time to pass before renovations are again necessary, the cost per student is $61.53 per year per student;

4.) At the above rate an increase from $615.00 per year for rent to $675.00 per year seems entirely justifiable.

One may ask why students have to pay back for the renovation costs? Quite simply, the $300,000.00 that was expended needs replacement before further renovations can take place. This process is very much like saving a little each year in recognition of future costs. As we said, in 15 years it will probably be necessary to renovate those dorms again, we are merely being foresighted now instead of hindsighted as some were in the past.

We hope this clarify's our position and we appreciate the interest the Central Area Environmental Standards Committee has taken in this problem.

Water Wisdom

To The Editor:

Amherst has a very bad sewage problem. Each weekday of the school year, between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m., essentially untreated sewage overflows from the treatment plant near the Men's Athletic Fields into the Mill River, which carries it to the Connecticut River. Because of the threat to public health, the state has banned any additional sewer connection that could add to the volume of sewage until the situation is remedied.

The University, and commuters to the University who live in apartments in Amherst, are the source of much of this sewage. We have a responsibility to help. As individuals, we can avoid wasting water. Turn off all faucets not being used. Fix or report leaking faucets. When warming water for a shower, etc., turn on only the hot tap. If the toilet has aa tank above it, a brick or quart bottle (filled with water to weight it down), can be carefully placed in the tank to reduce the amount of water the toilet uses with each flush. Find out whether you use more water to take a shower or a bath, then contemplate the possibility of not running the water in a shower while you soap, etc. And, to even out the flow of sewage to the treatment plant, try to take showers, wash clothes, etc., in the late afternoons or evenings, or on weekends, when the flow is less.

As students, we can pressure the University to be more responsible in its use of water. Air conditioning systems for the Graduate Research Center and the library, for example, should have been designed to reuse the same water, rather than absorb large quantities of town water of drinking quality.

We all need to realize that clean water is neither free nor abundant any more. People in the Boston area are drinking water taken from the Connecticut River into Quabbin. Diversion of water from a river system interferes with the natural functioning of that system. Inadequantely treated sewage released into rivers does not conveniently disappear; communities further down stream and life in and along the river need clean water as much as we do. It is long past time for us to accept our responsibility for using water wisely and cleaning up after ourselves.

In Poor Taste

To The Editor:

I have never read anything as disgusting as that abortion that appeared in Friday's Collegian on the Letters to the Editors page written by the Barredo Brothers. Someone ought to pretend that those two were just born to a Jewish famigy and circumcize them both from the neck down. What prickery!

I will never read the Letters to the Editor page again, and if I was subscribing to the Collegian, I would cancel my subscription immediately. That was in extremely poor taste. Fuck the Barredo Brothers!

Against Grass

To The Editor:

The time has come for someone to speak out against those evils that infiltrate and subtly take over our lives. I was extremely distraught recently to find that a group called N.O.R.M.L. had set itself up in the Campus Center Concourse advocating the legitimation of marihuana.

What has our society come to? We are already rapidly sinking into a state of increasing permissiveness and decadent moral consciousness. Why must we include yet another vice to make us stray away from virtue and uprightness?

Then there is still the question of the link between marihuana smoking and the grave endangerment to public health. Recent studies have sought to find the answer as to whether or not chromosomal damage, brain deterioration, mammary gland development in males, birth defects, and proven linkage to heroin addiction have transpired because of the use of grass. Since no definite answers can be made proving that there is no danger, we must think of the welfare and safety of ourselves and our children. We must not allow ourselves to be manipulated by any pressure group.

We must now act in a manner befitting of true Americans. We are not a nation of apathetic, psychotic, inefficient drug abusers. We are much more than that. In the words of our great President, all of us as Americans should be able to take a look at ourselves and our homeland and say, "God Bless America". We must stand true to our ideals and not allow any more depravity and sin to transpire within this great nation of ours.

The legalization of marihuana will prove to be a mortal blow to the already decaying moral fiber which has made America what it is today.

Satirizing Saviorism

To The Editor:

In retort to L. Cohen's reply to my satire, I can only admit the obvious. My article titled "I Thought About Hitler" turned out to be more offensive than effective. Such are the prices to pay for being Human.

Mr. Cohen refers to me as a bigot. What can I say? As far as I'm concerned, anyone who is offended by ethnic humor is emotionally immature and incapable of understanding why such ethnic impurities exist in our society. My article was in no way satirizing Jewish People. I'll tell you what I was doing.

1.) I was satirically attacking the predominant trend these days toward Saviorism. Saviorism to me is when large groups of people, blinded by commercialism, devote themselves to a specified form of spiritual dogma, without for a minute even considering or recognizing any other form of spiritual enlightenment. Almost everyone's a Guru these days, to the point where the entire issue becomes ridiculous . . . so in an attempt to ridicule this phenomenon, why not make Hitler a savior?

2.) In an extremely subtle manner, I attempted to viciously satirize the stupidity and absurdity of vengeance. What's been done is gone and over with, no matter how "bad" or "inhuman" it was. To me, it is an utter waste of energy to incorporate within your life-style an emotion of revenge towards something or someone which never truly destroyed you. Something which has actually been socially conditioned into your consciousness out of an obvious desire for some kind of superficial recognizance.

How many of you know of the actual long and involved personal and political reasons for Hitler's treatment against the Jews? Or the Czechs? How about White Man's treatment of Black Man, the American Indian, and Women? I could just as easily have chosen one of them to base my article, but I chose something which we all know least about, that way, more people would be "offended" and hopefully thereby awakened.

True, what Hitler did was one of the most perverse endeavors of Human activity, and whether we can judge what is perverse or not, I feel a need to call it so. But it's over. Without even trying, such a catastrophe could never happen again. It seems such an idiotic waste of energy and resourcefulness to withhold the element of revenge in one's psyche. You can only agree that it constitutes nothing constructive whatsoever, in its essence.

People who accept things solely on face value without even attempting to understand why it exists disgust me. In this respect, I am prejudiced. People who waste their time and energy getting offended by etnnic controversies are absurd to me, and I have no respect for these king of people. I have very little if any respect for Mr. Cohen's incredibly superficial interpretation of my article. Despite that, I nevertheless admit my error in not getting across to the general audience the exact point of my satire. As I said, I am only a Human. Sometimes I really get hung-up about not being as superior as everyone else.

Misinterpreted

To The Editor:

In reply to R. Frazier and B. Barufaldi:

Well, the liberals are at it again. Frazier is ready to censor me from ever writing again and Barufaldi is going to great ends to try and discredit me.

You see, general public, what is going on is that instead of attacking the various groups that are openly Communist, I am trying to inform you as to who supports and bankrolls these groups. You see, the liberals don't want you to know that Communism is PART of the establishment and not against it. Thus, they must discredit me (or try to) or even try to smear me.

Now to clear up a few points:

I am not pro-Nazi. What Nazi stands for is NATIONAL SOCIALIST PARTY. I am against any form of total government. It is not and cannot be a government that is of, by and for the people. Any form of total government, whether it is Communism, Socialism, Naziism or Fascism, is Totalitarian government and this is what I am against.

Barufaldi, you misinterpret the bit on Keynes. First, his economic principles are against free enterprise system. They are meant to destroy it by devicit spending by government. As for the "liberal fag" bit, there is only one kind of word to fit homosexuals of all kinds: QUEER! As for the rest of Barufaldi's letter, let it be known that this stuff he is saying is pure crap. Barufaldi has no real premise for saying this. I believe that he is just trying to discredit me. A warning: don't try it again or else you may wind up on the wrong end of a lawsuit.

P-10 Admissions Open

Undergraduates who are interested in finding a dormitory for next year which emphasizes "educational contexts for personal goals" should investigate living in Project 10, according to Charles Adams, English department professor and director of the Project.

According to Adams, the Project has become the University's "experimental college." It is based in the coed lowrise Pierpont, on the far corner of Southwest.

"The Project functions in some ways like an academic department, with its own faculty and curriculum, but it is much more than that," Adams remarked.

"From the very beginning of the Project in 1968 it has been the dream of the students in the Project to create a real community out of a dormitory, to make the place less impersonal."

More than forty 3-credit seminars and workshops were offered by Project faculty this year, and 60 students are enrolled in an experimental program which includes the waiver of core requirements, and the chance to plan their education on a one-to-one basis with an academic advisor, called a tutor. Evaluation need not be by grade or credit, and much study can take place off campus as well as in structured academic programs like pre-med, Adams said.

Living options in Project 10 range from a quiet "academic corridor" to communal-living "suites." Dorm activities include an occasional radio station (WTHC), a weekly nespaper called Genesis, a literary magazine, a speakers series and such weekend festivals as last fall's Zen Circus, as well as the now-famous massage parlor.

Applications for Project 10 living are available this week in the Project office, open every afternoon, or phone 5-0871.

Minority Grant Needs Applicants

The Graduate School has just received an announcement from the United Nations Association of U.S.A. of Ralph Bunch Fellowships of $5,000 each for an academic year beginning in September, 1973. Applications must be Black Americans under 30 years of age, undergraduate or graduate, who have demonstrated a sincere interest in achievement in fields related to poverty, quality of life, and minority involvement in U.S. foreign policy or international affairs. Applications are available at the Graduate School, Room A237. The deadline is May 15.

Chemical Engineering Offering Med. Program

There is a new chemical engineering curriculum option that can provide an alternate route to medical school. With minor modifications in the basic chemical engineering program, a student can satisfy the course requirements for admission to medical school. At the same time, he or she will continue to have the option open for future graduate study in chemical or biomedical engineering.

Known as the Pre-Medical Option in Chemical Engineering, the election of this new option will enable the UMass chemical engineers to become acquainted with the various departmental research programs underway in biomedical engineering -- e.g., the design of artificial organs; methematical modelling of physiological processes; and the use of enzyme reactors for treatment of varous metabolic diseases.

An additional feature of this Pre-Medical Option is that it will in no way reduce the job opportunities for a Bachelor's degree graduate.

Students interested in obtaining more specific information should contact Dr. John W. Eldridge, or Dr. Stanley Middleman, Pre-Med Option Advisor, Department of Chemical Engineering in Goessmann Laboratory, Room 159, or 545-2507.

Pre-Register At CASIAC

All Freshmen (class '76 and '77) in the College of Arts and Sciences can pick up their pre-registration forms at CASIAC in the front lobby of Machmer. Counseling from student counselor and/or faculty advisors will be all this week up until April 27.

Sox Split; Celtics Lose Heartbreaker

Moret Injured

CLEVELAND (AP)—Ron Lolich belted a grand slam homer off Sonny Siebert with two out in the bottom of the ninth to give the Cleveland Indians an 8-7 triumph over the Boston Red Sox Sunday in the opener of an American League baseball doubleheader.

In the second game, Tommy Harper's two-run fifth inning that enabled the Red Sox to win 5-2 and split the twin bill.

Lolich's homer wiped out a three-run tie-breaking rally by Boston in the top of the inning.

Carl Yastrzemski's two-run homer in the top of the ninth gave Boston a 7-4 lead following a run-scoring double by Luis Aparicio that broke a 4-4 tie.

In the nightcap, Harper scored Boston's first run in the fourth inning on a balk by starter Steve Dunning. With two aboard in the fifth, Bob Montgomery doubled one run across, Harper singled for two more and eventually scored the fourth run of the inning on Yastrzemski's bunt single.

Rogelio Moret blanked the Indians until he tore ligaments in his right knee covering first base on an infield hit by Jack Brohamer with two out in the sixth.

Rusty Torres then singled off reliever Bob Bolin and Brohamer eventually scored from second base when catcher Bob Montgomery rolled the ball back to the mound on what he thought should have been a third strike and Bolin picked the ball up and threw wildly to third.

Ruggers Tie Portland 12-12

By WILLIAM ELLIS

Conditioning is the key to winning in sports, and the UMass rugby club illustrated that point in tying the Portland Rugby Club on Saturday, 12-12.

John Awtrey, the 220 pound second row, had to leave the game after only five minutes when his side began to bother him. He had a knee operation in February, and he just never had time to get in shape before the season started. As a result, the preliminary diagnosis is that John has torn cartilage between two ribs.

Two Portland players cracked heads; both falling to the ground in convulsions. But both players were able to finish the game.

In the game played at Bowdoin College, UMass' high-powered offense jumped to a 12-0 lead early in the game with touchdowns by Wally Elsmore and John Harper.

But the ruggers soon lost their spark and missed tackles and stopped running. Portland took advantage and almost scored at the close of the first half.

In the second half Portland came out running and scored two touchdowns. UMass spent most of the second half playing defense in their half of the field.

In the "B" game it was a different story. Hard hitting by the forwards and good running and kicking by the backs brought UMass a 14-0 victory.

By 7 In Overtime

NEW YORK (AP) - Veteran forward Dave DeBusschere hit two key baskets in the second overtime period as the New York Knicks erased a 16-point deficit and defeated the Boston Celtics 117-110 Sunday to take a commanding 3-1 lead in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Knicks trailed 72-56 going into the fourth quarter but Walt Frazier scored 15 of his game-high 37 points in the period as the Knicks drew into overtime.

Boston, led by Jo Jo White and Dave Cowens and a sticky pressure defense, outscored New York 52-31 during the second and third periods. The Celtics led 48-42 at halftime and 72-56 going into the fourth quarter.

The Knicks closed the gap to 76-73 with 6 1/2 minutes to go in regulation time, reeling off 13 straight points-seven by Frazier and six by Gianelli.

The Celts, however, led by White, came back to take an 85-77 edge with four minutes on the clock.

The Knicks then exploded again, pumping in 10 points in a row to go in front. DeBusschere got two free throws, Meminger flipped in an offensive rebound, Frazier connected on a fall-away jumper, DeBusschere hit two more free throws to tie it, then Frazier drove the baseline for a reverse lay-in that put Boston behind. White came back with a pair of foul shots for Boston that knotted the score 87-87 with 1:50 to go.

going to help her and threw them away. Result: a 9.05 and her highest score. With the team championship so close and an inspiring performance from Ms. East, the rest of the team was galvanized to action and scored an 8.9 (Vexler), 8.75 (Burger), and a 9.1 (Combs). Final tally after the event was 105.7 and UMass was the new National Champion.

Individual championships were held the next day and Margie Combs became the highest finisher ever for the U of M as she tied Stephanie Stromer of SIU for second place in the uneven bars. In that same event Betsy East was seventh with a conbined 17.9 total, and Anne Vexler ninth, with a 17.75. In the All Around Ms.Vexler finished fourth place among a field of some thirty competitors. Jeannine Burger finished sixth, and Margie Combs, tenth. This was the first time that UMass has ever had three all-around people in the top ten, and all top performers all eligible for berths on the World University Games Team, which will compete in Moscow this summer.

To head Coach Virginia Evans it was the culmination of a tough year that ended amidst some controversy. "We had injuries going into this meet and they (the gymnasts) hurt, but they put the pain aside and competed like they never have before. It all started when we hit beam and finished with outstanding bars."

Assistant Coach Mike Kasavana described the meet as "the best team effort ever given by a UMass gym team. An example of determination and practice."

Athletic Director Frank McInerney was "enormouslv pleased". He commented further, "I've followed them through he season by attending their home meets at Amherst. From what I saw I knew that they were a top notch team, and for that reason we were quite disappointed when they lost to Springfield in the Easterns. We figured that given the right breaks, though, they could come out on top at the Nationals and they did in a most satisfying way."

UMass, UNH Split Weekend Series

By MIKE BROPHY

The UMass baseball team rebounded from a 5-2 defeat in New Hampshire on Friday to defeat the University of New Hampshire 11-1 in their second meeting of the season on Saturday. Mike Flanagan turned in a seven inning effort to collect the win while reliever Chip Allegrezza completed the game in his first action since returning from the California trip.

Tom White went for six good innings on Friday before his fielders let down by committing four errors and allowing four unearned runs to cross the plate. Saturday saw a complete reversal of situations as UNH committed seven errors on the day behind their pitching.

Friday

Friday saw only seven hits registered by the Minutemen as Don Gale, now 2-0 on the season, pitched a good ballgame, effectively keeping the ball away from the UMass batters. In seven innings he walked only three while striking out five. Tufts, who completed the game, had no such record to his credit for two innings of work but did manage to have the UMies hitting on the ground right at defensive players.

The first three innings went quickly and scorelessly as both starting pitchers seemed to have their stuff. UMass scored first as Mike Flanagan singled to right and later scored on Mark Palau's line shot single to left. An error by Palau in the bottom of the fourth permitted UNH to tie it up before taking a lead they would not relinquish in the fifth on an error by Newell in left field. A routine fly ball bounced off the heel of his glove and scooted through his legs. John Healy scored the second run for UMass as he singled and later tallied on Steve Newell's Sacrifice Fly to center.

Saturday

Paul Cormier gave up nine hits and seven runs in his four inning starting stint on the mound for UNH. Of those seven runs, only four were earned. That in itself does not speak too well of the UNH fielding. However, the UMass guns that were silenced on Friday seemed to come back to life on the home field with the wind blowing out to straight away center. The crack of the Minutemen's bat sent 14 hits around the field before the nine innings were completed.

John Healy, sophomore catching standout, led the batsmen with a three for four effort that produced two RBI's and had him score three times himself.

Saturday, however, at the end of two frames the former Redmen had a 4-0 lead with five hits already to their credit. And by the end of four frames it was 7-0.

UNH scored their lone run of the day in the' seventh frame, as Flanagan started to tire, when the leadoff hitter doubled and later scored on two successive singles.

Gorillas Laugh Past Wesleyan by 22-7

By HOWIE BLOOM

May every game Garber's Gorillas play from here on in be as tension-free as the match the team engaged Wesleyan's Cardinals in on Saturday afternoon. Before a sun-drenched Easter weekend crowd of 300 lacrosse fans, UMass' stickers had a party, destroying their opponent, 22-7.

If you don't think that score is bad enough, well, the Gorillas could have humiliated the Cardinals even more if Coach Garber didn't have a small mischievious streak in him. Just a few minutes into the final period, feeling extremely bad for the visitors, Garber pulled a mass switcheroo, and juggled his lineup so that most of his players were playing out of position. Among others, little Pete Connolly, normally an attackman, got a chance to try his luck on defense, and John McCarthy, a first line defenseman, got to show his skill at midfield, scoring a very impressive goal.

If the game had to be given a title, it would have to have been called, "The Rich Get Richer". Frank Garahan, UMass' leading goal scorer this season, enriched his statistics to the tune of six scores, giving him 23 for the year. And Fred Michels, the team's top point getter in 1973 fattened his point pot with three goals and five assists, jumping hi to 30 this season.

Three of Garahan's goals and two of Michels' assists came in the first period as the Gorillas left the field leading, 7-1. Gene Hardiman (2), Hirsch Seidman, and Bruce Sibson got the other scores.

In the second period, the main actors were esentially the same, as Garahan tallied the first two goals of the stanza and Michels the final three. In between, Connolly and Sibson chipped in, and the Gorillas were up by fourteen at the half, 15-1.

Michels' third score of the period was especially entertaining, as the senior attackman snared the rebound of a Seidman missle off the chest of Wesleyan's goalie, and from three feet in front of the net, fired it past the bruised netminder.

Wesleyan went relatively wild in the third period, scoring three goals, two by their leading scorer, Dave Fredland, who had four on the afternoon. The Gorillas countered with a three-pack of their own, and at the end of the stanza, UMass led, 18-4. Credit for the scores went to Connolly (2) and Hardiman, his third of the game. The sophomore midfielder had a perfect shots-to-scores ratio of one for the afternoon.

Finally, mercifully, the game ended. Garahan had his final goal of the afternoon, defenseman-turned-midfielder McCarthy talled his first of the year, Dwight Blomquist chipped in. Tommy Bock turned a trick, and it was over. Fredland scored twice, and teammate Sam Levenson helped out with one of his own, but in the end, the Gorillas had chewed up the Cardinals, 22-7. It was a belly laugh of an afternoon.

Golfers Win Tri-Match

By MDC STAFF

The Golf Team defeated both the Coast Guard Academy and URI in a tri-match hald at the New London Country Club Saturday. In the match play competition UMass captured both matches by identical scores of 5-2.

Gary Russell, medalist on the day, fired a 74. Four other UMass golfers shot in the 70's.

Crew Glides To Victory

The UMass crew club worked as a synchronized machine Saturday in stroking past the skullers of Boston University by 3 1/2 lengths on the Charles River. UMass finished the course in 7:14.25 while BU came in with a time of 7:30.5.

The freshman crew fell short by one length to the BU frosh. See tomorrow's Collegian for related story.

Trackmen Win, Set 2 Records

By WALT POWERS

About the only way to stop Bobby Adamson is to make him ineligible. That's what kept him out last winter, but since then, the light, agile, UMass freshman has been little short of sensational. Saturday afternoon he watched Tom Gilliams break his two-week-old school record in the triple-jump, but not before he set new Freshman, school, and track records in the long jump, leading the UMass Trackmen to a 85-64 1/2-53 1/2 double victory over Central Connecticut and Springfield College.

It wasn't a good day to run. Throughout the warm sunny afternoon, a steady southwest breeze played havoc with the pacing in the distance events; to the sprinters, who were forced to face it head on, it was like pushing into a wall. There were improved winning times in only two races, the 440 and the mile.

The wind was a blessing to the jumpers, though, and it's been a long time since a UMass team has swept these events like they did on Saturday. Bobby Adamson started things off by winning the long jump. He calmly waited for a gust of wind and then let it carry him past John Madeiros' old record set in 1966.

Gillams then went out and broke Adamson's school and track records in the triple jump, winding up at 48' 8-1/2". Another sophomore, Mark Hughes, beat out Springfield's Abe Davis in the high jump. Finally, Sophomore Dennis Lombardo made it four for four in the jumps with an unimpressive but important victory in the pole vault.

Other victories came in the Steeplechase, where Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson cleared hurdles and slogged through waterholes en route to the only 1-2 finish of the meet. In the other distance events, Randy Thomas ran against Bob Lees, and finished second twice. UMass record holder, Dennis Boisvert remained undefeated in the discus, and Ed McAlaney finished second in the shotput. Despite the wind, Steve Levine's victory in the 440 was almost automatic. The wind was too much for Tony Pendleton though, and he finished second twice to Cent-Conn's Tony Giaquinto. In his first race in a month, John Maloney fell just short in his bid to win the 880. Jim Hennessey brought the Minutemen their final victory in the 120 high hurdles.

Netmen Drop 1st Match; Host Boston College Today

By MDC STAFF

In what was certainly the Minuteman's most important dual match of the season UMass was done in by an extremely powerful Amherst squad, 6-3 Friday.

The home court advantage once again proved decisive as Amherst remained undefeated by garnering five out of a possible six points in singles. Only Captain Steve Ferber captured a win for UMass, that by 7-6, 6-4 at the third singles spot.

Down 2-1 in match play, the visiting netmen had high hopes of forcing the matter into doubles competition. At second singles Robert Schpeiser bowed in a tight three-setter, after which Gary Ney (UMass' fourth singles man) was edged out by a patient Robert Blood of Amherst. Fred Braley, at sixth position, went much the same route as Schpeiser and Amherst College, clay court capital of New England, added one more win on to their victory skein.

Back on hard court, UMass faces the Eagle squad that defeated M.I.T. 5-4 last week. Close followers of the netmen will recall that the Minutemen defeated the Engineers by a 6-3 score. The simple conclusion is that UMass won't have the easy time against B.C. that they did of one year ago. Last year they romped in 8-1 fashion.

Tomorrow afternoon UConn enters, after which the Yankee Conference championships will be starring the defending champs flush in the face.

Students Join Protest In Wounded Knee...

Nathan Gorenstein, a Collegian reporter, has recently spent several days in the vicinity of Wounded Knee, S.D. Here is a report from Gorenstein, filed last night.

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

ROSE BUD INDIAN RESERVATION, S.D.-75 American Indian Movement (AIM) supporters started a march across 100 miles of South Dakota Easter Sunday, bent on gathering enough strength to break the federal blockade around Wounded Knee by this weekend.

The march, organized by the AIM Indian group, whose forces have occupied Wounded Knee since February 22, left from an AIM staging area in the Rosebud Reservation.

Rosebud, one of five reservations in South Dakota is generally considered sympathetic to AIM and its activities. The base the marchers left from also seems to be one of the more secure AIM staging areas, in light of the number of outside supporters allowed in.

The marchers, multi-racial and from all sections of the nation, included ten people from Massachusetts, some of whom said they had brought with them money to donate to AIM for food supplies.

AIM officials hope to have enough people participating in the march by the weekend so that federal marshalls surrounding Wounded Knee will be unable to stop them, along with the food supplies the marchers will be carrying into the village.

Apparently, the supplies inside Wounded Knee are nearly exhausted. Over the past weekend at least fifty people attempting to smuggle supplies into the village have been arrested.

Called "runners" by AIM, they appear to have been one of the main sources of supplies for the occupiers of Wounded Knee during the past four weeeks.

The possibility of violence throughout the area also seems to be increasing. On their first night on the road an elaborate security system was set up by the marchers, who feared a raid by local vigilantes or anti-AIM Indians.

Also, at the pre-march briefing marchers were warned by organizers that once they left the Rosebud Reservation or even before, they would be open to attack by anti-AIM Indians supporting Pine Ridge Reservation Chief Richard Wilson and from "white ranchers".

The march, however, is to be non-violent, according to organizers. No arms were apparent during the first days of travel.

...Set To Raise Funds Here

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass Committee to Support Wounded Knee began organizing last night for a door-to-door canvassing effort next week to raise funds for the holders of the beseiged Wounded Knee, S.D.

Alwin Schmidt, a UMass student head of the Committee said at last night's meeting that eight UMass students left last weekend for South Dakota with funds for the American Indian Movement (AIM) forces inside the Pine Ridge Reservation hamlet.

"Eight students from UMass went to the area of Wounded Knee over the weekend carrying funds collected at the Wednesday rally, and with the intent of lending support in the Pine Ridge, S.D. area for those barricaded inside Wounded Knee," Schmidt said last night.

Schmidt said that nearly $350 was donated by Wounded Knee Supporters at a speech by AIM national director Vernon

Apostola Elected SGA President

By STEVE FINE

The Student Government Association last night elected Nick Apostola, a senior majoring in Balkan Studies its new president.

Apostola, who had been running on a platform of decentralizing student government, beat Student Senator Elliot Sherman on a second ballot vote. The final tally was 51.0 votes for Apostola, and 39.9 votes for Sherman with 5.1 votes split in abstentions or for Roy Perdue, and Henry Ragin, other candidates.

The convention used an electoral college system of voting with the votes split among the Student Senate and area governments for a total of 96 electoral votes. The Senate was awarded 48 votes with six votes distributed to the Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, Central and Greek Area Governments and 9 votes to the Commuter and Southwest Assembly for a total of 48 votes.

The procedure used for voting proportioned the number of members in each constituency with the number of votes it was allotted. For example the Sylvan area had 14 members so each person's vote was worth 3/7 of its six votes.

The convention itself which was held in the Campus Center Auditorium began a half an hour late and was punctuated by boisterous nomination speeches for Henry Ragin and long waits for vote tallies.

Each candidate was allowed to have one nomination speech, one second speech and an acceptance speech by the candidate.

When Dini Meltzer, a representative from the Orchard Hill Area Government, was asked what she thought of the proceedings, she replied, "I think this is being run very poorly. People have been very inconsiderate during the speeches." David Booker, Speaker of the Student Senate, said that this procedure may not be used next year, depending on whether the students should decide to change it in a referendum vote. Elaborating on the job of Student Government President, David Booker said his main job was to be representative and spokesman for the Student Government Association to the University, Faculty, and Board of Trustees. He said the President is paid $200 a month for working nine months of the academic year.

The newly elected president Nick Apostola said after the election "We've got a lot of work to do."

In a recent interview he said the basic issue of the election was whether students were going to have control of their lives or not. The best way he said to achieve this was by decentralizing student government and give the power to area governments.

Apostola has also said that he forsees cutting the Student Activities Tax (37.80 for two semesters) by eliminating the funding of small groups. "The Senate must fund only essential services. If we run services like the People's Market, then we can build up a financial base to start other services like a credit union or a gas station," he recently said.

"A Good Fucking High"

By MARY KEANE

"Anybody who thinks he's better than anyone else is an asshole." That's what Peter Lewicke served for openers last night as the new system of election of the SGA president by electoral representatives began.

But it was only the beginning. Spectators were treated to a carnival of characters presenting a fine production of student government as absurdist theatre.

Students began filling the C.C. Auditorium around 7 p.m. Shouts and hisses issued from the crowd as students were delegated to their respective areas.

At 7:30 student senator Peter Lewicke was introduced to make a nomination speech for Henry Ragin, an activist in Southwest Assembly who was engrossed in waging a one-man 'Loser's campaign.' Both Lewicke and Ragin pounded the podium and announced that students must seize the powers necessary to end bureaucracy.

They also declared that students should have the right to "get high however they want. Some people get high on dope, some on life, some even on Christ." Lewicke closed amidst cries of "fuck the Senate" while avidly endorsing a brand of whiskey guaranteed to produce "a good fucking high."

A crowd stirred by the theatries of Ragin's followers greeted the remaining speakers, who had to shout or repeatedly call for silence over the murmurings of the restless natives.

A stone Cardinal Newman extends his arms in greeting to birth-control advocate Bill Baird, who was at UMass yesterday and will be here again tomorrow to speak on the unfinished work of his abortion crusade.

UMass Women Battle Pro-Abortion Baird

By MARK VOGLER

Women will continue to get even with men until equality is reached, several students at a University of Massachusetts Women's center told nationally-known abortion advocate William Baird Monday.

Baird visited the Southwest Women's Center during the afternoon to discuss reasons why he has recently received negative reaction from women concerning his scheduled appearance at the University.

He plans to do a workshop Wednesday afternoon on the establishment of abortion clinics as multi-service community assets, and then lecture in the evening on "The Unfinished Battle for Abortion."

Baird reported that he received over a dozen phone calls in the morning, one threatening him with castration if he chooses to appear at the University tomorrow.

When he approached a group of college women at the Southwest center, he asked why there was general rejection of his coming to speak on abortion—something that he has been jailed eight times for in working to enlighten the public as to their rights to abortion.

One student, who identified herself as Judy Katz, said: "You're a man, that's why... When there are competent women who can speak on the subject, why not support them rather than learn about my anatomy from a man."

Miss Katz indicated that if a man and a woman were after the same job, she'd hire a woman even if the man was better qualified.

Another student, who referred to herself as Susan, told Baird, that while she agreed that the attitude against his speaking at the University is "sexist", she explained "We're going to take this opportunity to redress the inequities of the system . . . we're going to get even for a while until things start to change."

Following his discussion, Baird remarked that he still referred to women's liberation as "one of the sickest movements that has ever existed."

"I wish they could realize just how sick they are, substituting one form of discrimination for another. If this malady continues, there will be an open battle of the sexes."

A director of the center, Miss Peggy Cookson, said that "Bill Baird is out for himself."

"We would have preferred to have a woman speak on the subject. Women have certainly been here since the world started. And there are some equally as qualified as Bill Baird.

Another girl said that she would like very much to listen to Baird's talk.

"Bill Baird has done a lot for the women's movement. Ten years ago he was for women . . . long before we were for women."

Students, Senators Debate End To Senate

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Members of the Student Senate voiced disfavor over a proposed referenda calling for immediate abolition of the Senate yesterday while 20 of 28 students surveyed said that they would vote "yes" if presented with such a referendum.

The referendum, proposed by students Tom Merrigan and Barry Schneider, calls for the establishment of an Interim Committee, composed of representatives from area governments, assemblies and the Third World Alliance. The committee would study, recommend and obtain approval for a decentralized system of student government.

Student Senate Treasurer, Paul Hamel said, "I think it's foolish." Referring to the fact that both Merrigan and Schneider are members of Student Workshop on Activities Problems (S.W.A.P.), Hamel said that he felt S.W.A.P. was not pleased with the Senate's budgeting procedure and that they wished to do away with the Student Senate and still keep their present budget. "This is not a referendum to get rid of bad government but a way of getting back," Hamel said. He was Ref.

Speaker of the Student Senate, David Booker called the Senate a means of protecting student money. He said that the referendum proposal was a "reaction to the fact that (in budgeting) we did question some groups such as S.W.A.P. more than others."

Walter Powers, one of the students who said he would vote "yes" on the referendum said, "The Student Senate isn't that visible of an organization. I'd like to see it become that. The present Student Senate has very little meaning to it."

Jim Kerr, one of 5 students who said that they would vote "no" said that he favored a change in the Senate but that immediate abolition would "not be a wise idea. A study should be carried out while it's functioning," Kerr said.

"This is something that we are doing as students and in no way involves our association with SWAP," Schneider said. "The senate has given SWAP enough grief and to do something such as this in the name of SWAP would certainly jeopardize it in the future."

Merrigan said that there were two issues involved. "First off, the current Student Senate is quite distant from the average student. They do a poor job in determining and representing the student point of view and go off on tangents that the ordinary student does not even care about."

Merrigan also cited the fact that two of the last three presidents of the student body have been fifth year students and that two of the four candidates for president this year should be graduating in '73. "How can a fifth year student represent the undergraduate student body?" Merrigan asked.

Merrigan said that the more important issue is: "Can a centralized Student Senate effectively represent 18,000 undergrads and fairly disburse $650,000 to $700,000 of undergraduate taxes?"

"It makes no sense at all to have a centralized student government when area governments, Greek Council, Third World Alliance, and Commuter Assembly could more effectively serve student interests," Merrigan said.

In order to present the referendum to the student body for a vote one of three things must occur: 1. The SGA president must order that it be done. 2. Area governments must vote that such a vote be taken. 3. 25% of the student body must sign the referendum.

If there were a vote on the referendum, 25% of the student body must vote in order to make the vote valid. The majority would rule.

Merrigan and Schneider will meet with area representatives today to further discuss the referendum.

The proposed referendum reads as follows:

ITEM 1—The immediate abolition of the present undergraduate Student Senate of UMass (and its ancillary functions) with the following replacement to become effective within 48 hours.

ITEM 2—The establishment of an Interim Committee to be composed of the following student representatives:

Commuter Assembly, 6
Southwest Assembly, 5
Central Area Govt., 2
Third World Alliance, 1
Greek Council, 1
Orchard Hill, 1
Northeast, 1
Sylvan, 1

The purpose of said Interim Committee shall be to study, recommend and obtain approval (via referenda) for a decentralized system of student government. The life span of said committee shall terminate on October 15, 1973.

ITEM 3—The establishment of a Watchdog Committee as a bona fide agency of the student body in matters of university administration, academics, rents and fees, Campus Center, etc. Representation on said committee shall be apportioned in the same manner as the Interim Committee. Termination date of the Watchdog Committee shall also be October 15, 1973.

ITEM 4—The Campus Center Governing Board shall remain standing and exempt from ITEM 1 with its future status to be included in the proposal to be put forth by the Interim Committee.

ITEM 5—The purpose of said Interim Committee shall provide for continued existence and funding of such central student activities as the Daily Collegian and WMUA.

DELEGATE APPORTIONMENT: one representative per 1,000 students.

A Little Out Of Breath

Sometime between 8 and 8:30 tonight 150 UMass students are expected to run panting onto the Haigis Mall in front of Whitmore administration building after running from Boston to Amherst.

The students, all members of fraternities and sororities at UMass, are part of a marathon sponsored by the Greek council to raise money for cancer research.

Over two dozen Amherst area merchants have either sponsored a runner or given contributions to the drive, and the Greek Council is asking students to donate today when members of the council ask for contributions in the Campus Center con-course, the Hatch, in front of the Student Union, and in the Blue Wall.

The run will start at the steps of the State House in Boston at 9:15 this morning.

Area sponsors are: Baker Winn Jewelers; A. J. Hastings, Blair, Cutting, and Smith, Fowler Jeweler of Amherst, Hungry-U, Nearhouse, Chopping Block, Russell's Liquors, Inc., the Shoe-Bin, C & C Package Store, Mike's tavern, Mansfield Paper, Sitterly Rubbish Removal, Pepin Fuel, First National Bank of Amherst, Louis's Market, Gordon Linen, Dreikorn's Bread, Idlenot Dairy, Pyrofax Gas, First National Bank of Greenfield, and the Franklin County National Bank of Greenfield.

Grad Senate Elects Muller, Stack Officers

By JIM LINDSEY

The Graduate Senate met last night for their annual election of new officers by that body. The results were that John A. Muller was elected as President; Barbara Stack, Vice-President; Karen Erickson, Treasurer, and Pat Brown, Secretary.

Nominations for President were Michael Curran and John Muller. Curran stressed in his nominating speech that the main job of the office would be organization of the Graduate Senate into an effective body representing the total graduate body.

Muller agreed that this organization of the Senate was important, however, he stressed that this organization should be coupled with an effort to develop the total graduate student body into a professional group capable of meeting the needs of each individual grad student in terms of professional development, financing his education and helping with problems the student may be experiencing with administration.

Muller has completed almost all the requirements for a PhD in English Literature and will receive the degree in June 1974.

In 1972 Muller was elected Vice-President of the Graduate Senate. He developed that position into a major channel of liason and rapport between the Graduate Senate, the undergraduate government, and the university government.

Muller is in favor of a de-centralized executive, a sharing of decision making, the advice and consent of the senate on all political appointments and support of departmental level graduate organization.

Selectmen Discuss Planning Board

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Board of Selectmen called a meeting with the Amherst Planning into executive session last night after having originally called the meeting an open one. Planning Chairperson Alice Epstein requested the executive meeting to discuss the relation of the Planning Board to the Board of Selectmen.

The original intent of the meeting was to discuss the current sewer connection restrictions imposed by the State Water Pollution Board.

Town Boards have the right to hold executive session if they are discussing 'personalities' or issues detrimental to character. Members of the press protested to Selectman Chairman Michael Sullivan that what was being discussed was an issue (the relation of one town board to another and not 'personalities'.

No member of the Board of Selectmen or the Planning Board replied to the memo.

Earlier in the meeting the Selectmen had voted to hold an open meeting, and asked the Planning Board to justify their request. Epstein replied, "I was not prepared to defend this request in detail."

Merle H. Howes, Treasurer of the Board of Selectmen, said he saw "no reason to hold the executive session."

The Planning Board handles planning of town growth and has had increasing responsibilities from recent housing construction. They felt their position was being usurped by the Board of Selectmen. (Chairman of the Board of Selectman Michael Sullivan called the Collegian at midnight last night and said the meeting had no justification for being called into executive session. He said the Planning Board was not aware that Amherst was under a Sewer Extension Ban. The ban has been in effect since early Feb. 16. Sullivan said the minutes of the meeting would be made known tomorrow.)

In other business a group of UMass students and town businessmen spoke to the Board about starting a Farmer's Market at the Amherst Town Common this summer. Phil Beanstock, UMass student said the purpose of the market was to provide a means for local farmers to sell their goods at a central location. He added gardeners could bring in their extra produce also. The Selectman expressed an interest in the project, but expressed concern to health standards and clean up after the sale.

The Market will "most likely" be held at Spring Street from the month of July through October from 7 a.m. to 12 p.m., according to Market spokesman.

Stokely Carmichael To Speak On Black Liberation Movement

Stokely Carmichael, former chairman of S.N.C.C. (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee), the architect of the Black Power movement of the late 1960's, and a leading international spokesman for the Pan-Africanist movement will present the first lecture in the 1973 W.E.B. DuBois lecture series offered each year by the Afro-American Studies Department of the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Carmichael, who is completing a tour of U.S. cities, will speak at 2:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom of the University tomorrow, April 25th. The subject of Carmichael's address will be the pan-african liberation movement and the Black American struggle for liberation.

Mr. Carmichael will also conduct a political organizing and theoretical seminar for representatives of the black student organizations of the five colleges. This seminar will run from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Wednesday, April 25th. The seminar, which is limited to 30 students, will take place in New Africa House at the University and is geared towards the student leadership of the five colleges.

In recent years Mr. Carmichael has been based in the Republic of Guinea, where he is a guest of the government and a member of the staff of the late Osegeyfo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana.

Prof. Mike Thelwell, Chairman of the W.E.B. DuBois Department said, "The lectures are intended to preserve the memory and carry on the tradition of the late Dr. DuBois one of the polictical and intellectual giants of the black world. They are intended to present the academic community of the five colleges with significant and authoritative discussions of important issues and developments affecting Black America and the African World. It is entirely within our responsibility as a Pan Africanist deprtment."

The second DuBois lecture will be presented by Ambassador Cherif Guellal, a professor in the Dubois Department currently on leave. Ambassador Guellal is serving as President of Sonnatrach, the national development corporation of the Algerian Government and people. He was recently responsible for negotiating a multi-billion dollar natural gas agreement between Algeria and the United States. Ambassador Guellal will speak on the potential effects of the European and American "energy crisis" on the economic development of the Third World. The date and time of the Ambassador's lecture will be announced.

"Balkan Boy Makes Good"

Speakers for the winning candidate, Nick Apostola, were too soft-spoken to be heard. Former speaker for the Student Senate John Hogan found it necessary to succintly instruct one of Ragin's fans to "cool it." While Ragin's platform might have pointedly demonstrated the absurdities of bureaucratic procedures, it also served to obscure most of the practical concerns of the electorate.

Elliott Sherman closed the nomination speeches by advocating a unification of all student interests. As the crowd went into balloting, female candidates and representatives of Third World Groups were conspicuous only in their absence. At this writing the elections are over, Nick Apostola is the new SGA president, and there are people wandering about wondering if there's something on fire in the Student Union.

After his election, Apostola suggested the headline on the story announcing the election results read "Balkan Boy Makes Good." Lewicke called the Collegian after the election and suggested the headline on the story read "Ragin Loses."

Relief Convoy Reaches Phnom Penh

By EDITH LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-A river convoy carrying fuel and food made it to Cambodia's capital Monday despite three enemy ambushes. One crewman was killed and three others wounded.

At the same time, the Cambodian military command in Phnom Penh reported government forces had retaken a position along Highway 2, about 10 miles south of the capital, in the continuing fight to reopen road links with the rest of the nation.

A sharp fight was reported between South Vietnamese government troops and the Viet Cong in the Mekong Delta near where the eight-vessel convoy set out shortly after dawn on its 60-mile journey to Pnnom Penh. But the Saigon command reported a dropoff in fighting elsewhere in South Vietnam.

Six tankers and two cargo vessels under heavy South Vietnamese naval escort came under attack just before crossing the South Vietnamese-Cambodian border on the Mekong, but sources on the scene reported no serious damage.

Two other attacks came inside Cambodia. The worst was about halfway to Phnom Penh.

Cambodian officials refused to say how much fuel was aboard the tankers. The cargo vessels carried American rice.

Phnom Penh has been running low on fuel since the enemy opened an offensive in January on the roads leading to the capital.

U.S. C 130 Hercules transport planes have been flying in aviation fuel from abroad.

The road to Cambodia's sole deepwater port, Kompong Som, southwest of Phnom Penh, has been cut for some time and the Mekong is the only major water route to the capital. Other highways from the countryside and South Vietnam have been closed on and off by the enemy since January.

The military command in Phnom Penh reported that government forces retook a position on Highway 2 at the site of the village of Siem Reap-kandal, which was razed by the enemy in November. Highway 2 runs south from Phnom Penh into South Vietnam's Mekong Delta.

In northern of South Vietnam, new attacks were made against government positions around the defense perimeter in the mountains west of Hue, the Saigon command said.

But the command reported the lowest number of alleged cease-fire violations-a total of 66 - in the 24-hour pperiod ending at down Monday. The previous 24-hour low was 85 April 16.

In another development, Radio Hanoi charged that the United States intends to introduce troops from neighboring Thailand into Cambodia. It said Thailand must "bear responsibility for any serious consequences which will result from its foolish military commitment.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the Cambodian rebels fighting around Phnom Penh are supported by North Vietnamese heavy weapons crews.

Last week, a U.S. Embassy source in Phnom Penh said the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were no longer taking an active part in the war in Cambodia, except in an advisory or logistical capacity.

But spokesman Charles W. Bray told newsmen in Washington Monday: "While insurgent infantry engaged around Phnom Penh are Khmer insurgents it is also our belief that they are trained, supplied and supported by the North Vietnamese army from whom they draw some of their cadres."

U.S. Senators Confer At Kremlin

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev conducted an unusual 3 1/2-hour Kremlin meeting Monday with seven U. S. senators to discuss Soviet-American trade and congressional opposition to Soviet emigration policies.

Three of the senators told newsmen after the meeting that Brezhnev gave them information on the status of Moscow's disputed education tax and added that they will report their findings to President Nixon.

The fact that Brezhnev received the senators and spent 3 1/2 hours with them demonstrated the high priority Soviet leaders place on Soviet-American trade and indicated official Kremlin concern about the fate of a U.S. - Russian trade bill in Congress.

To a man, the senators came away from the meeting impressed by Brezhnev's personality, his apparent desire to improve Soviet-American relations and his political abilities.

"He's an excellent politician," said Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind. "There is no question in my mind that he is making a determined effort to improve relations between the Soviet Union and the United States."

The senators talked informally to newsmen at an evening reception at the U. S. ambassador's residence after the meeting. They were reluctant to discuss what Brezhnev told them on the controversial education tax on emigrants.

Sen. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., said only, "We'll report to President Nixon," and Sen. J. Glenn Beall Jr., R-Md., said the senators will be taking the President "specific information."

White House 'Cover Up' Charges

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate sources said Monday investigators have evidence there was an elaborate White House effort to cover up high level involvement in the Watergate affair. The evidence indicates presidential aides H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman were among the participants, the sources said.

They said there is no question President Nixon was aware of a coverup effort, perhaps as early as a few days after the break-in at Democratic headquarters in the Watergate building June 17.

The sources refused to describe the reported cover-up in detail, but said one phase included "attempts to pressure other officials in the government to go along."

The sources said the other officials included ranking members of the Justice Department and FBI.

Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray presumably was in that group, and his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee regarding the Watergate investigation indicated he refused to cooperate with the reported coverup.

"The coverup is even more damning than the Watergate itself," the sources said, and it likely will result in more resignaions from the White House staff.

Ehrlichman, they predicted, will be among those forced to resign when the details of the operation become public.

Ehrlichman, chief of President Nixon's domestic affairs council so far has escaped prominent mention in reports of White House involvement in Watergate.

Gray did say in his Senate testimony, however, that Ehrlichman and presidential counsel John W. Dean III called him on the carpet following news leaks regarding the FBI's Watergate investigation.

The prosecutor in the Watergate case, Earl J. Silbert, has told friends privately that Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst once called him into his office early in the Watergate investigation and told him to "go slow" in returning indictments.

Silbert reporiedly refused, although the seven men originally indicted in the case were only those directly involved with the break-in.

The Senate sources said there are indications the President didn't know about the Watergate raid until after it occurred but that he was aware there was a political espionage operation within the Committee for the Re-election of the President.

When former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell resigned as director of the re-election committee two weeks after the break-in, "the President knew why he was resigning-that it was because of Watergate," the sources said.

Mitchell's public explanation for leaving his post was to devote more time to his wife, Martha.

Recently Haldeman told a group of Republican congressmen that he had set up a system to gather campaign intelligence, but said the system used purely legal means such as clipping newspapers and recording speeches by the other side.

The sources also said James McCord testified to Senate investigators that he had been offered presidential clemency if he went to jail without identifying anyone else higher up in the Watergate affair.

McCord was convicted of wiretapping, burglary and conspiracy during a trial in which he didn't testify on his own behalf. He now has begun to cooperate with prosecutors and Senate investigators.

In other Watergate developments Monday:

-Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., said the man now heading President Nixon's investigation of Watergate helped scuttle a congressional probe last year. He urged the President to replace Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Peterson with a special prosecutor who is "an outside, uncompromised unimpeachable citizen."

Reuss said the House Banking and Currency Committee voted against subpoena power for its chairman, Wright Patman, D-Tex., after Peterson wrote that a congressional inquiry would imperil the efforts of federal law-enforcement officials.

—The Washington Star-News said the Nixon campaign kept a secret cash fund of up to $500,000 to use, at least in part, for political spying and disruption. The newspaper said the President's personal lawyer, Herbert Kalmbach, controlled the money.

Court Ponders Rules On Pregnancy, Jobs

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court Monday agreed to examine the constitutionality of rules that force women off the job solely because they are pregnant.

The issue reached the high court in two cases from the classroom. The Cleveland city schools appealed the ruling of the U.S. Circuit at Cincinnati that found a ban on teachers more than five months pregnant "clearly arbitrary and unreasonable."

On the other side of the issue the high court will also hear the appeal of a Chesterfield County, Va., teacher, Susan Cohen.

The U.S. Circuit Court in Richmond upheld a regulation similar to that struck down in Cleveland. The school boards argued in briefs that termination was necessary because of a lessened ability to perform duties and to protect the pregnant woman's health.

Lawyers for the teachers in the two cases said a blanket policy that did not take into account the individual's fitness for the job constituted an invidious form of sex discrimination.

With one dissenting vote, the court without comment declined to enter a reporter-privilege controversy that could send a Baltimore newsman to jail indefinitely.

The majority refused to hear a plea from Baltimore Evening Sun reporter David M. Lightman that the high court should block his contempt conviction because, he said, the grand jury questions that he refused to answer were aimed at harassment of his newspaper not fact-finding.

Worcester County, Md., state's attorney John L. Sanford Jr. said after the high court action that he would again question Lightman about a story dealing with marijuana use.

"If he doesn't answer them, he'll go to jail," Sanford said. Lightman wrote in 1971 that he was offered marijuana by the operator of an Ocean City pipe shop in the presence of a policeman. He quoted the operator as saying of policy, "We're nice to them, so they don't come sniffing around."

Mass. School District Locks Out Army Children

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Education Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said Monday it was "in very bad taste" for a Massachusetts school district to lock out 2,300 Army children because of reduced federal impact-aid spending.

Such an action would be illegal in California, he said, "and I can't conceive it would be legal anywhere else."

The seven schools in Ayer, Mass., were closed this week for rescheduling of classes and dismissal notices were sent to 107 of the 203 professional staff members.

The Ayer School Committee said last Friday that effective April 30 it will not be responsible for educating the 2,300 pupils who live on nearby Ft. Devens Army post.

"There is no obligation on the town to educate the youngsters," Superintendent Ross A. Headley said.

"If we take the kids, it will be cause we have the money ahead of time."

Weinberger told a press luncheon that Headley's comments "indicate to me that the man fundamentally is more interested in money than the education of children."

Last week the Douglas, S.D., school district including Ellsworth Air Force Base shut its doors. The 3,300 pupil district said it will receive only $1.6 million of the $2.2 million it had expected.

Although the Nixon administration decided recently to release $507 million to aid impacted schools this fiscal year, the National Education Association estimates that 40 to 45 districts will be hit hard by failure to spend the $635 million authorized by Congress.

A supplemental appropriations bill in a House-Senate conference committee would provide an additional $85 million to $90 million in impact aid money.

Bellecourt in Amherst last Wednesday.

Bellecourt spoke alongside AIM lawyer David Rockwell and Al Holloway, a member of the Boston Indian Council at a rally sponsored by the UMass group.

The Committee is now formulating plans for a mass canvassing effort scheduled for the end of this week and the beginning of next, as well as an informational table-display in the Campus Center concourse.

In addition, the Committee hopes to set-up a benefit concert for Wounded Knee, but it has not formalized plans as yet.

The group is also seeking permission from Collegian editors to publish in Friday's newspaper two pages about the Wounded Knee crisis.

Schmidt said that a second meeting of the UMass support group will be next Monday evening, probably in the Campus Center. At that time volunteers will be needed to help formulate a final plan for canvassing the campus, he said.

Area residents who wish to demonstrate their support for the Oglala Sioux and AIM forces at Wounded Knee should appear at the Committee's table for instructions when it is set up on Wednesday or Thursday.

Uncle Sam Wants You

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - At a cost per man of $25 a day plus travel expenses, the Pentagon is marshaling troops from some of its proudest combat units to sell the volunteer army.

If the program is expensive, the Army says it is also successful.

In a tradition dating back to the Spanish-American War when Teddy Roosevelt organized his Rough Riders from among college students, Indians, and Western outlaws, the Army is turning over to combat commanders some of the responsibility for recruiting their own troops.

Commanding generals of units like the 101st Airborne Division at Ft. Campbell, Ky., are sending young soldiers back to their home towns as living examples of the new Army.

In addition to their regular pay, they receive $25 a day, even if they live at home. Travel to and from their units is covered too.

Since the program began in February 1971, the Army says 38,000 young men have come in under its "Unit of Choice Program."

A military planner familiar with the program's beginning says there were some early excesses. One general ordered canvassers to "go out and recruit me a division."

As many as 1,150 canvassers were sent to points all over the country; some went thousands of miles from their units. There are currently about 30 canvassers living at home or on the civilian economy.

In the first 18 months of the program, the canvassers were paid only their normal military salaries.

As the result of a ruling by the Pentagon's comptroller, the Army decided the canvassers would have to receive the $25 daily temporary duty pay and travel expenses.

Lt. Col. G. W. Bilderback, a Pentagon administrator of the program, said the added costs forced the Army to cut the number of canvassers at least in half.

Despite the cutback, Bilderback said, more troops are joining specific combat units than ever before. Some 28,000 of the 38,000 recruited so far have signed up since the start of fiscal year 1973 last July 1.

P-10 Sponsors Talk On The Crime Of Society

The argument that crime reflects not individual pathology but rather the institutional structure of society is the subject of tonight's Project 10 discussion series, "The Social Reality of Crime."

Dr. John Wildeman, Hofstra University sociologist and author of Teaching Criminology, is the main speaker.

Wildeman, the chairperson of Hofstra's sociology department, has done extensive research into the decision-making processes of probation managers, and is currently compiling an annotated bibliography, In the Name of Freedom, on the repression of citizens' liberties. Also at work on the bibliography are two graduate students, Rochelle Potak and Willard Petry, who are Resident Teaching Fellows in Project 10, the campus "experimental college."

Wildeman is an anarchist and member of the Industrial Workers of the World. By his terminiology, crime is simply a definition formulated by those holding power in society and imposed upon those who lack such power.

He concedes that his approach is controversial and open to criticism, but it does serve as a tool of radical social criticism outside the dominant "liberal" school of criminology.

Tonight's meeting is in the Project 10 Apartment, at the front of Moore House in Southwest. It begins at 9 p.m.

Speaking next Tuesday in the series is Dr. Johnneta Cole, university professor of Afro-American Studies. Dr. Cole's subject is the socialist revolution in Cuba, based on her first-hand observations visiting the island earlier this year.

Boston Globe Defends Oliphant

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Globe said Monday it would defend a reporter who was arrested on a charge of breaking federal law while covering an airlift last week of food to Indians holding Wounded Knee, S.D.

The reporter, Thomas P. Oliphant, surrendered to the FBI in Washington Monday after a warrant was issued charging him with conspiracy to violate the federal antiriot act.

Oliphant had written stories describing how he accompanied seven young men who had parachuted nearly a ton of supplies to the Indians last Tuesday.

Thomas Winship, editor of The Globe, said "As far as The Boston Globe is concerned, Thomas Oliphant of our Washington bureau was covering a legitimate news story for the paper. We are defending his right to do so."

In his stories, Oliphant did not name any of the participants in the airlift. He said it was planned by an antiwar group.

New SGA President

"We've got a lot of work to do."

With those words, Nick Apostola stepped into the position of Student Government Association President last night.

Nick assumes the office with intentions of deoentralizing power in student government in order to give students more control over their lives. Essentially, Nick plans to distribute power to area governments to strengthen each part of student government where "it would form a united front."

We congratulate Nick on his victory, and wish him the best of luck in his endeavours in the year ahead.

National Champs

Congratulations to the Women's Gymnastics Team, which captured the coveted team title of the fifth American Intercollegiate Association of Women's Athletics (AIAWA) National Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championship, the first national championship title brought to campus in fifty years.

The girls are to be commended for their outstanding team effort, their determination, and their overall good sportsmanship.

Personal Reflections

I have been reflecting for some time now on the proper role of a columnist in a newspaper like the Daily Collegian. I have reached no final conclusions but one thing which has occurred to me is that a columnist should attempt to communicate to the reader reality to form a broader foundation upon which to base his or her view of reality. It then struck me that most of my columns are highly impersonal and formalized to a greater degree than those of many of my associates, particularly those of Joyce Kosofsky and Gary Gomes. Perhaps this is, to a certain degree, inevitable since the printed word, in general, places a distance between the writer and the reader and since my columns in particular usually deal with politics which is by nature a rather impersonal and abstract realm. Since words can never represent a person a columnist is never really forced to present himself to the reader. I often read over my columns on the day, or the day after, they appear and am frequently astonished at the image I receive of myself and of how little of myself I usually integrate into the bulk of what I write. At any rate today I thought I would offer, instead of my usual moralizing, some more personal thoughts.

Two of the more important questions seems to me to be first, what does it mean to be a human being and second how should I, in my generality as a human being and my particularity as an individual, lead my own life. These are two of the perennial questions to which there are many answers but in respect to which there are few comfortable resting places. One thing which I have always believed to be of importance is the need for humans to relate to other humans. In one sense this is a paradoxical view for me to hold since intellectually I believe humans to be inherently estranged from one another for a set of complex philosophical-epistemological reasons which I will not explore at this juncture. But nonetheless I always feel the need to communicate to other people, to tell them what I am thinking and feeling. I often retreat behind the shield of intellectuality while at the same time realizing the danger in such a retreat. Everyone, though, hides behind a shield of some sort because to reveal oneself is to risk rejection, misunderstanding, and the pain of vulnerability. To be human is, I think, to search for the courage and the method of transcending that shield.

I don't believe life to be purposeless but I do believe it to be paradoxical and often tragic. It seems tragic that communication and union with other people is so excruciatingly difficult. It seems tragic that one must die. Perhaps it is these very paradoxes and tragedies which lend life their meaning and perhaps to live is to have the courage and willingness to meet them head on, to integrate them into one's own being, to transcend them. To transcend is not to abolish but to go beyond, beyond to another realm which does not present itself on the level of everyday appearances. It does not represent an escape or a flight from reality but a search for something which seldom presents itself and then, often in symbols. It is not a rational process but neither is it an irrational one but merely the quest for something fleeting and intangible. It is a quest grounded both in words and in actions.

Some, among them a close friend of mine, believe that tragedy cannot be transcended. Again, as with most things, I am unsure. I think perhaps Hamlet did and in another way Socrates did also. But regardless, the questions remain, they remain always as a reflection upon which we cast ourselves.

Nixon Yachts Alone

Charles Camelopard, after taking a week off to pursue personal matters, spent Easter weekend tapping phone lines at the Florida White House in Key Biscayne.

The Boston Globe reported in an analysis Monday that President Nixon had taken a two-hour cruise on his yacht "Sequoia". A reporter asked the question who really accompanied the Chief Executive on the cruise in his piece that claimed White House staffers were losing faith in their leader.

Camelopard's tapes of weekend phone calls prove that not only is Nixon losing his credibility as President, but is having a hard time finding people to socialize with:

Ring, Ring..."Hello, Henry. This is Dick. What are you doing tonight?"

"Dick Kleindienst?"

"No, dummy. Dick Nixon."

"Oh, hi howya been?"

"Pretty good. What are you doing tonight?"

"I don't know. I've been calling Raquel Welch all day, but no one answers."

"Well look, Pat and I are looking for someone to go out on our boat with us. Can you make it?"

"I don't think so. I guess I'll stay home and watch Jonathan Winters. I need some rest. Keeping out of this affair business has really tired me out."

"What affair, Henry?"

"You know, Water..."

"Don't say it, Henry! Somebody might be listening; I don't even want to hear the word. I know nothing about it."

"Yeah, sure Dick. Look, I gotta go. Why don't you call John and Martha?"

"I don't want to call them. Martha does enough telephone calling as it is. I hope she knows enough to shut up this time."

"OK, Dick. Goodbye now."

"Bye."

Nixon dialed again.

"Hello, John, this is Dick. Look, I'm really worried. Is Martha around now?"

"No."

"Well, where is she?"

"I don't know. She took a bunch of change in a bag and ran out saying she had something to do."

"Oh, no! Where do you suppose she went?"

"Well, I know it wasn't the laundromat. We got our own machine now."

"Oh no...she's on the phone again. I gotta run; there will be all kinds of reporters calling here soon if she opens that mouth of hers again. Goodbye."

Click.

The President dialed a third time.

"Hello."

"Bebe, this is Dick. You gotta get over here right away to go out on the boat with me and Pat. I think Martha Mitchell is on the phone again blabbing and I don't want to be around when the phone starts ringing."

"I can't make it, Dick. We're having some people over for drinks and dinner, how about tomorrow?"

"There won't be any tomorrow if I don't get out of here."

"Well, Dick, you better go it alone. Everyone will think you're gonna make some announcement or something. You can get a few more days silence out of it. Our guests are here; I think you should go yachting alone."

And he did.

They Don't Like Men

By KEVIN MACK

Every moment has its lunatic fringe. Here at UMass, the lunatic fringe of the Women's movement is alive and well. In fact, it can be found thriving at the Southwest Women's Center.

I spent yesterday afternoon trucking around campus with Bill Baird, a man who has spent the last ten years of his life fighting for birth-control reform and Women's rights. He was fighting for Women's rights even before women were fighting for themselves. He has been invited to speak here Wednesday by the Southwest Assembly, but it seems that some of the people at the Southwest Women's Center objected to his speaking. Not because he is not qualified, but simply because he is a man. It seems they don't like men.

Yesterday afternoon, I witnessed a verbal confrontation between Baird with a woman associate, Susan Vogel, and several women at the Southwest Women's Center. It became obvious to me after a while that some of these women hated anything with a penis.

Judy Katz, one of the Directors of the Women's Center, demanded to know why women reporters were not covering Baird's arrival at the Women's Center. "Who are these men?"(referring to myself and a reporter), she demanded in a tone which could not disguise her disdain for us, in particular, and all men in general. "Why weren't women reporters sent?"

Miss Katz felt that I could not be "objective because I am a man. She felt that I would be biased, and she is right. But I only became biased after I heard her speak--not before.

It's pretty rash for someone to say, "Bill Baird is only out for himself", as Peggy Cookson, another Director of the Southwest Women's Center said yesterday. He's been in prison eight times in the past ten years because he stood up for women's rights when no one else had the balls. And yet someone like Miss Cookson, who has never been in prison or received death threats, dismiss him as being "only out for himself." The absurdity of this statement speaks for itself, and for the lunatic fringe of the Women's movement.

Kevin Mack is a Collegian commentator.

Letters To The Editor

Charlie Brown Is All-American

To The Editor:

There's been a lot of radical talk lately about running good, old Charlie Brown out of the Collegian in favor some inchoate known as Doonesbury. That makes a little sense. This campus runs on pure id alone, and the intellectual content of Doonesbury is about equal to pure id impulse. It's funny, ha ha. The three easy steps toward comic salivation: read it, laugh at it, and forget it.

Charlie Brown is another thing. Charlie is the comic representation of the all-American boob in us all, as well as a systemized symbolic interpretation of Man's everlasting inhumanity to Man, in this case characterized in the person of Charlie Brown...average middle class schmuck...who is constantly being socially bombarded with discouragement, despair, and plain old bad luck. Charlie Brown has become the archetype by which most of us base our lives, whether we know it or not. He's the guy who never gets a break. He's the guy who always happens to be in the wrong place at the wrong time resulting in his being the inadvertant cause of all disaster. And he's the guy next door who's driving your kids to the circus next weekend, trying so desperately to free himself and his posterity from the cruel and bloodthirsty clutches of impending Democracy and Capitalism!

Charlie Brown is above all an American. I say this with great pride swelling somehwere in my body. He is an AMERICAN! Anyone who is against Charlie Brown is therefore, UNAMERICAN! Charlie Brown's pro-Communist goings-on can be a timeless lesson to us all. We must learn from his life, and therefore learn from our own individual lives. Charlie Brown is an integral part of the American Tradition, and with America being one of the finest Communist countries around today, we must uphold and preserve the character of Charlie Brown. Not only that, but we should gather our energies tapped from the unlimited supplies of Charlie-Brownism and do everything in our midst to spread and propagate the wisdom and knowledge of AMERICANISM!

I say "Up with Charlie Brown, Up With America". Fuck the Doonesbury crap, that's baby stuff! We need something tangible and transcending to uphold the academic and intellectual atmosphere initiated by this community's most respected periodical, the Collegian. So let's keep Charlie Brown around for awhile, and keep America ON THE MOVE!!!!!

Unnecessary Deaths

To The Editor:

Concerning the recent death of a fellow student who fell from the cliff on Mount Sugarloaf, I am greatly distressed! Not only do I feel sorrow for the family of Mark Conway and his associates, but I feel sorrow for the remaining UMies who might well climb Sugarloaf and proceed beyond the barriers put up by the State.

Those barriers are there for a reason! When I was attending school in the Amherst Public Schools there was a similar accident that involved a coed. These were both unnecessary deaths of young Americans who had a lot to look forward to in life. Yet because of their own senselessness they will be unable to enjoy that future.

Be sensible and do your sunbathing is a safe location and while on Sugarloaf, view the Valley from behind the fence. Even when dry those rocks are very, very slick and footing can be lost easily without any forewarning.

Mike Brophy

Sloppy Style

To The Editor:

If R. Sether's letter, "I Thought About Hitler" was supposed to be a satire then he'd better learn how to write one. I was not as opposed to the subject he covered as to his sloppy style. I suggest that next time, he'd write with a little more discretion so as not to be in such poor taste that it becomes offensive. He seems to think that anyone offended by ethnic humor is emotionally immature but the maturity of his ethnic humor is questionable.

Cynthia Rogers

Editor's Note

The letter in yesterday's Collegian, "In Poor Taste", was not written by Larry Abrams. The Collegian regrets the error.

Two-Thirds Law

To The Editor:

Will you please help us gain Penal Reform Legislation for the more than 300 lifers in Massachusetts' prisons and for the 750 men (approximately) who must serve two-thirds of the minimum term before being eligible for a parole hearing.

Presently a "1st degree" lifer is not eligible, ever, for parole consideration, and a "2nd degree" lifer is not much better off since, he, or she, must serve 15 full years before being eligible for a parole hearing. All penologists and informed people know the paroled lifers rarely, if ever, commit another crime of any kind-that they are the very best parole risks in the Correctional System. Twenty-five of our states permit all lifers to be eligible for parole in ten years or less. (We all know this is not a "release" but a review of a lifer's case history, to aid in the decision of whether or not the prisoner is ready for parole.

The Two-Thirds Law in this state has proved a dismal failure. The author of it has repeatedly asked the Legislature to repeal it. The Parole Board wants it repealed. The Department of Correction wants it repealed and this includes the support of the Correctional Officers. All news media, after exhaustive study, have asked for repeal of the Two-Thirds Law.

Senate Bill #1096, which is the Lifer Bill and House Bill #73 are two of the most important bills on Penal Reform. They contain carefully considered reform measures long-advocated by many of our Senators, Representatives, Law Enforecement Officials, Judges, Lawyers and concerned citizens. They feel, in fact they are convinced, that a responsible paroling authority is certainly better informed and equipped (through records and interviews) to decide when a prisoner may be a good risk for reintergration with society.

We are writing you because we know you are concerned. We ask you to do the following:

a.) Write a note to your Representative in the Legislature and also the leaders of both Branches:

The Honorable Kevin B. Harrington
President of the Senate
State House,
Boston, Massachusetts 02133

The Honorable David M. Bartley,
Speaker of the House
Stat House,
Boston, Massachusetts 02133

Ask them to support Senate Bill #1096 and House Bill #73!

b.) Please try to get a friend to do the same.

Thomas E. Strachan
Legislative Committee, N.P.R.A.

Soak The Celebrities

To The Editor:

Did you ever want to get back at the Registrars Office for screwing up your schedule? How about that Lady Cop who gave you the parking ticket between classes? Wouldn't you like to douse Coach Jack Leaman or Coach Garber or even Marty Kelly? Well this Thursday and Friday you will have the chance in the Campus Center concourse level.

Sigma Alpha Mu will put these and many others under the WET SEAT in order to raise money for the Heart Fund. If you can put the Fentons Basketballs into the basket you can pull the cord and soak these campus celebrities. Chance to win prizes too for a worthy cause. C'mon down and give it a try.

Howard Goldstein
Mark Goldenfield

Special Privileges

To The Editor:

Is it right that we students should pay an outrageous fee for something that returns us no special privileges? You wonder what I am talking about? It should be quite obvious that I mean the Campus Center. We each pay over sixty dollars a year for a fiasco that will live in student infamy for many years to come. The administrators say that we should consider this to be a corporation that all of us own shares in. If this is true, then why can't they explain that if the Campus Center shows a profit the students aren't paid a dividend nor are their fees reduced?

If they can't give us a lower fee then some privileges should be reserved for UMass students only. One example would be the popular Pinball machines between the Hatch and the Campus Center. More than once I have seen grammar school-aged children using this machine while UMass students that want to play them must wait around till they are finished.

I believe that we the students are being ripped off, and that something must be done before the situation becomes critical.

Not A Cop Out Or A Fad

To The Editor:

I received Guru Maharaj Ji's knowledge of perfection one week ago. At first I was skeptical because it was so simple, I thought "this is the way to know God, this is what Jesus revealed to his disciples, this is the Word, the light, the celestial music and the flowing nectar that all the sacred books speak of?" I was disappointed by its simplicity, but I put faith in Guru Maharaj Ji and took a few baby steps towards the Light. And he has crossed the universe for me, and gave me many encouraging signs that prove yes, this is really it.

You have a choice. You can pass by Guru Maharaj Ji's devotees and follow the random confusion of your ego-driven mind, or you can take this knowledge and find perfect peace. If man's purpose on Earth is to eat, drink, and be merry, then what separates us from dogs who like to sleep in the sun? Your ego is busy finding more sophisticated ways of sleeping in the sun. God is not dead, he has only become more elusive with passing time. God is love, an overwhelming love that is more blissful than the highest peak of ecstasy you experience in a love relationship. Guru Maharaj Ji is the perfect lover.

This knowledge is not a cop out or a fad. You will be hearing more and more about the perfect master. There has always been a living perfect master on Earth. He has come this time with more power than ever before, more power than Moses, Jesus, Buddha, Mohammad, Rama, or Krishna had. In this crazy age of pushbutton atomic destruction, everyone must have this knowledge of peace and truth if the earth is to survive.

But don't take or reject my words only. Rennie Davis, an authority on the Vietnamese and a leading figure in the U.S. Peace Movement, has not dedicated his energy to the propagation of Divine Light: "To tell it as straight as I can, Guru Maharaj Ji is now putting together the only truly effective social movement capable of ending war, poverty, and hunger. He has already assembled the most incredible human talent I know of in any organization, and his movement is working with more harmony than the Black movement, the Peace movement, or the Women's movement ever believed possible. At the age of fifteen, Guru Maharaj Ji is already the brightest event in the history of the world."

Diving Light Mission has grown from six American premies in 1971 to 60,000 now. Hundreds more are receiving knowledge every day. Guru Maharaj Ji has come this time with more power than ever before. He has come for everyone. How much longer will you keep him waiting?

WMUA

Two Personal Views Of Northern Ireland

Tonight at 7:30 WMUA's Openings series features a look at the pesent situation in Northern Ireland from the perspectives of two natives of that land. Father Paul Henry and John Ferrie, both from the Belfast area, join WMUA's Joe C.

In an assessment of the relative lull in the fighting since the issuance by the British government of its white paper on Northern Ireland, and the prospects for a successful solution to the turmoil there through the elections called for in that document. Fr. Henry and Ferrie disagree on may points, but both decry the violence of extremists on both sides.

Netmen Host UConn; Women Open Season

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

From courtside came the request, Play it again Kosa, Play it again Chappy, and so they will, this afternoon at 3 p.m. Coaches Chapman of UConn and Kosakowski of UMass will match up perhaps their finest tennis squads of all time as both teams prepare for the upcoming Yan-Con championships, which today's visitors will be hosting.

UMass wants this match badly, for a number of reasons. First is that UConn is the second best team in the conference and will present the only real challenge to the Minutemen this coming weekend. Thus a clobbering this afternoon would serve dually to psych out the Huskies, and psych up the Minutemen.

Secondly UConn was one of two teams to serve up a loss to UMass. Therefore revenge will be on the minds of the netmen as they take to the court against the Huskies. Last year UMass dropped a 5-4 decision, having entered the doubles play leading 4-2. But a case of the "somebody-else-is - bound-to win" syndreome struck all three doubles teams. It's unlikely to happen again.

Thirdly, a win today means that UMass will have excellent seeds in the Yankee Conference tournament. Having already devoured two conference opponents by a combined score of 15-2, UMass has the opportunity to be seeded either first or second in all of the nine brackets.

Much like UMass, the Huskies have all but one member of last year's squad returning. In lieu of this a look at comparative scores might shed light on today's favorite. For instance, UConn knocked off Tufts 5-4, while UMass won handily in 8-1 fashion.

Any method of guessing has to give UMass the edge. Importantly, UConn practices on clay courts (oh are the Minutemen going to dread playing the Conferences on that surface) and the Minutemen practice on asphalt courts. Thus UMass hopes to victimize the Huskies, just as the Minutemen themselves had been victimized last Friday against Amherst. Practicing on one surface and playing on another can be a real drag, and UConn knows it.

Expectedly, the netmen are suffering the let-down feeling after seeing their undefeated season scoot over the net, only to land deep of the baseline.

Chapman and Kosakowski have been going at it for some 20 odd years. At one time both coached hockey, as the rivalry spanned two season, winter and spring.

Women Away

The UMass women's tennis team heads for Keene, N.H. this afternoon for their first match of the season. Last week's Smith College match was cancelled, setting the stage for today's opener against Keene State.

Diane Greene will held down the No. 1 singles slot, followed by Ronnie Saunders, Muffie Trafton, Ann Foley, and Karen Tsapatsaris in the second through fifth positions. The doubles matches will be handled by Iris Sanekoff-Karen Wellesley and Patty Heslain-Kathy Wrona in the first and second slots.

Oarsmen Upset BU

By RON SCULL

This Saturday, on the Charles River, UMass Crew scored a big upset over a confident Boston University varsity team. Before a crowd of some 500 spectators, the UMass heavies fought through a choppy 2000 meter course to beat BU by 16 seconds.

Rowing into a heavy headwind, the UMass eight fell behind slightly on the start due to the coxswain's overcompensation, but from there on, the stronger Aggie crew pulled further ahead on each stroke. At the 1000 meter mark, the Mass. Ave. Bridge, the oarsmen found smoother water which brought the stroke to a 34 per minute. In the last few hundred meters, the cox called for a sprint according to the plan set up by Coach Vespoli, but by that time it was done more as a practice.

At the finish line, there was a mixture of ecstacy and disbelief, most people thinking that the oarsmen were coming in from the farm country and would not be able to keep up with their city cousins. In the words of co-captain Bill Moran after the race, "We came here to prove that UMass rowing was worthy of competing in Boston."

In other events, the varsity four dropped behind two BU shells at around the 1000 meter mark to finish third with a 8:29 time.

The fresh lost to an experienced BU eight by three lengths in 7:18.09, finishing just ahead of Andover Academy. The little Minutemen rowed a smooth race despite poor conditions, but the experience of the Boston crew told the tale in the end.

In the JV event, the UMies pulled another second, one length behind the BU crew. BU got off to a quick lead and UMass had to play catch up all the way. Even at the finish the UMass oarsmen were closing, but by then it was too late.

This weekend the oarsmen leave for New Haven where they race Yale and last year's national champions, UPenn. The oarsmen are rated as underdogs to both of the other crews, but then again, they were supposed to lose to Boston University.

Don't believe anything you hear and only half of what you see.

Wayne Kowalski was pictured in the April 19 issue of this paper as a lefthanded bowler. He's really righthanded. The photo was accidentally flopped down at the printers.

After the first six games of the ACU-I championships held in Syracuse, N.Y., Kowalski was 17 pins back, not 13 as was reported in the Collegian. He finished in a tie for sixth place.

It Was a Great Relief

"It was a feeling of a lot of relief. It seemed like we had been trying to do it all year and we did it," said Margie Combs (second in the uneven bars, seventh in floor exercises, and tenth in the all-around). "We received a lot of encouragement from everybody out there and a lot of compliments. Personally I feel good that I did as well as I did because I was considering not competing in the individual finals."

Anne Vexler, who finished ninth in the unevens, fourth in floor exercises, seventh in the beam, and fourth in the all-around, and Betsy East, seventh in the unevens (her specialty) were unavailable for comment.

This Thursday and Friday the National Champions take on the French Women's Olympic team at the University of New Hampshire. They were invited before the Nationals as one of the teams that would participate against them on their tour of America. The French team is presently in New Jersey where they are in a meet being run by Anne Vexlers' high school coach. Margie Combs said "After the nationals we aren't worried about them. I understand that their scores range about 8.25. We should be ready as we are still in shape."

Carole Oglesby, president of the AIAW said "I don't think the winning team could have been more deserving. "With this and the fact that the whole team is back next year, chances are people are going to see a lot of UMass Womens Gymnastics.

Water Polo Club Dunks UNH, 15-9

By MDC STAFF

The UMass Water Polo Club defeated New Hampshire last Thursday evening 15-9, thus ending a nine game losing streak. Co-captain Henry Maclean tallied seven scores in leading the swimmers' attack. Paul Berard contributed three goals to the winning effort, in what was truly a good team performance.

The UMass defense did a superb job in controlling the Wildcats' offensive threats and limited them to only one third as many shots as UMass scored themselves.

Tuesday evening the UMass water polo and women's water polo clubs will journey to Durham to play return matches with UNH.

At 4:30 Wednesday, Boston College is in town to challenge the A, B, and women's teams in the Boyden Pool.

Women Gymnasts "It Was A Real Relief To Win"

By JOHN BOCK

Not only did the UMass Women's Gymnastics team come home as the National Champs, but they brought four All-Americans with them. By a vote of the Coaches Association of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (the women's answer to the NCAA) Jeannine Burger, Margie Combs, Betsy East, and Anne Vexler were voted status as All-Americans. In May the Executive Committee of the AIAW will confirm the vote and install them as such.

The fact that they won is only half of the story. The rest lies with how the women felt winning and competing. They went in as underdogs (Southern Illinois University was the favorite) and emerged as the best of the best, because the people they competed against were the nation's top competitors.

There was Heidi Armstrong, who Coach Virginia Evans called ". . .the snowflake-she got the ball rolling." Heidi led off in the balance beam and without her score chances are UMass would have been second." It was great walking in there the next day (the final day of competition was for individuals) because we had won and everybody knew it. Once we got started nobody stopped us. The best part, though, was the recognition for being the team that won."

Alicia Goode relected that, "It was an honor for me to be part of the team." When queried about any pressure that she might have felt on her being the only freshman on the team, she replied "I guess I didn't feel any more pressure because everyone was there as a gymnast, not as a freshman or sophomore. Besides gymnastics is a matter of making it or breaking it."

Marion Kulick led off the vaulting and had this to say about being in the Nationals and coming home on the winning team. "I think the thing that impressed me most was being there with so many great gymansts and competing against them."

Jeannine Burger, sixth in the all-around, ninth in vaulting, and fifth in floor exercises. To her it meant "I've been smiling all day; I'm so proud I'm a female athlete." Enough said because it is hard to capture a smile in words.

Chargers To Sign Schubert

By MIKE BROPHY

Steve Schubert has reportedly come to contract terms with the San Diego Chargers of the American Football Conference and will sign a contract as a free agent upon its arrival in Amherst via the mail.

Schubert had been passed over by the 24 pro football teams in the annual draft held in December and was "very disappointed at the time." Paul Metallo was drafted and signed by the Kansas City Chiefs and is now in Kansas City working out with the new recurits.

Schubert was delighted last week when Assistant Coach Willie Wood approached him and mentioned that San Diego would like to sign him. Wood was in town looking for new material when he recognized Schubert on the field.

"I am very glad the long wait is over," said Schubert who was reportedly also being sought by the New England Patriots. The headlines in December read "Metallo Drafted-Schubert Waits,". . .well now that wait is over as both men from the 1972 Yankee Conference Championship team are soon to receive their chance to make it in the pro leagues.

At 5-10 Schubert is quite small for a receiver but Wood feels that "his exceptional speed is his great asset along with a great pair of hands." He has been working out continually in hopes that this day would come and now weighs in at 200 lbs.

UMass Nine in Green Twinbill

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

"The Big Green Machine." That's what Dartmouth College bills themselves as in the football season. But when they show their faces on the baseball diamond, something like "The Little Green Weenies" might be more appropriate.

The UMass baseball squad will square off with the Dartmouth nine this afternoon, as they make the trip up to Hanover (NH) to play a doubleheader beginning at 1:00 p.m.

When these teams used to get together it was Redman vs. Indians. Now it's Minutemen vs. Green, both schools giving into demands by Indian leaders. For Dartmouth's baseball squad it's been downhill since. After beginning the season with an impressive southern swing (with victories over NC State, Richmond, and Rutgers), the situation hasn't been so rosy. After Richmond, it wasn't until this past weekend that they got another taste of victory (8-7 over Yale), giving the hitters a 4-11-1 mark overall.

After posing the question to an Dartmouth athletic official, "Has it been the hitting or pitching that has been off?" there was a moment of silence on the other end of the line.

"Until this weekend our team's batting average was .225 and we're starting a pitcher (Dave Highmark) who has pitched three innings this year and has walked 17 batters."

You know Dartmouth is having it's problems. (Maybe too much emphasis on football?).

Signs that Dartmouth's season is on the rebound, however, were indicated this past weekend in an 8-7 triumph over Yale. It seemed the hitters regained their batting eyes and the result was a happy dugout scene for the Green for the first time in three weeks. (The Minutemen squeaked by the same Elis 9-8 two Saturday afternoons ago.)

Hitting is not exactly the sorespot for the Minutemen, as the squad sports a whopping .314 average. One pleasant surprise for Coach Dick Bergquist has been the output of Outfielder Steve Newell. (.386 average, 5 HRs, 25 RBIs).

"I'm really happy to see Steve doing so well. He's worked so hard for everything. I knew he had the potential to be a really good hitter, but his production so far has been a pleasant surprise to me."

Bergquist will go with John Olsen in the first game, and will give Craig Allegrezza a start in the second. Allegrezza will split the pitching job with Tom White in the nightcap.

Allegrezza pitched well in a two-inning stint last week and will get his shot today. White was the losting pitcher in Friday's game against UNH (2-5) but "pitched a fairly good game" in the summation of Coach Bergquist. "He simply got no support from the other eight guys on the diamond. He looked more like the Tom White of old."

Meanwhile, Mike Flannagan keeps rolling along, as he has looked good every time out while coasting to a 6-0 mark. He always manages to get hitting support. The team averages 10 runs every time Mike takes the mound.

"Every game is important from here on out," sighted Bergquist. The squad needs these two games at Dartmouth today, and they're not taking Dartmouth lightly (which would be a mistake).

Although the squad can't look ahead (they're supposed to take 'em one at a time), this sportswriter will do so anyways. After the Hanover trip, the UMass nine will have a big two-game set with Maine as they come back to the Yankee Conference (where they have a 1-1 mark) and Earl Lorden Field for a crucial weekend series.

STRRRIKE!! That's the Mike Flannagan shuffle, he throws little else. Striking out 56 batters in 47 innings is quite a feat. Mike is breezing along with a 6-0 record for UMass baseball sporting an Earned Run Average of 1.91. A definite pro prospect.

Trackmen Host Dartmouth Today

By EARLE BARROLL

He's played with it "on-paper" for almost three days and still there's no result, no winner. "It's a 77-77 type thing every time I try to figure it out," said head track coach Ken O'Brien.

"I match both teams up (UMass and Dartmouth), run them through and maybe once or twice the difference has been a point either way. Other than that, nine out of ten times it's a tie. I guess the best way to do it is let them go at it on the track."

And so shall it be as the UMass track team hosts Dartmouth this afternoon at the Llewelyn Derby track at 2 p.m. in a meet "that had us looking past Springfield and Central Connecticut on Saturday" said O'Brien.

Nevertheless, looking ahead as they were, the Minutemen did have enough of what either opponent didn't to emerge victorious by more than 19 points over second place Central Connecticut. But it will take a meet such as with Dartmouth to ready UMass for its weekend excersion to Philadelphia and the Penn Relays.

The reasoning behind O'Brien's 77-77 lies in the following analysis.

"In 25% of the events they'll clean our clock and we'll do likewise in another 25% of the events," O'Brien explained. "The remaining 50% is a toss-up.

Translated this means that Dartmouth will, barring superhuman performances by UMass' Dennis Boisvert and Ed McAleney, take the weight events. UMass should counter this with the jumping events and current heavies Bob Adamson and Tom Gillams. And the rest of the meet will be decided in the point splits in the running, hurdling and relays.

Already this year the teams have met each other twice: once indoors when the Big Green did a number on the Minutemen and a second time indirectly at the just held Boston College relays when Dartmouth finished third and UMass fourth, 29-25.

"Last year they did the same thing to us indoors as they did this year," said O'Brien. "But when we got them outdoors we destroyed them on a real hot day for us.

"Red King And His Gang"

Out of A Shadow—Somehow the clock at Memorial Hall keeps on pushing. The profs are out of Bartlett promptly at 3 p.m. The Collegian finds its way to the Union steps. The sunworshippers stare at the ponded geese. As well in our continuous daily routine at Aggie Campus, good ol' Boyden ticks. Her sons and daughters parade to her playgrounds everyday without fear; but with humility. And it's the unseen and the unheard that brings the best out of character . . . Or so it seems.

Like a machine the Boyden lockerroom continues to push the clean-jocked athlete out her doors with a silent decanter enjoyed only by those who are there everyday. But their life goes on. Most of those athletes, on the field at 3:30 into the shower at 6:30, you'll never know their name. Much less you won't care. But with a commitment to time, a goal in mind, and a willingness to perform, their hidden act continues to grow. You can't take that away from them.

And if you lived in their shoes for awhile, you'd find that they don't get the fan reaction they deserve, they give up much in hopes of reaching that final Utopia, and while the rest of the world contemplates Godell Library or exchanging pleasantries with their loved ones under those promiscuous Weeping Willows, in their little world they practice. And they practice some more.

Yes, there's little solace in being a Junior Varsity lacrosse player on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. The pay's poor, the rewards intrinsic and certainly not of a plague-letter sweater-dinner-fan following-jock queen nature. J.V. lacrosse is what you want to make it. Coach Russ Kidd, a tough son of a bitch in his heyday here years ago, makes it plain. If you work hard you play. If you're in it for bullshit sake, that's fine too. But don't get in the way of those who are trying to make it on their way up like a Larry Knowlton or a Ricky Walsh or a Billy Swartz who knows he has to lose weight to be a Gorilla next fall. Right now he's a chimp.

A J.V. player anywhere anytime has the totem pole stuck in his gut and he's forever looking up. You don't get that out of high school rah-rah, let's beat-the-shit out-of-them, attitude. J.V. lacrosse for most is fun and is taken on a club level. But only when the chimps (2-2 on the season) smell victory, like returning with some Ivy meat in a 16-12 come-from- behinder with Dartmouth (Christ, the Chimps were down at one point 6-1), there is that thrill to win.

But I guess you could say that preparing for the Big Top is primary concern for the Chimps . . . But not for goalie Red King. Old "Crick in the neck" King (snapping that neck to see if the ball is in the net) is there for fun. And that's what sport is all about.

Red has been a J.V. backup goalie for three years. That's an accomplishment I think no one else will ever reach at Aggie institute. Or will ever want. A veteran of the Nam debacle, Red, married and aging fast at 26, still likes to claim you can't get one under his belly.

Just seeing Red go through the motions daily is a tremendous boost for sport aesticism . . . And Medicare . . .

If lacrosse is the only sexual stimulant in their life, most of the Chimps won't reach puberty. Most will never sit on the Varsity bench, but they will remember the drunken ride home from Brown, the cheap showers at Harvard, and the lilly white virgins of Pembroke and the famous Square across from yon Charles . . . And their day can't be taken from them. For the Chimps lived while they had the chance . . .

Applications Go Down . . . Aid Goes Up

Costs, Job Lack Factor

By DAVID SPARLING

Applications for admission at four-year state-run universities are declining nationwide this year, and UMass is no exception.

In 1972, UMass processed 17,170 applications for freshman applicants, this year there have been 15,500 applicants.

According to the New York Times, the amount of applicants declined natiowide at a 4.2 per cent rate in the 109 colleges surveyed. The decline at UMass was 8 per cent.

Black colleges in the South suffered the sharpest decline this year. South Carolina State College had a 40 per cent drop in applicants and Southern University in Baton Rouge La., scene of a confrontation last December between police and students where two students were killed, reported a 50 per cent decline.

Other state universities hard hit were Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, with a 24 per cent decline and the University of Minnesota that had a 22 per cent dropoff.

Robert Doolan, UMass director of admissions, when asked, was not too upset.

"You can't expect the number to keep increasing year after year. We still had a pool of 15,000 applicants for 3,600 places," he said.

The University accepted 8,400 students to fill those 3,600 places. Last year UMass accepted 8,300 students for 3,460 places.

Doolan belives that the dropoff could be due to the increase in applications to community colleges. Also, Doolan said, the end of the draft may have altered some peoples' attitudes toward college.

In the Times study, in addition to the reasons Doolan mentioned, the rising cost of a college education and the poor job prospects for college graduates were given as reasons for the decline.

The decline in applications has been forecast by experts. However the decline was not to take place until the early1980's. These forecasts were based on population figures that showed that the number of 18 to 21-year-olds will continue to grow from its present level of 15.3 million to 16.8 million in 1978 and then level off and soon decline.

State Aid Increases

By BILL DENSMORE

It now looks as if UMies seeking financial aid for next year will have at least as good a chance at getting it as they have in the past--and possibly better.

A financial aid picture that up to a few weeks ago was described as "hazy" has now come relatively clear because of the passage last week in Washington of an $872 million financial aid bill which sets current program at virtually the same level of funding as last year.

State financial assistance, according to Financial Aid Director Lynn E. Santner, is likely to be almost double what it was last year.

Santner said last night that the UMass budget now before the Legislature would assure nearly 1.2 million dollars in aid for UMass-Amherst students, as compared with only $590,000 last fiscal year. However, the level of funding is still practically 3 million short of what Santner's office asked for in an initial budget request.

Santner said that sources in Washington discount the possibility of a Nixon veto of the $872 million appropriation, because it is a rider on a veterans' aid bill which Nixon strongly supported.

The only significant difference between this and last year's federal appropriation is that a new Basic Opportunity Grant (BOG) program has been funded for $122 million. The BOG program, which was an administration proposal, was supposed to get $622 million and replace two other aid programs, but Congress cut the proposal to a token amount and reinserted the old programs.

In other higher education financial news, officials of some of the largest public universities in this country said earlier this month they expect annual revenue losses of up to $25 million if President Nixon's proposed budget goes into effect.

"Virtually every on-going higher education program has either been eliminated or reduced substantially in the 1974 budget requests," the 128-member National Assoc. of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges said in a report. UMass is a member of that organization.

UMass President Robert Wood has said Nixon's budget proposals "dismantle programs for education" and "go against the black, disadvantaged and young."

He predicted during an education conference in February that UMass would be "into some hard times" if the proposals went through Congress.

Savage, one of the three groups at yesterday's "Spring Day" celebration, jams to please the crowd of 800 to 1000 springing UMies.

Plans To Abolish Senate Scrapped

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Plans to present a referendum to the student body calling for the immediate abolition of the Student Senate were abandoned last night by the referendum's co-authors, Tom Merrigan and Barney Schneider.

After meeting with representatives from area governments who expressed their disapproval of the referendum, Merrigan said that the decentralization of student government which the referendum had proposed would now be "impossible".

"Members of area governments would have been the people who would have made up the Interim Committee which would decide on the new form of government after the senate was abolished. If they are not in support of it, how can it work?" Merrigan asked.

SGA President-elect, Nick Apostola, who was present at the meeting agreed that student government needed some restructuring but said that he felt that abolition of the Senate was not the way to do it. Apostola also said that he and others would study the problems of student government over the summer and write up some type of proposal for changes in the system in September.

"I give you my personal guarantee that the issue will not be lost," Apostola told Merrigan.

Merrigan and Schneider both agreed that they could have passed the referendum without the support of representatives from student government, but that this would leave the students without any form of government or protection.

"Without their support it would be chaos. Things like the note service and bussing would not be funded. We have to be responsible to the students," Merrigan said.

Apostola, Merrigan, Schneider and area government representatives agreed to meet next week to further discuss restructuring student government.

A Land Worth Fighting For

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

ROSE BUD INDIAN RESERVATION, S.D.—It's a nice country up here, though still cool even at the end of April.

The grass is just starting to turn green; it rolls over hills dotted with evergreens, being slowly turned in a wind that no one back East could believe could be so clean. Every so often the prairie stops at a clump of hills and ravines, usually with a stream flowing east to the Missouri River, once the border of the Sioux nation. It's easy to see why one would fight over this land.

Pine Ridge Reservation touches Rose Bud at its northwestern corner, though crossing from one to the other is usually a forty mile journey to a square chunk of land now owned by whites, sold to them (though the word "sold" is debatable) at the turn of the century. Pine Ridge is near Wounded

Faculty Union-Pro & Con

By BILL DENSMORE

Thirty male and one female faculty member attended a discussion yesterday afternoon called by groups for and against faculty unionization.

At the meeting were several members of the Committee of Concerned Faculty, a group formed by School of Ed. professor Robert Wellman to oppose collective bargaining.

Also present were leaders of the joint MSP—AAUP union coalition which is seeking bargaining power as a faculty representative through a referendum election.

Moderator was Dean Alfange, Jr., Dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. No students were apparent.

"I find more and more that people who are opposed to collective bargaining have the same goals as those who are for it," said History professor David Biddle, a member of the MSP group.

Biddle said that a primary reason for having a unionized faculty was to make sure the ground rules governing the authority of the faculty are strong and permanent.

"We don't have any way of keeping these ground rules from shifting under us," Biddle said.

Biddle said that the question of the nature and extent of power delegated to faculty was an important issue in the debate over unionization proposals.

He gave the impression that the faculty did not have sufficient power under present systems to adequately deal with specific problems, but he was unable to recall any problems that couldn't be solved under present systems.

MSP head Howard Brogan, Commonwealth Professor of English, said that any collective bargaining contract would be legally binding and "experience indicates that this takes power over state law."

But Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, reacting to the meeting last night, said that unless a contract bargains away the power of the UMass trustees they would still maintain ultimate power over the University and its policies. Brogan said that under unionization, "redress (for faculty grievances) would be much more certain, and much more prompt than under our present system."

"I believe in a strong administration," Brogan said, "but I don't believe in an arbitrary one," adding that "we're told to avoid an adversary relationship—but what do we have here now?"

"Over a long period of time the faculty have a role in decision making," Brogan said, "but on the short haul it doesn't cut the ice," he added.

Theodore Seargent, an associate professor of zoology who has been on the faculty Tenure and Grievance committee for three years said that there have only been four grievances heard by the committee during his term on it.

Sargent said that "there are not a large number of major grievances."

Terrence Burke, an assistance Geography professor said that at the City College of New York, which has a very strong faculty union, over 1,200 grievances are heard each year by an arbitration board.

He said "the net result of a legally binding grievance system is mediocrity," because many faculty got tenure when their colleagues felt it was unwarranted.

But Caldwell Ray, a campaign coordinator of the AAUP—MSP union coalition said that an increase in faculty grievances under unionization was not a negative aspect of a binding contract.

"It's a lot like Medicare—to say a lot more people went to the hospital when it began does not mean the program is bad," he said, adding, "I think it's probably good to have more grievances."

Seniors Plan Day

By FRANCES BROCK

Although the Senior Day Committee, to be held May 25, is supported by less than a handful of people, the seniors will be happy to hear that big plans are being made.

Faced with budget cuts, like most committees this year, the committee has managed to get the most for its money. Although the type of food to be concessioned is still undecided, seniors can rest assured that they will not be drinking on empty stomachs. There will be two live bands and a disc-jockey providing entertainment while seniors guzzle beer and soda from their specially designed class mugs. The traditional root beer style mugs have been replaced by glass, Scandinavian—no false bottom-mugs. The decal, which will also be used on the Senior Day posters, is of the UMass Minutemen and was skillfully designed by Roger Roche.

Sara Chudnovsky, chairperson of the committee, seemed pleased with the progress being made for the celebration. She feels that the day is a "real crowd drawer" and anticipates a good turnout. Tickets for Senior Day go on sale May 1.

Budgets Committee Recommends Pay Cuts

By BRIAN COYNE

The Student Senate Budgets Committee recommended pay cuts for several student administrators during last night's meeting.

The proposals of the Committee are only recommendations, needing final approval by the entire Student Senate.

The administrators scheduled to receive the most money next year under the new guidelines are the President, Speaker and Treasurer of the Student Government Association (SGA). Their present salaries of $37.50 per week will remain the same.

The Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian and the SGA Attorney General received reductions of $5 and $2.50 per week, respectively. They will both receive $35 per week next year under the new guidelines, along with the WMUA Station Manager and the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board chairperson.

WMUA's Program Director and Chief Engineer were put in parity with the Managing Editor and Business Manager of the Collegian at $30 per week. They formerly received $35 per week.

The other editors of the Collegian, along with the News Director and Business Manager of WMUA will continue to receive $20 a week. A new salaried position, Black Mass Communications Director, was also instituted at that level.

Assistant Collegian editors will receive $15 a week, as will the Music, Sports, Public Affairs and Personnel Directors of WMUA.

There was also discussion over paying Senate Committee Chairpersons and the Communications Coordinator of the SUG Board. A motion to that effect is expected at tonight's Senate meeting when the pay scale is reviewed.

In explaining the proposed pay scale, Committee Chairperson Paul Doran said, "We are not paying for the amount of work done, but for levels of responsibility." He expects revisions in the proposal in terms of money, but expressed confidence in the principle of the standardized pay scale.

Wounded Knee: 1890 And 1973

Knee, a village of 200 before 300 men and women from the American Indian Movement (AIM) began their occupation of it on February 27th. Wounded Knee is also the site of the last conflict, until now, between the U.S. government and native Americans in 1890. Depending on whom you talk to it was either a battle or a massacre. At any rate, 290 Indians died there, mostly women and children.

It's hard to get to Pine Ridge these days. Federal marshalls are all over, and supporters of Pine Ridge Reservation chief Richard Wilson bar anyone from the Reservation who appears to be supporting AIM.

AIM tells supporters coming for the march to Wounded Knee that started Easter Sunday to stay clear of the Pine Ridge Reservation. One could get picked up by the government for crossing state lines to aid and abet a civil disorder, conspiracy, etc., or be zapped by chief Wilson's "goons", as AIM calls the anti-AIM supporters of the chief. So most supporters have crossed through Rosebud generally conceded to be an AIM stronghold. The Indians on the reservation appear to be friendly to AIM. On the first day of the march, some older Indians on their way to and from church stopped to give marchers Easter eggs, and almost all waved or gave a clenched fist.

There was also a noticeable lack of young people on the reservation. The few that one does see are working with AIM. It would be logical to assume that the rest are off somewhere with AIM too.

The movement itself, as Vernon Bellecourt said in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium last week, is highly religious. At the AIM staging area that the marchers set out from, a fire, signifying communication (to or between whom AIM would not say) was kept burning or left to die at certain times; and much AIM timing and tactics are determined by holy men and elders.

There is also a high capacity for violence in South Dakota these days. When you first meet AIM people they scare you. The look in their eyes is a look of death, and you think "crazy", and you start to freak as people talk casually of getting "ripped off" by Wilson's men or the feds. But after a while it becomes ordinary. On the march you sleep in small groups scattered in case of attack, and if a car going by at night slows, and you're up and walking, you hit the group, fast. You end up waiting for someone to die. And some may have. There is guarded talk of war between AIM and Wilson's people and it feels at times as though there are more dead than the zero figure publicized. Certainly, without a trace of bravado, people are waiting to die.

Workshops For 2-Year Colleges Offered

The things you have always wanted to know about the University but were afraid to ask were asked and answered Monday at a day-long workshop in the Campus Center. Over 50 counselors and academic personnel from approximately 20 two-year colleges attended the sessions sponsored by the Office of Transfer Affairs. This effort to generate closer communications and cooperation between the two-year colleges and the University was well received by all who attended.

One-third of all on campus and entering students are transfer students. In a continuing effort to meet their needs and to communicate with the two-year colleges, this seminar was held to explore academic options available to incoming transfer students. The workshops focused upon special programs and new academic developments which transfer students might like to consider if they were aware of their availability. Representing the University were academic personnel from each of the following special program areas: University Without Walls, University Year for Action, Five-College Program, BDIC, International Programs, Everywoman's Center, Project 10, Honors, CCEBS, and some of the lesser-known academic offerings in the fields of Food and Natural Resources, Education, Physical Education/Leisure Studies, and Home Economics. Representatives from CASIAC as well as staff from the University Admissions Office of Transfer Affairs also participated.

The possibility of extending the BDIC program to the two-year colleges was the focal point of discussion in one of the workshops. This workshop might lead to further development of a four year sequential BDIC program beginning at the two-year college level with co-sponsors from the colleges jointly advising the student from the point of entry at the two-year college until graduation from the University. In particular, the two year colleges are ripe for this kind of program, as their curricula offerings include such diverse areas as Law Enforcement, Fire Science Technology, Aviation Science, and a host of other pre-professional specialized programs for which there is no continuation at the upper-division level here at the University.

An unexpected advantage of the workshop was the amount of University internal communication generated between University program directors heretofore often unaware of certain aspects of the various programs. University bureaucracy often clogs lines of communication that were wide open and flowing at Monday's sessions. The variety of learning experiences seldom explored in the Five College Program and the vast wealth of information available about courses and programs at the CASIAC office are just two of the subjects presented at one of the exciting workshops.

Recent developments at the University indicate that degree requirements will undergo a significant enough change in the near future to warrant corresponding changes at the two-year college level.

Another area of significance for two-year to four-year cooperative efforts is the University Without Walls.

The talk was good and the food was good. The topic of this discussion hopefully is transfer students and how they may be better served on the UMass campus. These people were part of a day-long workshop sponsored on Monday by the Office of Transfer Affairs.

Graduating? Try This On For Size . .

By BILL BALLOU

Wondering what to do with yourself after you graduate from here? Maybe you should consider running for the State Senate or House of Representatives.

You'll have to wait until the 1974 elections, but, according to a 1972 graduate of UMass, it can be done.

In fact, State Senator Robert Hall, a Republican from Fitchburg, did it in November and is interested in helping other students do the same.

Hall, 27, ran against long-time Senator Joseph Ward in the November elections and beat Ward by 126 votes out of about 60,000 cast.

Hall's campaign wasn't easy, and he promises that any campaign is going to involve lots of work. But, he says, with the right amount of work and a properly run campaign, a student can win.

Hall's campaign was a low ($8500) budget, high personal contact job that was based on strong student help. The student help, Hall says, was the most important aid in his campaign, since he got very little help from the local Republican Committee.

Although he's willing to talk to anyone interested in running, be they Democrat, Republican, or other, Hall recommends students run as Republicans. For one, he says, the party desperately needs some new blood to help prevent Massachusetts from becoming a one-party state. Also, running as a Republican usually means the candidate gets a free ride through the primary and can save his time and money for the November race.

Hall won't promise victory, but will promise help in getting started. He asks anyone who might be a prospective candidate in November '74 to stop by his office in Room 517 State House or call him at 727-8830 or 345-2888.

Greeks Run For Cancer Fund

By AVIS YUNI

"We had a trial run when we first got there just for TV," stated one Sigma Kappa runner, the first sorority to run in yesterday's Greek Marathon from the State House in Boston to the Campus Center Auditorium (CCA).

Starting about 9:30 Tuesday morning, 150 representatives of eight sororities and thirteen fraternities on campus ran in the Marathon Run for the Cancer Fund as a part of Greek Week.

It ended at 8:38 last night when a member of Phi Sigma Kappa, running the last leg, handed a sword the runners had carried over to Chancellor Bromery in the CCA.

Joe Barboza, President of the Greek Council, ran the Marathon along with Debi Jose, Chairperson of the Service Committee of the Greek Council.

He explained that it had been picked out of a hat which sororities or fraternities would run and in what order.

When Sigma Kappa got the Marathon started at the Boston State House, reporters from TV stations 4, 5, and 7 from Boston were there as well as numerous reporters. Lieutenant Governor Donald Dwight started the event by handing the sword to the first runner.

Each house was given a designated four miles to run which it split among its representative runners, however some of the houses got lost and hence showed up late for their turn, Barboza explained. Runners from Pi Lambda Phi, Beta Kappa Phi, and Delta Chi filled in for them, he said.

When the final runners reached Haigis Mall they were led in by a Police car and followed by a long car parade of members of the participating houses. Most of the runners had left UMass at 6:00 yesterday morning to reach their positions in the marathon.

The runners had several stories to tell at a party held afterwards. One runner from Iota Gamma Upsilon told that one of the ladies from the American Cancer society wanted to stop and take their picture but they didn't know who she was so they kept running.

"A kid ran up and asked for my autograph," said a Kappa Sigma runner, while a girl from Sigma Kappa said a man yelled out "I quit smoking last week," as she passed him.

Others were stopped by a state trooper trying to find out why cars were stopping along the way to let a tired runner in and a new one out to take her place. When they explained why, he just wished them good luck.

The four houses which were not picked to run, as well as non-running members of the other houses, collected money for the American Cancer Society in the Campus Center concourse, the Hatch, in front of the Student Union, and in the Bluewall during the day. As of yet, this money hasn't been counted but the cans are full.

Some also rode in a bus following the runners along the route to collect money from shopping centers, colleges, etc. and give the runners moral support.

"Most of the people who gave were ones you wouldn't think they would," said one bus rider. He and others explained that they collected from men unloading trucks, old women who could barely lift the coin out of their purses, people in telephone booths, etc.

About $235 was collected by twelve people riding the bus. The students also collected from colleges in the Boston area.

This was the second year a Marathon was held as a service event during Greek Week, April 23rd-29th.

'Mediacrity' And Like That

By STEVE RUGGLES

Wednesday evening at 9:00 p.m. in Campus Center 168-170, Josh Gordon noted campus photographer, in cooperation with CEQ, will present three slide shows and two short 16 mm films. The shows are part of the Earthweek celebration.

Gordon's most recent photographic display, "Of Travels," is on display until Friday in the hallway near the Student Union Ballroom. It is a display of pictures taken on a cross-country trip this past summer. Last year, his exhibit, "Transition Generation," appeared in the same place. It has since traveled to Clark University, Mt. Holyoke, and Syracuse University.

The first show, "Mediacrity", examines environmental attitudes and issues, and uses two screens simultaneously. "What Good Are Bugs" has been shown to thousands of people in the past four years. It is aimed at children aged 8-12, and examines peoples attitudes towards insects and insecticides. Gordon bills it as "allegedly numorous".

The night's feature, "Green Beens," is a linking together of many visual images in a coherent unit. It trys to put across the concept that everything is related to everything else. It is presented in the "Bullwinkle" style, in that everyone can get something out of it. According to Gordon, "all of the slides follow a logical progression; by either theme, concept, or composition."

Following the slide shows, two short films on "simple environmental Ideas" will be shown. "The Christmas Tree" is a three minute film on the commercialization of Christmas. "The Things That Go Unnoticed" is a five minute film about people's awareness, and how they perceive different situations.

N. Viet Army Buildup Seen Illegal By U.S.

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States Tuesday formally accused North Vietnam of an illegal troop and supply buildup as well as assassinations and kidnappings in South Vietnam in violation of the Paris cease-fire accord.

In a note to 10 other nations that agreed to guarantee the Jan. 27 pact, the United States said: "It is abundantly clear that the main obstruction to peace consists of the military activities carried out by the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and forces under its control in South Vietnam."

Specifically, the State Department charged Hanoi with infiltrating more than 30,000 Army personnel into South Vietnam through Laos and Cambodia, sending in anti-aircraft artillery units and ringing the Khe Sanh air field with SA—2 missiles, and the clandestine shipment of more than 400 tanks and armored vehicles.

Of particular concern, the note said, was North Vietnam's failure to provide full information about Americans missing in action in Indochina or known to have died there.

Earlier this month, Hanoi and the Viet Cong accused Washington and South Vietnam of "grave violations" of the agreement. The U.S. reply called those charges "utterly groundless."

Meanwhile, in other developments:

—The State Department confirmed that some 300 Cambodian military personnel are being trained by the United States in Thailand in such aviation techniques as maintenance and radar.

—Saigon offered to release 750 civilian prisoners, and the Viet Cong renewed an offer to release 637 civilians they are holding.

—In Cambodia, waves of U.S. B52 bombers made their heaviest attacks in weeks around Phnom Penh in an effort to reduce Communist pressure on the capital.

—In Laos, the Pathet Lao accused the Laotian government of delaying the formation of a new provisional government by making unreasonable demands.

The U.S. note was sent to the Soviet Union, China, Britain, France and all other participants of the International Conference on Vietnam except the Viet Cong.

Refugees Invade Cambodia

By RICHARD BLYSTONE
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH (AP) - Six thousand rebels are hounding the outer defenses of Cambodia's capital, but an even larger army has invaded already - a patient, helpless army of refugees.

Hundreds more arrive daily, fleeing U.S. bombing, antigovernment attacks or both. Westerners here fear that before long they will overtax the government's ability to provide even the scantiest aid.

On almost any day, on almost any road, files of homeless Cambodians make their slow way toward Phnom Penh. Some have their mats, pots, pigs and oil lamps piled on bullock carts or carriages pulled by motorbikes. Some come on bare feet, their wordly goods balanced on their heads.

A few have spent their life savings on plane fare from beleaguered provicial towns. Others have come up the Mekong River in government-chartered sampans.

Some have been moving for months, some for years, seeking security and a way to make a living.

This is the last stop and it offers neither.

No one can say with confidence how many refugees there are in Cambodia. Statistics here, as elsewhere in Indochina, are a compound of facts, wishes, guesses and fabrications that mutate as they pass through the bureaucracy.

The government's latest estimate is 520,000 registered displaced persons countrywide with another 200,000 unregistered.

A consultant to a U.S. Senate subcommittee estimated recently that as many as 3 million of Cambodia's 6 1/2 million people have been forced to leave home at one time or another during the country's three-year war.

A combination of informed estimates indicates that the last two months of intensified fighting and bombing have generated at least 20,000 new refugees across Cambodia. And no figures are available from the two-thirds of the country that is controlled by anti-government forces.

The Phnom Penh area has nearly 295,000 registered refugees - up almost 10,000 this year- and an unknown number of new arrivals who have taken up residence in pagodas or in crowded apartments with friends and relatives.

"There really isn't much reason for a refugee to register," said one western relief worker.

"The government isn't overexerting itself to help them."

However, western aid workers insist that lack of food is not a major problem - at least for the time being - and observation bears this out.

"The Cambodians will share and share and share as long as there's something to go around," said one American.

"We have some problems with small children, some cases of malnutrition due to diseases, but for the most part the nutrition is sufficient," said Dr. Franz Altherr, a Swiss physician for a Red Cross refugee relief team.

Found In Meat Cancer Hormone

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Residues of a cancer-causing hormone still are showing up in meat, three months after the government banned the hormone from cattle feed but permitted implanting it in ears.

Permitting cancer-causing additives in food is forbidden by federal law.

In banning the hormone diethylstilbestrol, or DES, from feed, the Food and Drug Administration had hoped to eliminate residues.

DES is used to fatten cattle faster.

An FDA spokesman said the agency's investigation of residues found since the ban has failed to establish why they slowed up.

A residue-testing program, set up by the Agriculture Department to study a cross-section of the nation's beef supply, showed that 0.6 per cent of mean samples taken this year through March showed evidence of DES.

The level was down from 2 per cent in 1972, but comparable to the 0.5 per cent found in 1971.

Dr. Charles C. Edwards, former FDA commissioner, said in 1971 that any incidence of residues at a rate over 0.5 per cent would force the agency to re-evaluate its controls.

Rep. L. H. Fountain, D-N.C., whose subcommittee has been receiving the residue reports regularly, said he is greatly concerned over the persistence of the residues.

"While we do not presently have proof that chemicals like DES, which produce cancer in test animals, are responsible for the increasing percentage of human deaths attributable to cancer, it is obviously both prudent and highly desirable that we avoid any unnecessary exposure to them," Fountain said.

DES has been linked to a rare form of vaginal cancer in the daughters of women who took the drug during pregnancy. It also has been blamed for cancer in test animals.

Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz has estimated that a total ban on DES would tack an extra 3 1/2 cents on the price of a pound of beef.

Sexes To Reverse Roles In Raft Expedition

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) - Seven women, including an Arab and an Israeli, will have the life and death responsibilities and their six male crew mates the subordinate tasks when an experimental raft sets adrift toward the Americas next month.

"Normal roles will be reversed and cultures and nationalities will conflict. The expedition is aimed at measuring friction between the sexes -how it begins and how it is resolved," said Anne Turner, a French psychologist, in describing on Tuesday the voyage of the raft Acali.

Mrs. Turner, who helped recruit crew members, said almost all of the crew, aged 25 to 40, are married, but none would be accompanied by spouses.

"This fact," she said, "presents a whole range of problems that the crew will have to come to terms with. Sexuality is part of the study, but not the prime area. There will be frictions enough as it is."

A Swedish woman will serve as captain and an American as navigator. The raft's physicians are Israeli and Czech women.

The driver, who must keep the raft in good repair, is a French woman. There is also an American woman technician and a young unmarried Algerian woman who will be a clerk and administrator. The role of the men ranges from cook to anthropologist to photographer.

"The men have responsibilities, but the captain is a woman and she is the final authority on board," Mrs. Turner said.

Santiago Genoves, a Mexican anthropologist who drifted across the Atlantic on Thor Heyerdahl's papyrus boat Ra, conceived the expedition and will be its "psychological observer," Mrs. Turner said.

Prov. Journal Strike Deadline Nears

PROVIDENCE (A)—The Providence Journal-Bulletin told the Providence Newspaper Guild Tuesday the company is prepared to take a strike if union members find the latest contract offer unacceptable.

With a strike deadline set for midnight Wednesday, the guild's executive and negotiation committees went into caucus.

The company said it would make no improvement on its latest contract proposal, a two-year pact proposing a 6.2 per cent wage increase this year, retroactive to last Jan. 1, and a similar wage boost next year.

The guild's latest demand was for a one-year contract with an 11.5 per cent wage hike.

Nixon Denies Asking Rogers For Help

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-ABC News reported Tuesday that President Nixon has called upon Secretary of State William P. Rogers to deal with White House problems stemming from the Watergate case. A presidential spokesman denied it.

ABC correspondent Bill Gill said Nixon wants Rogers to help restore "an impeccable integrity" to the White House operation.

Talking with reporters en route to Washington from Key Biscayne, Fla., Tuesday night, White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said there was "no discussion at all along that line" in a telephone conversation between Nixon and Rogers.

Ziegler also said that Nixon "has made no decision at all regarding staff resignations" that might arise from Watergate.

Gill, who repored that he had been told Rogers conferred secretly with Nixon in Florida over the weekend, later said that their conversation was by telephone.

A State Department spokesman said Rogers spent the weekend in Williamsburg, Va.

Gill quoted White House sources as saying they expect the President to announce that Rogers will personally direct an overhaul of the President's staff.

Another administration official said he had talked to Rogers by telephone and that the secretary told him he hadn't been asked to play such a role in the Watergate aftermath.

A spokesman for the State Department would not comment Tuesday on the report that Rogers had been tapped for an administration housecleaning, which followed rumors that Nixon planned just such a move. Others mentioned in speculation were John B. Connally and Melvin R. Laird, members of the Nixon cabinet in his first term.

Meanwhile, Presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman and former Nixon campaign chief Clark MacGregor disagreed Tuesday over whether an internal investigation was made in the campaign organization last August when the affair was just unfolding.

Ehrlichman said he proposed then "the fullest disclosure" to MacGregor and to the whole planning group, but the in-house investigation was not made. His comments were reported in the Washington Star-News, then confirmed by the White House.

MacGregor said no such investigation was proposed to him.

Deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren confirmed in Florida that John J. Wilson, the lawyer for Ehrlichman and White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, met with President Nixon last Thursday at the White House.

Audubon Offers Internships

The Massachusetts Audubon Society is sponsoring an Environmental Internship Program this summer throughout New England. The Environmental Internship Program acts as a coordinating unit between academic institutions and environmental and related agencies. Through this procedure they hope to accomplish three goals:

1) Providing a meaningful educational experience for students

2) Aiding the different agencies involved with the intern's skills

3) Qualifying potential staff members through this internship.

The program offers interested students the unique opportunity of participating in environmental affairs in governmental, non-profit or industrial groups. This internship program is open to all University undergraduates and graduate Students.

Applications for these summer internships must be filled out and sent on their way to the Mass. Audubon Society by Friday, April 28th. The internships start around the first of June and continue until Labor Day. There is a financial Stipend which ranges from $75-$100 per week depending upon the experience and academic qualifications of the Student.

Interns that are chosen for these positions will be selected by their ability to meet the needs of the sponsoring agency. It is imperative that perspective interns have high academic standings, as well as an interest in the field in which they are working.

The responsibilities that the intern will undertake are so designed that he/she will be exposed to all segments of environmental affairs. At the end of the internships the interns will be asked to write an evaluation of their experiences in the field and will also be asked to publish articles in the local and school newspapers as well as other publications citing the work that they completed with the various environmental agencies that they were involved with.

The Environmental Intern Program believes the internship to be a positive productive experience working in environmental affairs to make people aware of the environmental needs of our society to incorporate these beliefs in their professional careers.

All inquiries for this program are to be made through the OUTREACH office in 318 Arnold House where applications and other information on the program can be found. It is imperative that these materials be sent out before April 28th.

Some of the jobs that are available to the undergraduates and graduates are:

In Maine: 1) Landscape Architect student with the Department of Parks and Recreation to analize existing and abandoned railroad right-of-way as potential year round trail network and other outdoor recreation activities.

2) Planning or Environmental Planning and Design Student for the Shoreline Zoning Project in Augusta to assist communities with conservation activities and mapping out these communities.

3) Biology student to help the Thompson Lake Association of Augusta in the planning process to compile with the Shoreline Standards Project.

4) Zoology or Wildlife student to work with the Department of Inland Fisheries and Game to develop a listing of birds and animals in the habitant requirement, life histories and other special considerations necessary to determine the desireability of importation.

5) Journalism student to research and write a comprehensive history of the development of the Maine Department of Inland Fisheries and Game.

In New Hampshire:

1) City Planning (Exeter, N.H.) to assist small towns in updating town plan and development control.

2) Civil Engineering student to work with the S.E., New Hampshire Regional Planning Commission to help towns look for a solid waste disposal site and prepare the site for its initial use.

3) Design and/or Engineering Student for the Habitate, Inc. connected with the Appalachian Mtn. Club to compile a working paper of an Environmental Impact Statement for the Pinkham Notch Camp.

In Vermont:

Wildlife Ecology and Management majors, A general ecology major, Entomology majors and Political Science majors are needed to work in similar situations as in Maine and New Hampshire.

There are also opportunities in Massachusetts for Economics majors, Landscacpe Architecture students, Political Science majors, and Civil, Chemical or Environmental Engineering Students, as well as Journalism and Planning majors. There are similar positions open in Rhode Island and Connecticut for interns who are Interested in possible internships in these fields.

The Audubon Society is offering a summer internship program that offers a financial stepend from $75-$100 per week, depending upon the experience and academic qualifications of students. It has been said to be imperative that perspective interns have high academic standings as well as interest in the field in which they are working.

Power Co. Asks For Rate Boost

(AP)—Three Northeast companies, Connecticut Light and Power Co., Hartford Electric Light Co., and Western Massachusetts Electric Co., have asked state regulatory agencies for permission to boost rates for electirc and gas service this year.

Last week, Gov. Thomas J. Meskill asked CL&P and HELCO to reconsider their rate increase requests and both utilities rejected the governor's plea.

"We find it perplexing," Sillin said, "that, on one hand, pressures are placed on us to make operating and capital expenditures to improve the quality of service and to minimize their environmental effects, while, on the other hand, we face strenuous objections to the associated higher costs."

He said the problem was not unique to Northeast and was confronting the entire utility industry.

However, he added that a comparative analysis shows that a typical family in Connecticut actually is spending a smaller percentage of its earnings for electricity now than it did in 1963.

Sillin announced that Northeast's 1972 earnings amounted to $1.57 a share. He said earnings for the 12 months ending March 31 were $1.52 per share compared to $1.43 a share in the previous 12-month period.

First quarter earnings were 40 cents per share compared to 44.4 cents a year ago, Sillin said.

Hot Dogs And Beer

Photos by Emmett Schmarsow

The first beer cans of the outdoor season were modeled yesterday at Spring Day festivities near the stadium. Dancing, drinking, and general good times were had to the sounds of Boston bands- The Whole Band, Savage, and Flesh and Blood.

After a slow start in the morning, clouds and crowds began to pick up the pace. By early afternoon, the prospect of good boogiein' music, or a day off in the sun had lured a good sized audience down to the fields. While the hot dogs never caught up with demand, other supplies on hand provided plenty of diversion for the spectators.

Energy Alternatives To Be Discussed

As part of Earth Week activities, Professor William Heronomus of the UMass Department of Civil Engineering, will speak on energy alternatives tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 124.

Professor Heronomus will speak about harnessing energy from the wind and the ocean as a means of dealing with the present energy crisis.

Heronomus believes the basic flaw in our present means of energy production to be the thermal pollution problem. He says that we are gradually increasing the temperature of the earth, although we can't sense it.

The real alternative, according to Heronomus, is to turn to solar processes. With these, we could satisfy our energy appetites and not heat up the earth, as long as the sun shines and we keep in rhythm with the solar energy processes.

This lecture, sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality, is cordially open to the public free of charge.

S.W. Hosting Abortion Advocate Today

Today William Baird the well-known advocate for legalization of abortion and the rights of women will be at UMass in the Southwest Residential College as the guest of the University's Pre-Law Advising Board and the Southwest Assembly.

During the afternoon Baird will do a workshop on the establishment of abortion clinics as multi-service community assets; in the evening he will give a lecture in the Hampden Dining Commons on the unfinished battle for abortion.

John Nelson To Conduct Schubert

The Boston Philharmonia Orchestra will appear at UMass for two concerts under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

Tonight, Thursday, and Friday, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the orchestra will be under the direction of guest conductor John Nelson and will be joined by the University Chorale and five vocal soloists.

John Nelson conducted New York's first performance of Berlioz' monumental opera "Les Troyens" at Carnegie Hall last season and his success alerted the music world and the public at large that a new young conductor had emerged.

He was signed by three American opera houses: The New York City Opera, The Santa Fe Opera, and The Metropolitan Opera. Mr. Nelson's New York City Opera productions of "Carmen" and "L'Incoronazione de Poppea" have met with critical acclaim and he will succeed Rafael Kubelik in the Metropolitan Opera's production of "Les Troyens" next season. Thirty-year-old John Nelson has appeared as guest condutor of the National Symphony Orchestra, Aspen Festival Orchestra, and Hartford Symphony Orchestra. He is on the faculty of The Juilliard School, and conductor of The Greenwich (Conn.) Philharmonia and Pro Arte Chorale.

The Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of guest conductor John Nelson, will perform tonight, Thursday, and Friday at 8 o'clock in Bowker Auditorium.

Navy Yard To Be Oil Refinery?

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - The suggestions that the Boston Naval Shipyard be transformed into an oil refinery came up Tuesday at a panel discussion on the nation's energy crisis.

Thomas Byrley, editor of Fuel Oil News and moderator of the discussion, proposed that the shipyard and other facilities being closed down by the Department of Defense might be suitable as sites for refineries, tanker terminals or electric generating stations.

As an example, he cited the Boston yard-with 220 acres, a 1,200 foot wide channel and waters 40 feet deep.

"Industry should look at these sites, and the federal government should make available those that are found suitable," Byrley said.

However, John Buckley, vice president of Northeast Petroleum Corp. of Boston, questioned whether a refinery would be feasible for the yard.

He noted it is located in Charlestown-not Boston-and is surrounded by residential dwellings.

"You don't build a refinery in the middle of a city with a million and a half people," Buckley said.

M.E. POW Says No Blanket Amnesty

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - A former prisoner of war from Sanford Tuesday urged the Maine House not to "dishonor those who fought and fought well in Southeast Asia by granting blanket amnesty to those who wouldn't."

"I think amnesty has its place, but let's look at it on an individual basis," said Lt. Cdr. Allen Carpenter, a Navy flier, as the legislature observed Maine Vietnam Veterans' Day.

"I am not in favor of blanket amnesty for those who refused to fight for the things we have in this country," continued the serviceman.

Carpenter addressed the House, while a fellow former POW, Air Force Maj. Robert I. Biss of Brewer, spoke to the Senate.

Biss said he wanted to thank "each man who fought in the jungles and swamps, who flew the missions, and to each man and woman who supported our President in his hard-to-come-by decisions. . .

"Without you I would yet be dreaming of freedom."

Carpenter told the 151-member House that it should also press for a full accounting of all servicemen missing in action.

And, the Navy officer continued, the lawmakers should "take a position of no aid to North Vietnam for the rebuilding of North Vietnam without an apology to the United States of America for the treatment of its prisoners of war during this conflict."

Come Together

I'm a confirmed Beatlemaniac, and there's nothing I'd like to do better this summer than attend a Beatles' concert, no matter where it might be. But, alas, the prospects for such a reunion seem mighty dim.

Imagine, if you can, the Fab Four jamming on the same stage at the same time. A real fanatic might even believe it could bring an end to all wars, and turn all swords to plowshares. High expectations, no doubt, but the event would be historic nonetheless.

One rock journal says it could happen, but it shouldn't. The Beatles belonged to the idealistic sixties, was the reasoning, and the days of Haight-Ashbury are over. The fallacy, of course, was that the Beatles belong to all times, now and forever.

Last summer, we saw half of the foursome come together on stage, along with most of the music greats of our time. Right now, Ringo is out on the west coast putting together an album, and it just so happened that John and George decided to pop in on him, and ended up contributing to the tracks. That makes it three-quarters of the way there.

Good ol' Paul is still across the water, though, wasting time with TV specials and the like. Besides, he was just busted for possession, and it's not likely that he'll be able to get back into the U.S. for a few years.

And John seems to be having problems with the U.S. Immigration Bureau, so it would be unwise for him to leave the country, cause he may never be able to get back in.

Allen Klein seemed to be a big obstacle to the group's reunion, but as of last month, he's no longer involved with their business. But it seems it will take more than dumping Klein to make the dream come true.

But you never can tell. John told us the dream was over, but Paul recently said something to the effect that, if John gives a concert, maybe the other three will join him. And I'll be there if they do.

Speaking Of Finland

The other day, I had the pleasure of meeting a delightful person from the under-publicized nation of Finland. Her name was Kaija (pronounced Kai' ya) and she was a high school senior exchange student, currently attending school in Greece, New York (a suburb of Rochester). Upon meeting Kaija, my first reaction was a series of very American puns that make themselves readily available at the mention of terms like Finn and Finnish. However, as the discussion progressed, I realized that I knew practically nothing about the nation or the people I had been mocking. So I decided that this was as good a time as any to learn—I mean, how often do you hear about Finland these days?

Well, for those of you who are interested in statistics, Finland is a nation of 130,128 sq. mi., about equal to the combined area of Massachusetts and New Mexico. It is bordered to the north by Norway, to the east by the Soviet Union, to the South by the Gulf of Finland and the Baltic Sea, and to the west by the Gulf of Bothnia and Sweden. The population is about 4,700,000—about 1 million less than our beloved state of Massachusetts. This sparse population accounts for the abundance of beautiful scenery which is quite apparent throughout the country.

Finland has an interesting history which, unfortunately, is muddled by foreign occupation. From the twelfth century to the beginning of the nineteenth century, the nation was under Swedish control, until in 1809, Czar Alexander I joined Finland to the Russian Empire as a grand duchy. After countless hassles with Russia, Finland waged a successful war of independence against Russia and adopted a republican constitution on July 17, 1919. However, in 1939, the Finns were once again invaded by Russia, and, after a valiant defense, they lost the war and one tenth of their territory. Although a neutral country, they were involved in extensive fighting against the Soviet Union throughout World War II, and in 1944, a peace agreement was finally adopted.

Enough for history—Finland is now a modern independent nation that nobody ever hears about. Nevertheless, the Finnish people are very proud of their country and their heritage. They boast an advanced system of education, based on the Platonian model, and a working proportional Parliamentary government. One point that is always apparent in a discussion with a Finnish person, and was quite evident in the case of Kaija, is the tremendous rivalry with Sweden and the Swedish people. Kaija was somewhat upset that Americans advertised Swedish sauna baths, because saunas are from Finland. In fact, almost everyone in Finland has a sauna in his or her home. Kaija was also disturbed that so many Americans draw this sweeping generalization of Europeans—they tend to put all Europeans in the same category, whereas actually, each country and people are different.

One thing I'm sure most people from UMass will want to know if they go to Finland, or many other European countries, is that if someone asks you if you want to smoke some "shit", they're not being wise with you. "Shit" is the term Finns use for hashish, as "trips" is what they call acid. Another thing many UMass students might like to know is that, in general, the Finns drink much more than Americans, (another point which was illustrated well by Kaija). In fact, alcoholism is the nation's leading problem.

In other words, Finland, the Finns, and the Finnish culture are much more independent than they are given credit for. The Finnish people claim to be completely neutral and seem to reject any implications that they are tied to Russia, although they maintain a treaty of mutual friendship and assistance. They claim to be a very happy and warm people (although sometimes cold to foreigners). I'd have to say that if all the people in Finland are anything like Kaija, then Finland is one place I don't want to miss.

Nothing To Say

One nice thing about being an editorial columnist (beside getting my name in the paper every Wednesday) is that all my friends are constantly giving me ideas to write about. "Gee Joyce, why don't you write about . . .?" is a proverbial topic of discussion whenever something is bothering one of them.

One not-so-nice thing about being an editorial columnist is trying to find all my friends with their great ideas when I haven't one of my own. Like now.

Oh, what great new interesting revelations shall I expound upon this week? I haven't the vaguest idea.

"Why don't you write something that's controversial for a change?" was one suggestion. "Why bother?" was mine. I like to leave the heavy controversies for the Political Science majors. Let them worry about the real world; that's what they're going to school for, isn't it? Besides, one week I sort of kind of said something nasty about the McDonalds Corporation and then the McDonalds Corporation very definitely said something nasty about me. That kind of aggravation I really don't need.

I asked Steve Tripoli what I could write on and he handed me a piece of paper. It's nice to know that there are comedians in titled positions around here.

Jerry Lazar has been after me to write an "interview with a fetus" for some time now. When I meet one that grants me an interview, Jerry, I'll be more than happy to do it. If I write about the abortion issue, then the Watergate issue will take preference on the "Letter to the Editor" page and Jerald Howard will have nothing to write about.

I wrote about Spring a month ago, but it wasn't appreciated. I don't think that anyone even read it because it was still cold out.

If I wrote about how I got out of my meal ticket for this semester, or how I got off campus for next semester, I'd probably get thrown out of school. So I won't.

Billy and Claudia keep telling me that I should write about taking saunas and how we meet the strangest people while we do. Well I would, but that's the kind of story that you have to be there to appreciate. Besides, the sauna that we use has been written about in the Boston Phoenix (when it was still in publication) and that's a tough act to follow.

Ed Bryant wrote an editorial one week about how an editorial of mine had freed him to write again. I asked him to reciprocate and help me in my dilemma. He came up with the bright idea to write about him. Then I remembered that he called me a fruitcake. I won't say anything else about Ed because if you can't say something nice, then you shouldn't say anything at all.

I promised Tubby that I'd say something about him. You have nice dimples, Tubby.

David said that if I don't have anything to say, then I shouldn't say anything at all. Well, if I don't have anything to write, then I don't have anything to send to my mother. If I don't have anything to send to my mother, then I have to tell her what I'm doing in my spare time. And I'd rather not let out my trade secrets.

Letters To The Editor

Strawberries

To The Editor:

The other day I had an instant craving for fresh strawberries. To satisfy this craving I hurried down to the Peoples Market to buy some and devour all that my stomach could hold. After entering the doorway to this so called People's Market I rushed to the refrigerated shelves containing what I though would be delicious, juicy, red strawberries. Instead my eyes caught hold of several small baskets holding what I hoped would be the answer to my desire. The baskets were filled with large red strawberries severely rotted and moldy. Completely disgusted at this sight, I exited with feelings never to return. Shouldn't the people running this market keep track of the items in it and not try to sell to the people, for whom this market has been established, rotten and unappetizing food?

Debora Saccone

Claridad

To The Editor:

After reading the article in the April edition of the Claridad, we became baffled by the question: "Is there really a Judy Jamieson, and if so, is it true that the Claridad going to Amherst Junior High School for its staff?"

You may be wondering if our pernicious remarks are due to the fact that we are insulted by Judy's article on Butterfield House. Well, yes we are, and if you're not, than you should have been. The article did not descibe Butterfield, Ann Mundy, nor the spirit of the dorm.

This is the second time that the Claridad has produced a hastily constructed "newspaper." It has become apparent that there is little interest for further publication of the Claridad. Therefore, we, the undersigned, and other members of our dormitory believe that the Claridad's budget be rerouted by the Central Government to the staff of Spectrum, which could better utilize the funds.

No Dangers

To The Editor:

This letter comes as a reply to Ms. Buraks comments against N.O.R.M.L., a group advocating the legalization of marijuana. Whether marijuana is a subtle evil infiltrating and taking over our lives is something everyone will have to decide for themselves on a moral basis. Whether America is sinking into a state of decadence and decay, and whether or not marijuana has anything to do with this is something that only history will be able to tell.

However, when one is concerned with the issue of marijuana and public health, there are FACTS available, from many sources, for anyone who can read. Apparently Ms. Burak cannot. Ms. Burak goes on about the dangers of marijuana smoking, which, in her words, may include birth defects, brain deterioration, heroin addiction, and breast development in males. She is not sure about these dangers, because research has found no 'definite answers'. Well, Ms. Burak, be uninformed no more, because marijuana studies have come up with some definite, factual answers.

For a good overall summary you might read The Marijuana Papers, or the report on marijuana published by The Consumers Union. (That's right, the same folks who do test reports on refrigerators and televisions). But if you want to get into the heavy stuff, there are hundreds of pages of reports available from The National Institute of Mental Health and The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Just ask for a catalog. What these reports conclude is, basically, that there are NO physical or psychological dangers that can be incurred from smoking moderate amounts of marijuana. Which is why the government is slowly liberalizing its position on marijuana; the very studies they hoped would show what a terrible thing marijuana was have proven just the opposite.

Douglas Shepardson

Electric

To The Editor:

The mass transportation experiment around campus is a dynamic idea in keeping with the ecological conservation of our biosphere; the new buses are a real improvement over the individual modes of transportation (walking and bicycling excepted). However, our man, Edison, had a better idea pertaining to this experiment—electric buses! This idea has taken the form of an ongoing experiment in Washington, D.C. for the past three years in an effort to correct the fouling of our biosphere (rendering a detrimental effect upon the human organism) due to air pollutant emissions from the gasoline engine.

We're talking about the shit that you breathe into your lungs which either sits there or circulates through your bloodstream and hinders you (a total human organism) from functioning to the full capacity of your potential.

Cost? How about the price of Life, for starters. Don't really think it would be that much more expensive to carry our experiment, here, to its intended completion, do you? We are here; the time is now—let's look into it!!

Not Girls

To The Editor:

The MDC has done it again. The women's gymnastic team, having demonstrated their strength and abilities in capturing the first national gymnastic championship on this campus is, according to yesterday's editorial, composed of girls. May I remind the editors of the Collegian that the women on the team are between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two, have full voting (and drinking) rights in Massachusetts, drive cars, handle strenuous practice sessions in addition to full academic schedules - in short are entitled to recognition as more than children. The choice of words in the editorial "commending the girls" was really poor. I hope the editorial reflects a lack of awareness, which can be corrected with a little effort, rather than a conscious refusal to recognize and deal with the problem of sexism in the media.

Laura Emmons

A Sexist Dictionary

By MARY KEANE

Remember January? Remember the day school was called off because of snow? I found myself neatly hemmed in by two feet of obnoxious new snow. I had just moved into a new apartment, and hadn't even had the time to buy any texts, let alone do any reading for fun. Consequently, our modern home library was a small, but pithy, collection: The Joy of Cooking, Roget's Pocket Thesaurus, and The American Heritage Dictionary. Faced with such a mammoth selection for snowbound entertainment, the dictionary, having illustrations, won hands down.

I think that I enjoyed at least two solid minutes of peace before some curious quirk made me look up the definitions of man and woman. Briefly, the more interesting entries read as follows:

man. The human race; mankind. Used without an article. the accomplishments of man. 5. A male human being endowed with such qualities as courage, strength, and fortitude, considered characteristic of manhood.

woman. 2. Women collectively; womankind; woman is fickle. 3. Feminine quality or aspect: womanliness. Often preceded by the: brought out the woman in him. 4. A maidservant. 5. A mistress; paramour. 6. Informal. A wife.

Checking on the entries for male and female brought equally illuminating results. It was discouraging enough realizing the implications of the entangling mess of word usage in the English language without finding more of the same mumbo jumbo in this so-called 'revolutionary' new dictionary.

This little mental jolt was enough to drive me to drink. Unfortunately, you couldn't even drive that day, so I was left with but one recourse: I decided to write to the editors of the dictionary.

At that time I was a neophyte at mail order grumbling. I had absolutely no idea where to begin. After much scratching my head and fuming, I tried "Dear Sir." Annoying as that masculine epithet can grow, it worked.

Just as my little lambasting was getting underway, my roommate popped in with our new next door neighbors. In the process of explaining the cloud of steam surrounding me, I met with smirks and giggles and exclamations of what a cutesy-poo thing that was for a chick to do. As I began entertaining thoughts of dining 'roomie roast', I was left to fume in peace as my friends retired to contemplate why I wasn't doing something productive, like knitting. I soon exhausted my capacity for complaint, tucked the letter into an envelope, and vowed to stop taking myself so seriously.

Months passed. I grew quite confident that my letter had been received with great unacclaim and was by now widely unread.

I fell into a pit of despair. What now, now that my hopes for a postal career in consciousness-raising had flopped? I got desperate. I felt compelled to start going to classes and writing for the Collegian. Just as I was about to enlist with Katherine Gibbs, a mysteriously thick envelope appeared.

The letter was from a Ms. Alma Graham, currently acting editor for the American Heritage Dictionary. Ms. Graham took great pains to explain to me that she is the only woman now occupying such a position and probably is the only feminist in the ranks to boot. She cited work she has done in compiling non-sexist dictionaries for children as evidence of her support for my complaint. Ms. Graham explained that editors would rather add new words to dictionaries rather than change others (except in the case of blatant errors), but assured me that she would use my letter as evidence that the dictionary should be changed.

I was a little bit stupified by the whole thing. Me, at best a UMie, and at worst a nobody, considered evidence for change??? It went to my head. In fact, I didn't pick up my ears until I heard nasty rumors that Ma Bell may be forced to go on welfare unless she raises the rates for pay station calls from 10¢ to 20¢.

All of which means that right now I'm heading for a local bureaucratic booth to change into my Superbitch suit (able to leap tall semicolons at a single bound!) and haul out that time-honored greeting: "Dear Sirs . . ."

It's the next best thing to being there.

Mary Keane is a Collegian commentator.

Editorial Points

As you can probably see, the Collegian gets a lot of letters to the editor. Bet you wish you were the editor of the Collegian. Then your mailbox would never be empty.

Would you believe that, for every letter that gets printed, there's at least ten we don't have room for?

What ever happened to "far fucking out"?

Rumors are that the football team is still eating steak. While the people who are paying for the steak are eating dining commons food. Right on, soybean substitutes!

Did you know that the dining commons is getting rid of pizzaburgers next semester? Is that good news or bad news? Guess we'll have to wait and see what we get in their place.

With all this Watergate nonsense going on, it sort of makes you wonder who's taking care of running the country in the meantime. Or even most of the time.

Don Glickstein

Impeach Nixon

The farm workers are still getting screwed by big business and big labor.

The factory workers are still getting screwed by big business and big labor.

It is the 5th year of the Nixon administration, and 11 years until 1984.

It could just as well be 1884, for sweatshops and tenements and rotting carcasses are still strewed in the streets of America's lower East sides.

MacDonalds. Certainly this is a chain worthy of boycotting. During the election, the MacDonald's Board Chairman contributed $250,000 to Nixon. That is his constitutional right, of course, but there is no need for MacDonald's customers to finance exorbitant salaries that, in turn, finance clearly Communist-inspired illegalities like the Watergate invasion of privacy.

Hostess Cupcakes and Twinkies and Wonder Bread. Again, why should the American consumer finance the illegal activities of ITT, which owns Hostess? ITT, for the forgetful, has made dubious offers to interfere in the internal politics of a foreign nation, Chile, and has caused the prestige of America to drop even further around the world.

ITT also bribed the Nixon administration to drop an antitrust suit against ITT. Nixon agreed to, and ITT pushed through the largest corporate merger in U.S. history.

Shell Oil. Shell is owned by a Dutch holding company. It has flagrantly violated the provisions of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, and has refused to negotiate with the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers union for safety provision. The Nixon administration has not enforced the provisions of the OSH Act. The unions demands include:

1) Independent surveys of plants for health hazards.
2) Physical exams and tests for employees.
3) Annual morbidity and mortality statistics for workers furnished by management.

A & P. A & P is the only major food chain which has negotiated in poor faith with the United Farm Workers. See below.

LETTUCE. Boycott all non-UFW lettuce. Farm workers are a major labor group that is not regulated by Federal law. The growers, working with sweetheart agreements with the Nixon-oriented Teamsters union, agreements which one California judge called "the ultimate form of favoritism", have denied decent wages and working conditions to field workers to organize in a union that represents and protects them. Stop and Shop in Hadley is one store that sells UFW lettuce. Buy from them and boycott Louis.

Impeach Nixon. Nixon is either the most incompetent President we've had since U.S. Grant, or the most evil one. He certainly is the most corrupt.

The Nixon administration employs 6144 public relations specialists for $161,000,000 a year. These PR men's primary purpose is to, according to Majority Leader O'Neill "malign Congress . . . and to push President Nixon's scheme for one-man rule."

The largest securities fraud complaint ever filed with the S.E.C. involving $224 million, was allegedly masterminded by Nixon campaign contributor Robert Vesco and Nixon's brother Donald. The Justice Department is not pressing charges, although Vesco's bank accounts in London, New Jersey, Ontario, Quebec, Costa Rica, New York, and Nassau have been frozen.

On March 12, 1971, the Nixon government announced that there would be no increase in the milk price support level. Ten days later, the Dairy Cooperative Political Committee gave $417,500 to the Nixon campaign. On March 25, Nixon raised the support level for milk prices.

The oil industry gave $2 million to Nixon's campaign. Last week, Nixon asked for an increase in oil tax credits.

Impeach Nixon.

Unfounded And Destructive Statements

To The Editor:

The Daily Collegian has, in very small letters, just barely visible to the untrained eye, a logo attached to its letterhead which reads, "a free and responsible press." The Collegian is certainly free (unless you are faculty, and then you have to pay for it) but the Collegian is also highly irresponsible.

Tuesday morning I had the distinct and dubious honor of having words put into my mouth by both Mark Vogler and Kevin Mack. All of this had to do with Bill Baird's by now well publicized upcoming visit to Southwest. It seems that Baird had received several threatening phone calls from what he claims were area women, and decided to come over to the Southwest Women's Center to see just how "hostile" we all were. Let me interject here that none of us were hostile about Baird's appearance until the Collegian ran that front page article on Monday containing Baird's unfounded and destructive statements about the women's movement. And what we were hostile about was exactly that.

Baird walked into the women's center with Sue Vogel (whom he neglected to introduce to us, who neglected to introduce herself) and two college boys, one of whom was holding a camera. Both of these boys also neglected to introduce themselves. During the course of the discussion, I asked Baird if he had in fact made those statements about the women's movement, and Baird answered that yes he had. Another woman present at the time and I were both sincerely curious as to why he had made them. Baird responded by saying that he had been arrested eight times in the past ten years, and no feminist had ever been arrested eight times in the past ten years on contraception issues, and no feminists (according to him) had ever stood up to support him. Okay, Bill Baird.

I explained that there was absolutely no strict feminist party line, that the politics of a national organization such as NOW are not necessarily my politics, and that from my knowledge of the women's movement, there are many issues upon which we all agree, but to a large degree each woman has her own, very personal set of politics. This being the case, I wondered why Baird had attacked the whole feminist movement for the acts, or rather, non-acts, of certain, media chosen feminists leaders.

Baird responded to this by announcing once more that he had been arrested eight times.

The second issue that the other woman and I tried to deal with was why we wanted a woman to speak and not a man. I told Baird that I thought the work he had done to change legislation in this state was very important, that he was probably eminently qualified to speak on abortion, and that we were not hostile at all about his coming, we just didn't want to go hear him speak. Now, the reason for that is a very obvious one. Women's bodies are women's business. It is still very uncomfortable for many women to discuss their bodies, even amongst themselves. It stands to reason that it would be hard to talk about them in front of men. I personally would prefer to learn about my body by myself and with another woman. It's much more like a friend helping you find out what's going on that way, and much less like a fifth grade biology lesson.

Bill Baird responded to this by telling me again that he had been arrested eight times.

All during this discussion, one of the boys Baird had brought with him was snapping pictures. The other boy was writing things down. Toward the very end of the conversation, I asked why the boy with the camera was taking those pictures. He immediately turned to me, took my picture and smiled. I asked him why he did that. He said very nastily something about either getting or not getting my picture in the Collegian. Then I got angry. I got angry because 1, they never said who they were, 2, it was very vindictive of the boy with the camera to take my picture after I had just asked him why he was taking pictures, and 3, because they were so very smug about the whole thing.

I then asked the boy with the camera if he were one of the reporters who had been kept out of the rape conference. He smiled and said no, but his companion was. The photographer was Mack, the reporter Vogler. This is where that wonderfully childish editorial in Tuesday's paper came from:

I asked Baird why he had brought two male reporters with him. Surprisingly enough, Baird did not respond by saying he had been arrested eight times. He did not respond at all. Mack, the boy with the camera responded. He told me that he was unbiased before he came into the women's center (and if we are astute Collegian readers then we already know about Vogler's unbias) but he certainly was biased now, because I had completely turned him off. I was very surprised, so I asked why. He told me that I hated men. I said no I didn't and he said yes you do. Now, how can you argue with something as succinct as that?

The point to all of this is that I never said anything about hating men. In fact, I do not hate men (although it's really difficult after encounters like Monday's). What I spoke about with Baird and the two Jimmy Olsen Cub Reporters was support of women. Support of women does not mean, at least to me, hating men. It means loving women. Many times, it means ignoring men, but ignoring men is not hating men. Now, I can see where a paranoid, insecure, straight, white, male mind could get ignoring and hating confused, but it simply is not the case.

Once again, I really don't give a flying fuck whether or not Baird speaks in Southwest. I would also suggest that Vogler, Mack, and Baird get some kind of psychiatric help, because it can't be very healthy running around paranoid, and it certainly can't be a whole lot of fun. Or can it?

Judith Katz

Obscured By Sensationalism

To The Editors:

I can't do it. I can't ignore Kevin Mack's editorial commentary They Don't Like Men. First of all, that type of writing is mud-slinging at its poorest. Mr. Mack had little if any evidence to support his astounding conclusion that "these women hate anything with a penis." A short course in tautology could remind us that all generalizations are false.

I also can't help but offer some feeble explanation to Ms. Katz in regard to her inquiry about why women reporters were not sent to Southwest. Women reporters were not sent probably because very few exist. Of those women that do news reporting for the Collegian, I hardly ever see them around the office. Unless I am grossly mistaken, the Collegian staff must be at least 70% male. Those women who do work for the Collegian seem more often than not to be involved in putting issues together rather than news reporting. I would hope that anyone interested in correcting this delicate imbalance would make their presence known around the office.

The whole issue of Bill Baird's visit to this campus is rapidly being obscured by name-calling and sensationalism. I fail to understand how Kevin Mack can get away with such blatant lies as "(Bill Baird) was fighting for women's rights before women were fighting for themselves." The history of feminism is far more expansive than Baird's well publicized abortion enterprises.

To reduce the limits of the women's movement to an exercise in hormonal control is to make a farce of some more crucial issues, such as the hideous absence of respect for females as human beings in our society. As long as there are writers who are so insensate as to be incapable of distinguishing between real issues and subjective interests, there will always be a need for a women's movement.

No Amnesty For Deserters

To The Editor:

Amnesty means different things to different people as do most words in the dictionary nowadays, but the one question that is probably going through the minds of everyone now is, should we let the Americans who fled to Canada and Sweden etc. back into the country as if they were just away on vacation? It is my own, very strong belief that there should be absolutely no amnesty allowed until a payment has been made to the people of the United States by means of a term in jail, equivalent in length to a tour of duty in Viet Nam. As far as I'm concerned, these deserters are lucky that they don't have to serve a term in jail equivalent in length to some of our POW's stays in solitary confinement or behind enemy bars. Also, these draft dodgers should thank god they can come back to their homeland with only a jail sentence placed over their head instead of a firing squad or a man who has accelerated with the art of torture. The United States of America is probably one of the few nations on the Earth who is willing to give a second chance to men who have deserted their responsibilities to their homeland.

I had a brother who was a proud American, and was proud to fight in Viet Nam for a privilege such as this, the privilege of having a second chance. He was called on, and had no indifferent feelings about going. It was his duty, as it was the duty of every other eligible male American citizen, and he died performing his duty. Now what did he die for, to give another nation a chance to be like the United States, a people of their own free will, who elect their own government to lead them, or did he die so that our government could kiss the feet of these deserters and let them go scot free after the war was over.

I hardly think he died for the latter. He believed in a great country in the United States and he was right, it is the greatest nation on Earth!

There are other reasons why I feel bitter to these deserters, quite a number of reason in fact. In any case, have you all realized that for each man that fled out of the country to avoid the war, another must have gone in his place, possibly to Southeast Asia, but more important, possibly to his death? In this respect, each of these deserters were controlling the lives of other humans. Is this right? Should we ignore these deserters now that the war is over and they wish to come back without punishment or should we at least confine them to a jail for a period of time?

No, wait, don't answer that yet, first le's bring the issue closer to home. Each of you just think for a moment. What if it was you or one of your family that had to go to Viet Nam in place of one of our deserters, and were unlucky enough to make it back to the States in a wooden box. How would you feel then about amnesty, and about jail for the deserters?

I would like only to bring out one more point in this letter and that is, that the deserters who fled the country to avoid the draft knew full well at the time that they could not come back without being held in jail for some time. Now they have changed their minds, now that the war is over, they want to come back but don't want to be punished for the crime they committed. Well that's something they should have thought of first, not now.

These poor souls never had it so good by not getting killed or tortured in Viet Nam and now they want even more!! What the hell do they think they are, kings of some sort so they can get their own way at the snap of their fingers? What they want is awful god damned selfish as far as I am concerned and these bastards shouldn't be allowed back into the country without first spending some time in prison to make up to the country and to all the people they hurt.

All I can say now is that if I ever hear one of these deserters say he is an American, I believe I'd vomit. How can you be an American without sharing the responsibilities of the American people. What kind of a person can this be, to runaway and hide when the going gets rough. He's no American to me, not now and never will be!

Springtime Parking

Spring has arrived—and the commuters who, during the late January snowstorm, found themselves faced with an overabundance of snow (at times it was necessary to shovel INTO parking spaces) should now feel at ease about all their parking problems. Or should they? For just as winter is typified by an overabundance of snow, spring is heralded by the enormous increase of cars on campus, as well as an equally spectacular rise in improper or illegal parking. And naturally, the ones hurt most by this auto explosion and parking privilege abuse are the daily commuters.

Anyone unfortunate enough to be saddled with an H, F or V lot sticker has by this late in the year grown accustomed to his or her fifteen minute hike from parking lot to class. What these people have not been able to accept, though, is the irritation produced within themselves at the sight of a VW tucked in nicely between two other cars with six feet of room on either side. Or the sight of cars without stickers (or for that matter parking tickets) which remain glued to the same spots day after day, week after week, and in at least one case month after month. It seems that the only reason hat these vehicles are allowed to remain camped in the same parking spaces is because the security guards are too lazy to check out the out-of-the-way lots on a regular basis.

In this time of concern over the limitation of available space, let us all attempt to co-operate and fill all the campus parking lots to their fullest capacity. And if a car be found in any lot without the proper sticker--let the manager of Amherst Towing Service have mercy on its soul, as well as its owner's pocketbook.

Give 'Em Hell, Henry

To The Editor:

The concensus at the SGA presidential election last night seemed to be that Henry Ragin and his supporters were guilty of socially unacceptable behavior which especially had no place in politics. Henry and his crew were condemned for making a farce out of the formalities and procedures of student governement. Many charges flew that these people that were responsible for the heckling and disruptions were jerks simply by virtue of their actions. This type of allegation is known as an ad hominem attack because it is judging a person by his feelings rather than by his intellect. I know Henry is not a jerk. He serves on a committee which I am the chairperson of in the Southwest Assembly and I know that he does a good job. Henry and I suspect his supporters as well, are all capable of working within the system but they feel that they have a better way. They are champions of a cause that argues that all levels of government are just a game that Caucasian Males play. We need that kind of criticism and it is vital that we support criticism because it is the element that causes the system to adapt and readapt to the needs of the people. All too often, we in student government attempt to imitate city councils and state legislatures and in our attempts at vanity, we forget that we were elected to serve the people and not to become a social elite. I didn't vote for Henry but I felt that he would have been the politician closest to the people.

High Prices Predicted For Winter Oil

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - New England homeowners will be paying considerably more for heating oil next winter, the Maine Oil Dealers Association was told Tuesday, and last season's supply problems will be repeated--possibly on a much larger scale.

An executive of a Boston oil company predicted a 25 cent a gallon minimum for No. 2 heating fuel, and warned "it could be higher." The price is now in the neighborhood of 20 cents.

At a panel discussion on the region's fuel oil outlook, most participants applauded President Nixon's sweeping changes in oil policy, including the abolition of the import quota system instituted 14 years ago.

However, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, said the changes "came too late" to avert "continued supply problems with gasoline this summer and heating oil next winter."

And along among panel members, Muskie defended the nation's clean air standards, warning that the environmental movement should not be made the scapegoat for the energy crisis, and antipollution regulations should not be abandoned because of fuel shortages.

The prediction of a 25 cent a gallon minimum for heating oil came from John Buckley, vice president of Northeast Petroleum Corp., who said European refiners have doubled their prices within the past year.

Because of its deepwater harbors, New England will be able to obtain imported supplies of distillate fuels, said Buckley, one of the architects of the ill-fated plan to build a refinery at Machiasport.

"But the price, as the President said last week, is going to be high. . .," he warned. "New Englanders are going to be paying more--much more--for the oil they consume."

The lone government representative on the panel was Dr. William Johnson, energy advisor to the President's Oil Policy Committee, who said consumers have long been paying too little for oil and gas.

"The fact is," said Johnson, "that we have been charging too little too long for our energy sources, including oil and oil product as well as natural gas, and that this, more than any other factor, is the root cause of the energy crisis with which we are confronted today.

M.E. Women Seen As Force In '74

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Maine women seething over defeat of the Equal Rights Amendment ERA here are organizing into what they hope will be this conservative Yankee state's first bloc vote.

They aim to be a viable political force in time for the next ERA legislative battle in January and the 1974 primary and general elections.

"We're Democrats, Republicans and Independents, and we're going to break the powerhold of men on elective office from the state to the local level," declared Joyce Beard, a Portland businesswoman, a Republican and a mother of three girls.

Their goal of a feminist coup d'etat at the polls is especially formidable in a Republican state of Puritan New England, where a woman's place has always been at home.

But they argue they can win because women are "tired of being on the sidelines" and want a political voice in their future.

One woman already has announced informally her candidacy for either governor or 1st District congresswoman. She's Jadine O'Brien, 42, director of the Portland Model Cities program.

Feminist politics already has one solid victory in Maine. Violet Pease, 46, of Hollis recently won the Democratic Party's top leadership post-the first woman to hold that office.

"We got kick in the teeth on the ERA," said Rosanna Patane of Biddeford. "We found out we have to fight for ourselves because no one else is going to do it.

"There are really few politicians, especially in the legislature, who are sympathetic to women's issues, so we're going to replace them with women or men we know we can count on," she said.

Is he (she) flying South for the summer or is that North...Anyway I asked which direction he was going. Reply-beep, beep. Don't you have any imagination.

Amherst, Mass.--Settings of the "Magnificat" by Guillaume Dufay, Orlando di Lasso, and Johann Sebastian Bach will be performed by the UMass Collegium Musicum tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall. The Collegium includes singers and players interested in the performance of Medieval and Renaissance music and is under the direction of three members of the music department's faculty: Alan Harler (conducting and vocal direction), Charles Lehrer (instrumental direction and performance), and Miriam Whaples (musicological consultanting). Members of the University's music department will assist the group in the performance of the Bach "Magnificat".

Schubert Work Played In Bowker Tomorrow

UMass--The Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, joined by the UMass chorale and soloists, will perform two concerts in Bowker Auditorium as concluding events of the 1972-73 Celebrity Series. The performances tomorrow and Friday at 8 p.m. will be under the direction of John nelson, and will feature a performance of Franz Schubert's Mass in E flat major, D.950 as the major work.

Soloists in the Schubert Mass will include three UMass faculty members: Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor, and John d'Armand, bass. Donna Harler, contralto, and tenor John Aler will also be featured. For these performances, the UMass Chorale has been prepared by Russell Fahey, a member of the Springfield Technical Community College faculty, while the Chorale's regular conductor, Dr. Richard E. du Bois is on sabbatical. The E flat major Mass of Schubert is one of the great works in this genre and was one of this composer's last works. It is rarely heard in concert version in this country. Harold Schonberg writing in the "New York Times" last spring characterized Conductor John Nelson as "one of the best experts in choral music since Robert Shaw."

Mr. Nelson will also conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C. K. 425 ("Linz") and Honegger's Pastorale d'ete. Reserved tickets are available at $2 for UMass undergraduates and $4 for others, and may be obtained through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Hetter Hall, Amherst, telephone 413-545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before each performance.

Eng. Majors Meet

Tonight at 8:00 in Memorial Hall there will be a meeting of all undergraduates who are either English majors or are interested in becoming English majors.

Tutor In Holyoke

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to sign up for Spanish 30---Holyoke Tutorial (3 credits). It is not necessary to be a Spanish major; there are over ten non-majors participating in the program this semester. Students will go to Holyoke Monday and Wednesday mornings to tutor Puerto Rican children in the Holyoke public schools, mothers in the houses, and possibly work with the New England Council of Migrant Workers. Tutoring sessions are conducted on a one-to-one basis, with the content of the tutoring sessions being determined by the specific needs of the tutee involved. In the fall the bus to Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:30 and return about 11:45 a.m., so that students who wish to participate in the program must have these mornings completely free of classes. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings for orientation sessions, to discuss any problems that arise or to hear occasional speakers. Students in the Tutorial are asked to keep a running journal of their experiences, which then serves as the basis for a final paper.

Any students who are interested in the Tutorial should contact Professor Nina Scott in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures, 421 Herter Hall (5-0613). Enrollment will be limited to 20-25 students.

Collins First Pick In NBA Draft

By BEN THOMAS
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—The Philadelphia 76ers opened the 1973 National Basketball Association draft today by picking Olympian Doug Collins of Illinois State.

The 76ers picked Collins after a proposed deal with Chicago that would have given the Bulls the No. 1 selection in exchange for 6-9 center Cliff Ray and veteran guard Bobby Weiss fell through. The Bulls said that Ray did not pass a 76ers' physical. He had suffered a knee injury this season. Chicago had indicated that Collins would have been their top pick if the deal had been made.

After Philadelphia chose Collins, Portland yielded to Cleveland who selected Jim Brewer of Minnesota. Buffalo then took Providence backcourt ace Ernie DiGregorio.

Seattle then made the fourth choice but before the Super-Sonics could announce their pick Philadelphia broke in and said "the 76ers pick Mike Bantom of St. Joseph's." The 76ers said they were making the pick under Kennedy's original ruling which was overturned recently by a federal judge.

The 76ers were ruled out of order and Seattle picked Mike Green of Louisiana Tech.

Los Angeles, which had received Cleveland's choice, selected All-American Kermit Washington who had career averages of 20 points and 20 rebounds at American University.

All-America Ed Ratleff of Long Beach State was taken next, by Houston. And then Kansas City-Omaha picked Ron Behagen of Minnesota and Bantom was selected by Phoenix.

Atlanta, acting on the selection acquired from Detroit, took Houston junior Dwight Jones as a hardship case and then picked Missouri's John Brown. Golden State followed by naming South Carolina star Kevin Joyce, and Chicago took 7-foot Kevin Kunnert of Iowa.

Nick Weatherspoon of Illinois was chosen by the Capital Bullets, formerly the Baltimore Bullets, and the New York Knicks named Mel Davis of St. John's, N.Y., who was injured last year and still has one season of college eligibility remaining. Cleveland, using a choice acquired from Los Angeles, took Barry Parkhill of Virginia.

The Milwaukee Bucks named Swen Nater who played in Bill Walton's shadow at UCLA. Boston, making the 17th and final regular first-round pick, chose Steve Downing of Indiana and then Philadelphia closed out the first round by picking sophomore Ray Lewis, a hardship case, from Louisiana State.

Basketball Blue Chipper

Talk Of The Town

By EARLE BARROLL

Who is this Jim Town and why are so many people saying such super things about him? Why are they re-naming the Cage "Town Hall"? Why are they referring to home games next season as "Town Meetings"? Why are they telling us that a new "Town" has been added to Massachusetts?

Why? "Because Jim Town is one of the top ten high school basketball players in the country," says his coach next year, Jack Leaman. "And guaranteed, if he was playing his high school ball in the Metropolitan New York area we wouldn't have had a chance at getting him."

Jim Town is spelled "awesome" in his home base of Glen Falls, N.Y. At 6'8 and 220 pounds he is physically commanding of respect to the extent that he was also heavily recruited to play football by Houston, SMU and the Big Ten to name a few.

"His playing football," sayd Leaman, "is one of the main reasons that many schools who wanted him as a basketball player were scared off. Here at UMass he'll be punting for Dick MacPherson in the fall." (He averaged almost 45 yards a punt).

Town's notoriety as a basketball prospect was not confined to just the Glen Falls area. Even though "he was far enough off the beaten track for us to have a chance at him" explained Leaman he was still the target of Maryland, Tennessee, Kentucky and a number of other heavies.

As a matter of fact when Lefty Driesell, coach of the "Weber State of the East", made one of his multi-junkets to Glens Falls, Town almost deposited UMass right out of the picture with a 49 point, 29 rebound, eight assist performance. And it was termed an average night.

UMass found Town on a routine scouring mission at a Christmas tournament in Albany. "We had heard something about him," said Fan Gaudette, Leaman's assistant and the first to witness the future. "And I'll tell you, after seeing him play we didn't realize how good he really was. After watching him I knew right then that he was the best kid that we could possibly recruit."

Due to his commitments with the jayvee program, Gaudette turned the future over to UMass' entrepreneur of recruiting Ray Wilson who applied the coup de grace. "Fan called me right after he saw Town and said I should have a look at him," Wilson recalls.

"Not only did I agree with him, but I also thought that he was the best that I'd seen, period, this year and I'm just glad that he's coming with us and we won't have to contend with him in the future." From Ray Wilson this is THE stamp of approval.

You're probably asking yourself by now why Jim Town chose UMass over the rest. He visited the Cage during the basketball season, not before, not after—a plus. He didn't have to see a dirt floor and ask "huh?"

Leaman also heaps a great deal of the credit on Wilson, who is probably the best recruiter in the country. He also owes maybe a couple of season's tickets to the UMass community.

"In Jim's one trip to UMass he hit it off great with our school and our people," Leaman said. "He spoke with captain Tom McLaughlin. Charlie Peters and his SAE fraternity were just super. But the clincher might have been when Town's parents hit it off with Peters' parents."

It is expected that Town will start at forward along side Al Skinner and John Murphy come next season. It is expected, not a sure thing. "He definitely fills our needs up front," said Leaman. "He's as physical if not more so than Charlie Peters and he has the agility of Tom Austin while also being able to shoot extremely well from the outside."

Olsen, Allegrezza Give Nine Sweep

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The UMass baseball squad returned from a doubleheader at Hanover, New Hampshire victoriously last night, but just barely. The Minutemen hitters were dormant for all but one inning of the twinbill and Dartmouth's hurlers pitched better than expected. The result was a pair of close victories to the tune of 2-1 and 9-6.

A crowd of about 150 filed into Red Rolfe Field and they watched spotty pitching performances which for the most part were quite good.

The first game pitted John Olsen for UMass against the Green's Sam Irving. Both hurlers had problems in the third inning (when all three runs were scored) but otherwise held the opposition hitters at bay for the entire seven inning contest.

Olsen had problems with his control in the third inning, but Coach Dick Bergquist let the right-hander dig himself out of his own grave. He did so fashionably (striking out two men with the bases full) and went on to post his fourth victory against two defeats while chucking a four-hitter.

Sam Irving had his best outing in a Dartmouth uniform as he changed his speeds very effectively in fooling the UMass hitters up and down the lineup. He gave up both runs in the third inning; with one out, Ron Beaurivage walked. Mike Flannagan, (playing the outfield when he's not on the mound) followed with a double up the gap in right-center field, Beaurivage tearing around the bases to score from first.

With two out, Mark Palau lined a single to right to score Flannagan, with what proved to be the game winning run. Irving allowed five hits overall in the six innings he worked.

Craig Allegrezza started the nightcap for the UMass nine and pitched well in the five innings he worked, as well as belting a three-run homer to ignite an eight-run rally in the fourth. Allegrezza gave up 4 runs and 5 hits (three of the runs were unearned, accountable to three infield miscues.)

"Wild man" Dave Highmark started for the Green. Highmark walked three batters in the first inning, but thanks to some errant base-running, he left the mound without giving up a run. He breezed until the fourth inning (with a 1-0 lead) when the roof fell in on Dartmouth's upset hopes. Highmark went to the showers after Allegrezza's three-run shot over the fence in right center. On came Bob Smith for Dartmouth to give UMass four more runs. Beaurivage got one run home with a double, Newell followed with a long double to deep right to score two, and Collins finished the scoring off with a sacrifice fly to left.

Down 8-1, Dartmouth began picking away, getting one more in the fourth and two in the fifth to close the gap to 8-4.

Tom White came in to pitch in the bottom of the sixth. The Green hacked away at Tom for two runs in the sixth, but White regained his confidence and ended the game with a blaze of glory as he struck out the side in the seventh to save the victory for Allegrezza.

Ferber Leads Netmen Past UConn

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

The Yankee Conference tennis championships this weekend just might have a clear favorite. Consider yesterday's thrashing. Host UMass handled UConn with relative ease, defeating them 5-1 (three doubles matches were rained out). Against two other-conference foes (Vermont and Rhode Island) UMass similarly limited their opposition to but one point. The netmen from Amherst could be in for a weekend of easy picking.

Especially impressive in yesterday's triumph was the fact that UConn is said to be the number two team behind UMass in the conference. With three three-setters highlighting the Minutemen victory, UMass should have the necessary momentum going into the conference championships.

The home team jumped to a quick 1-0 lead as Captain Steve Ferber, playing his most impressive match to date, stroked his way to a 6-2, 6-0 win at third singles.

Gary Ney, at fourth position, followed with a two-set win, (6-4, 6-3) after which Fred Braley (at sixth) and Don Douglas (at fourth) gave UMass an insurmountable 4-0 lead. Douglas' match was the first of the three setters, as the home victor captured set three 6-2.

Ahead 4-1 minutes later, UMass looked to Ted Donahue, their number one singles man, for that fifth and clinching point. Look you shall receive is what Donahue's teammates did, as UMass' number one man upped the host's season record to 5-1.

From the Huskies to the Eagles, UMass takes on B.C. this afternoon at 1:30. One thing is quite certain with regard to today's visitors, B.C. is a much improved club from that of last year's. Indications of this sort derive from their strong showings against Amherst and M.I.T.

With all the talk of clay courts and home court advantages, none will play a part today. This stems from the fact that B.C. practice's on hard courts that are nearly identical to the surface upon which the Minutemen play.

Today's clear choice is UMass, as Coach Steve Kosakowski will feature an identical lineup featuring "The seven from heaven." Donahue, Robert Schpeiser, Ferber, Ney, Douglas, Braley are the singles men, with Donahue and Douglas at first doubles, Schpeiser and Mike Phillipp at second, and Ferber and Braley at third.

With two remaining home matches against tremendously inferior quality teams, B.C. will be the Minutemen's last home match against a formidable team. So catch the netmen while you can. That's 1:30 near Goodell.

Tracksters Fall To "Strong" Green

By WALT POWERS

Bill Gillin looked exasperated. He'd just ran the fastest mile of his career. "When you run a 4.12 in a dual meet and finish third, something isn't right," he said. His Coach, Ken O'Brien, wasn't too happy either. His trackmen had just lost to strong Dartmouth squad at Llewellyn Derby Track by a score of 86 1/2-67 1/2, and but for losses in a couple of key events, it could have been a completely different story.

The day was mild and overcast, an almost perfect afternoon for running, and it saw both schools establish new school and track records. Dartmouths unheralded Paul Norman set a new Dartmouth record in the 440, beating Steve Levine and breaking Paul Horrigans old track record in the process. Randy Thomas, a sophomore, ran the first sub-nine minute two mile in UMass history. He started fast, kept a smooth, steady pace, burned up the seventh lap, and coasted to an easy victory. "I knew all along that I had a sub-nine minute pace, and my only problem came on the last two laps, when I had nobody to push me." said an unexcited Thomas.

As expected, Dartmouth clobbered UMass in the weight events, by a score of 28-8. The Minutemen returned the favor, trouncing the Big Green 39-6 in the long jumps and sprints. This was also expected.

Nobody expected what occurred in the first two events of the meet, though, and that's where the turning point came. Coach Ken O'Brien had this analysis:

"The first two events of the meet were the 440 relay and the mile. We figured to win both of them. Momentum is important in track, and to beat Dartmout, we needed to get off to a fast start."

"A half hour before the meet, our 440 anchor man had to withdraw because of mononucleosis. We lost that race on the anchor leg by three tenths of a second. In the mile, Dartmouth's Ted Krol and Ed Spinney ran alot faster than I thought they would. Had the results been reversed, it would have meant a difference of eighteen points. Dartmouths winning margin was nineteen. We lost a lot of momentum in those first two events," added O'Brien.

Women Netsters Roll Over Keene State

By MDC STAFF

The UMass women's tennis team came within one match of a sweep in yesterday's opener against Keene State in Keene, N.H. The Minutewomen won both doubles and five of the six singles matches on route to a convincing victory over the host team.

Diane Green, Ronnie Sanders, Muffie Trafton, and Karen Dexter, the Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5 singles players won easily, defeating their opponents in straight sets. The No. 2 doubles team of Karen Wellesley and Iris Sanekoff was also victorious in straight sets while No. 1 doubles, Kathy Wrona and Patty Heslam won by default. The only UMass loss of the afternoon came at third singles where Ann Foley was defeated, 4-6, 6-8.

The next outing for the women's tennis team will be on May 1, when they host 5-College rival Smith College.

Bill Ballou

Keep Your Concert Hall

There's a guy I know who delights in cutting down the American League while he sings the praises of his adopted National League.

I can back the lines about the quality of play being better, the fans coming in larger numbers, the baseball played being more exciting.

But I can't buy his argument about National League ballparks. He says they're beautiful; I say they're sterile and artificial.

In fact, the increasing sterility of professional sport-arenas is, along with expansion, one of the few things I find undigestible about the modernization of sports.

Say what you want about the Boston Garden, Fenway Park, Yankee Stadium, The Rhode Island Auditorium, or the Eastern States Coliseum. Call them dirty, inaccessible, leaky, difficult to watch a game in or whatever. Every word of it would be true.

But I love buildings like that because they put a certain humanity into sports that in these days of artificial turf and postless rinks is all too lacking.

I pick these four New England buildings (exclude the Stadium), because I'm most familiar with them, and because all except Fenway Park are dead, dying, or terminally ill.

Take Fenway. Its left field wall makes it a tenth player. It has knocked as many pitchers out of the box as Ted Williams. Its one of the reasons why there's no such thing as a safe lead in a Red Sox home game.

How many other major league houses can you run errands for the players in? At Fenway all you've got to do is sit behind the bullpen and before long you're running down for peanuts for Sparky Lyle or Don Newhauser.

What about the Garden, which despite its decadence holds many fond memories. How many other hockey teams have a second balcony, let alone a Gallery Gods section? How many Stanley Cups have been won in 95 degree heat like the one in 69-70? Where else does the organist have to move during the periods so the guys in back of him can see.

So maybe the Garden's a pain in the ass sometimes. It never can be accused of being dull.

The one I'm most familiar with is the old Rhode Island Auditorium in Providence, ex-home of the Providence Reds. The Auditorium was cold, dirty, and leaked in wet weather. A game lasted at least three hours because of the delays in fixing the glass, doors to benches, boards, and you-name-it.

Yet it was a hockey building.

When you walked into it you knew you were going to see a hockey game, not a concert.

They built a new Civic Center in Providence which opened last October and it's the epitome of class. It has the carpeting, the theater-type seats, the restaurant. But it's a concert hall not an arena for hockey, and the fans are different. They're quieter, less brutal in their criticism of players, more orderly. It isn't as much fun to watch a hockey game there as it was in the old place.

The best example of how much a building meant to fans is Springfield.

The Eastern States Coliseum is a small, but clean and comfortable old building in West Springfield, which is easy to get to and is surrounded by acres of free parking. The Springfield Kings played there until this season when they moved into the ultra-modern Civic Center in downtown Springfield.

Well, the Kings, who had been averaging around 95 per cent of capacity in the Coliseum, or 5600, found themselves drawing 3300 in the Civic Center and trying to get out of their lease.

The Civic Center has been called too hot, the ice too soft, inaccessible, and a lousy hockey building. But what it is is sterile.

So, you can have Three Rivers Stadium, and Schaefer Stadium, the Spectrum and the Fabulous Forum. And I hope you enjoy your concert.

I think I'll stick to hockey.

Golfers Best AIC, UConn

By MDC STAFF

The UMass golf team defeated AIC and UConn yesterday in a tri-match at the Hickory Ridge Country Club.

The match was conducted under the rules of medal play, where the winner is decided on total strokes with only the top five scores of each team being counted. UMass, with seven golfers in the 70's easily topped the field with 377 total strokes, compared to 410 for AIC and 415 for Connecticut. The medalist (low scorer) in the match, was UMass' Joe Artman, who finished with a one-over par 73.

The golfers are now 8-2 on the season and, according to coach Fan Gaudette "are playing very well". Sights are now set on the Yankee Conference Championships to be played at the Pleasant Valley Country Club in Sutton, Mass. this weekend. If the Minutemen do well there, there is a possibility of being invited to the national championships, to be held this year in Houston, Texas. Gaudette confided that "there were several scouts at our last match who were talking seriously about UMass being invited to compete in the nationals." If the UMass golf team can continue its fine play and capture the YanCon championship rumor could very well be turned into fact.

Bill Baird who spoke to an overflow crowd last night in Southwest, is shown above with his now infamous contraceptive display.

Chasm: Baird vs. SW Assembly

By BOB SCHEIER

Birth control advocate Bill Baird came to UMass yesterday and gave two speeches on birth control and abortion without harassment or interruption, despite telephoned threats that he would be castrated if he came to campus.

However, disputes over comments allegedly made by members of the Southwest Women's Center to Baird, and his answers to them, resulted in his calling for a suspension of funds for the Women's Center.

The dispute also led one of the two groups sponsoring his visit—the Southwest Assembly—to disassociate itself from his activities.

During the course of the afternoon, an interview Baird was conducting with a Springfield television station was interrupted by students rocking a nearby car and yelling obscenities at Baird, in an apparent attempt to stop the taping of the interview.

Baird had called some parts of the Women's Liberation movement "sick" after some members of the center had reportedly said they opposed Baird speaking on abortion and birth control because he was a man.

Members of the center claimed they had been misquoted by the Collegian in the statments and one claimed a Collegian reporter and photographer had goaded them into making the statements.

The other group sponsoring Baird's activities, the Pre-Law Advising Board, last night reaffirmed its sponsorhhip of Baird's activities.

Baird gave two speeches in the Resource Center of Hampden Dining Commons describing his fight to change anti- abortion and anti-birth control laws, and also showed a film about an abortion to a total of about 400 persons.

He also displayed various forms of birth control, and various methods used by amateur abortionists, which could result in injury or death. These included coat hangers, pencils, and solutions made from bleach or soap.

Baird repeatedly criticized members of the Women's Liberation movement who he said had refused to support him when he was facing arrest for his challenges to birth control and abortion laws.

He also said a birth control clinic he runs in Hempstead, New York, defied the law for five years by offering abortions to women when no women would take the same risk.

Under a Supreme Court decision earlier this year, the decision on whether a woman is to have an abortion is left to her.

Baird spoke in a converted dining room in Hampden Dining Commons while the sound of pinball machines in the lobby could be heard in the background.

He hit current sex laws making it illegal to perform various sexual acts, and claimed a "religious minority" (the Roman Catholic Church) had imposed its views on sex and abortion on the country.

Baird also predicted that the country would lose its current abortion law by a constitutional amendment "if people don't awake to the power of the Roman Catholic Church."

After the showing of the first film on abortion, he told a hushed audience "I will never get pregnant. I'm not fighting for Bill Baird, I'm fighting for you."

"I hope the day will come when we can recruit students as paramedics to learn how to fit diaphgragms and perform abortions," he continued.

According to Baird, the telephoned threats of castration had come to his office in New York over the weekend, from someone who claimed she was a student at UMass.

Baird said he was upset by the disassociation of the Student Assembly, because it was the first time in ten years he had been attacked by anyone besides the Catholic Church.

Carmichael Opposes Capitalistic System

By DON BISHOP

Stokely Carmichael, prominent spokesman for unity among black people and revolutionary Pan-Africanism, assured an overflow crowd in the Student Union Ballroom of the ultimate triumph of the Marxian socialist system over the "vicious, backward system" of European and American capitalism.

While primarily directing himself to a discussion of the doctrine of Pan-Africanism and the international unity of all peoples of African descent, Carmichael talked at length about these political doctrines and made clear his support of all revolutionary struggles against capitalism. These struggles included "that of the Vietnamese people" and the Palestinian one against the "illegal, Zionist state of Israel."

The 33-year-old Carmichael had been invited to UMass by the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies as this year's first speaker in a series of Dubois memorial lectures.

Carmichael proposed that his "scientifically principled" revolution for this country was necessary, due to the fact that the present capitalistic foundation of American society was "rotten to the core" and had to be replaced by a new and better system.

He stated that America's backward system of capitalism was based on the wrong value system: accumulation of wealth. Under scientific socialism, this would be replaced by a new value system based on the "intrinsic wealth of man."

A world revolution of socialism was an inevitable fact according to Carmichael because the inherent contradictions in capitalism would lead to its inevitable fall.

Carmichael de-bunked the capitalist theories of equality of opportunity and conflict of interest while stating that with socialism, there is no conflict of interest, rather the individual "works for the system and builds the nation."

He added that while this country was spiralling to its doom, it was reaching out to exploit the peoples of the non- European world. And yet, to Carmichael, "the peoples of the world are rising up to defeat capitalism; just witness the victory of the Vietnamese people."

As a spokesman for Pan-Africanism, Carmichael advocated "the unification of black peoples according to scientific principle."

He stated that black men all over the globe suffer from three things. These were: firstly, his non-possession of any land, secondly, his being a victim of the "vicious" capitalist system and thirdly, his being a victim of racism.

Pan-Africanism provides a solution to all of these problems according to Carmichael. Firstly, it seeks to take African land away from the control of "European imperialists" and place it in "the hands of those who it belongs to—black Americans."

Secondly, through its advancement of scientific socialism, Pan-Africanism would solve the problem of racism by giving black people the necessary "power" to deal with it. Carmichael indicated that this would be done through a uniting of the power that already exists in black communities in the U.S. with that of the black communities in other parts of this hemisphere and the developing "black power" of African nations.

Carmichael went on to say that "as a united black people there is

Nick Apostola, the newly elected President of the Student Senate, raises a point of order. (Gee, he looks the same as he did before he became President.)

Apostola Sworn In, RSO-SA Refunded

By STEPHEN FINE

The Recognized Student Organization-Student Activities Office (RSO—SA) was refunded last night by the Student Senate.

The move came after Nick Apostola, the new Student Government Association (SGA) President announced that Chancellor Bromery had rescinded his veto to transfer Student Activities Office funds from the Campus Center to the Student Senate. The refunding of the RSO—SA office now gives the Senate total control of the Student Activities Staff.

In other business the Senate swore in Nick Apostola as the new SGA President, voted to form an ad-hoc committee to study new parking rates, passed the budgets of the Union of Third World Women, Room to Move, Harambe, and Imani and voted to freeze the budgets of the Committee on Poverty and Ski Club for mismanagement of funds.

The Senate voted to refund the RSO—SA office after Apostola said that he met with Chancellor Bromery yesterday afternoon, and "after careful consideration he reversed his veto".

Bromery had vetoed to transfer of the funds last week on the recommendations of Vice-Chancellor Gage, and Vice-Chancellor Campion.

Gage had said at a Senate meeting last week he was afraid that some people behind the original motion to transfer (RSO—SA) funding were going to eliminate certain people from the Student Activities Staff.

Paul Hamel, Treasurer of the Senate, said Bromery's decision was more sensitive to student needs, and gave students greater control of their lives. The Student Activities Staff function is to help program movies, and special events for RSO groups.

The Ad Hoc Committee to Study New Parking Fees, was formed after confusion developed when Senator Rick Savini reported on the effects of the increased parking rates.

Savini said that the commuters may have a $75 fee because faculty were going to park in the cheapest lots. "The Faculty are not going to park in Whitmore for $75 when they can pay $36 in lot #10," he said.

The major provisions of the new parking proposal for the fall of 1973 include making the present $5.00 registration fee applicable only to those who park in areas farthest from the center of campus. A series of concentric circles will then determine higher registration service fees for parking spaces which were more close to campus. These parking lot spaces would cost $24.00, $36.00, $48.00, $60.00 and $75.00 each.

Registration for Lot #1, near Whitmore, would cost $75.00. Assignment to parking lot would be done by computer.

Elliot Sherman, a senator who served on the committee that made the recommendations along with faculty, and University employees, said the biggest problems he saw with the plan was the fee residents would have to pay for overnight parking and the fee in general.

AAUP Elects Officers, Collective Bargaining Status Discussed

By MARK B. CITRON

Nineteen members of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) sat for 25 minutes last night waiting for the 20-member quorum necessary to hold a meeting. After a search, a member was found and the meeting went on to elect a full slate of officers and discuss progress of their collective bargaining status with the administration.

Cadwell Ray, newly elected President, said he couldn't understand the administration's "polarization of the faculty over collective bargaining." Ray concurred with a member's attack on the "divisive attempts of the administration to set those wanting collective bargaining as adversaries" against the rest of the faculty.

The controversy stems from what the AAUP feels is a stalling tactic of the administration over the unionization issue. Recognition as faculty collective bargaining agents rests on faculty's endorsement by authorization and designation cards (A and D Cards), which are submitted to the State Labor Relations Board. The AAUP and UMass chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) filed separate A and D Cards, but have now joined forces as the sole collective bargaining agents, called MSP/AAUP. The University administration has raised an objection, and now the cards must be re-filed under the joint MSP/AAUP title.

Ray said this means a final decision on collective bargaining in the Fall, but feels the "stall can only help us." Ray went on to say the summer interim would give them more time to organize and, coupled with the "administration's anti-campaign could only drive members toward us."

The anti-campaign was referred to earlier in the meeting by Ray in stating the "administration has given directives to department heads to not co-operate in setting up meetings of AAUP/MSP members."

Meanwhile, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern also said last night that he sent academic department heads a statement asking them not to call department meetings to discuss faculty unionization at the request of any union groups.

In a memo dated April 19th to deans, directors, department heads and chairmen, Gluckstern said such action "might cause the university to violate state labor laws."

Gluckstern said that the memo "does not prevent the department from deciding to hold a meeting" as long as the meeting is not at the request of a union group.

"A department head may not respond to requests by the MSP to come in and talk," Gluckstern said, adding, "we're not saying that departments can't discuss this thing."

Professor Larry Roberts as co-campaign coordinator of the MSP/AAUP was quoted yesterday as saying that the MSP may seek legal action as a result of the memo.

Gluckstern said that the memo was sent because state labor law prohibits managerial employees-like department heads-from assisting or promoting labor organizations.

The question whether department heads and chairmen should be classified outside of the faculty was discussed at the AAUP meeting. An AAUP member said, "Chairmen and department heads are faculty who have administrative duties."

Another member upheld this position by saying "in 9 units of higher education in the State of Massachusetts, the department heads and chairmen are considered part of the faculty unit." The units here refer to established collective bargaining units.

Ray said, "the administration is probably attempting a delay in forcing the MSP/AAUP to argue over each assistant or head as members of unit or not."

Ray has been surprised by 2 things in his work with the AAUP and collective bargaining: that the faculty has been as easy to organize as it has–the (negative) attitude of the administration. Ray added that he felt that the local administration was not at the heart of the problems, but speculated that policy was being set elsewhere.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said that he wants to insure that a referendum election, when it is held, is completely "above boards" and "uncontestable" so that "we won't have to go through this thing more than once."

The newly elected officers, aside from Ray, were:

V.P.-Loren Beth (Poll. Sci.)
Secretary-William Price (Speech)
Treasurer-Anthony Gawienowski (Biochem.)
Chairperson, Program Committee-William Connolly (Pol. Sci.)
Chairperson, Representation Committee-Stanley Young (Management)
Chairperson, Welfare Committee-Karen Johnson (Nursing)
At-Large Members, Exec. Committee-Joseph Larson (Forest. and Wild. Mgt.) and Stephen Michael (Mgt.)
Interim Members, MSP/AAUP Exec. Board-J. Burroughs (Hum. Development), C. Ray (Econ.) and S. Young (Mgt.)

Mississippi: Still Rising

By MIKE DUFFY
Associated Press Writer

Torrential spring rains have swollen the mighty Mississippi River to some of its highest levels in recorded history and created a 1,500-mile stretch of soggy farmland and flooded homes.

Thousands of families from just below the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico have been forced to flee their homes, millions of acres of rich farmland are fit for nothing more than rice paddies and damage estimates grow by the millions of dollars each day.

The National Weather Service says the highest crest in some 200 years of record-keeping at St. Louis—43.5 feet, or 13.5 feet above flood stage—is expected sometime Saturday. The record crest had been predicted for Thursday, but a spokesman said breaks in upriver levees drained off some of the rushing water and delayed the crest.

Illinois Gov. Daniel Walker on Wednesday estimated damage to his state alone at $50 million and officials set a similar figure for the damage in Missouri.

On the other end of the river system, Mississippi River Commission officials estimated damage to Louisiana and Mississippi at well over $100 million.

The current flood situation is the second onslaught of the Mississippi and its tributaries this spring, and officials say only the elaborate system of levees has prevented the flooding from producing even greater disasters in property damage and loss of human life.

The vast flood of 1927 killed 214 persons. At least eight persons have died in the current floods.

The Mississippi River begins modestly enough in northern Minnesota and, as it joins its tributaries, forms a massive valley of water that drains a total of 31 states and cuts the country in half.

With the normal volume of water flowing past St. Louis at an impressive 200,000 cubic feet per second, the rate has risen to a phenomenal 1.1 million cubic feet per second. It will take weeks for the crest to ride down the Mississippi and weeks more for water to drain off and allow life to return to normal in hundreds of communities along the river.

A picture of conditions along the river, from north to south, follows:

The American Red Cross said Wednesday an estimated 8,300 families in 25 counties along the Mississippi and Missouri rivers in Missouri and Illinois have been "seriously affected" by the floods this week.

The high waters begin as far north as Rock Island, Ill. At Quincy, Ill., Civil Defense officials predicted a Thursday crest of 29.5 feet, more than 12 feet above flood level. But a spokesman said the sandbagged and reinforced levee system guarding the area was expected to hold.

Len DeCaux:

Trend Is Progressive

By SHARON HUGHES

"The enemy of the working class is no longer competitive immigrant labor, but multinational corporations which build plants in foreign countries with American capital and put laborers out of work. "Those multinational brigands go wherever they can make money regardless of American worker's jobs;" said long-time labor activist Len De Caux in a Collegian interview yesterday afternoon. De Caux was a classical scholar at Oxford before serving in the British Army during World War I. He said that the war made him a radical.

"I viewed the war as a brutal example of imperialist warfare where only the profiteers got anything out of it. My revulsion compelled me to emigrate to the U.S. and join the working class," he said.

In 1921, De Caux arrived in America and worked as a laborer in lumber, highway, and railroad construction and organized migrant workers for the I.W.W. (Industrial Workers of the World). He also helped organize the CIO (Congress of Industrial Organizations) in 1935 and was hired by John L. Lewis as CIO's publicity chief.

De Caux recalled the cold war purges of labor radicals (he was a victim) in the 50's saying, "It was a hysterical campaign of anti-communism comparable to Hitler's anti-semitism."

The United States emerged drom World War II as the richest, the most well armed and the most powerful country in the world and for that reason there never existed a threat of alleged communists taking over American institutions, he said.

"Still, you couldn't turn on the radio, open a paper or go to church without hearing anti-communist propaganda," said De Caux.

He continued, "It was perhaps the most complete campaign of suppression in history."

De Caux attributed the vulnerability of the left and the eventual decline of radicalism in the 50's to McCarthyism. However, he noted additional reasons for the decline including opportunistic attitudes of union leaders due to the initial success of unionism.

Calling himself an optimist, De Caux sees a "progressive trend developing in the world."

"Where popular movements never stood a chance in the 50's against U.S. military domination and the CIA, Cuba and Chile have had successful revolutions in the 60's," he said.

Despite an observable decline in student activism on college campuses, De Caux said he noted an increase in working class students seriously studying radical politics. Also, he sees a trend toward the liberalization of union policies due to what he called a "spilling over effect of the youth revolt."

As an example of progressive union change, De Caux cited the overthrow of Tony Boyle and his administrative slate by Arnold Miller and the rank and file slate in a recent United Mine Worker's presidential election.

"The history of labor has been one of conflict and contention. First between craft and industrial unions and now between rank and file and administrative policies of established unions," he said. "Rank and file leaders are now trying to decentralize union structure," he said.

Paul Jennings:

A Rough Road Ahead

By BILL DENSMORE

A national trade union leader and member of the AFL—CIO National Executive Board, which George Meany heads, criticized President Nixon last night saying his performance on social issues and Watergate is inadequate.

Paul Jennings, president of the 400,000-member International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (IEU), AFL—CIO told a group of students and professors from the campus Labor Relations Center, "what was involved in the Watergate was far beyond the bugging."

"They started it a year before the election because they were frightened and Nixon was frightened because there was no Democratic candidate that didn't have him beat—and beat by an awful lot," Jennings said.

Jennings' union was one of the first to support George McGovern for President during last fall's election even after the Executive Committee he is a member of decided to remain neutral in the election.

But despite his general support for the Democratic party Jennings said that "at the moment" he is not satisfied with the leadership in Congress, although "there will be a lot of good guys moving in."

"When you have this kind of a crazy, arrogant cynical approach by the people in power it's important to get it out in the open," Jennings said.

He said Nixon must have known of the Watergate and other bugging incidents because of his self-proclaimed tight reins over election campaigns.

"The men who did it did it with him knowing it," Jennings said, adding, "he took crime on the streets and moved it into the White House."

The union leader called for a coalition of union, liberal and student leaders to "structure the kind of society that we know is right."

But, he cautioned, "we have a rough road ahead with this guy in the White House, and we have a rough road ahead with the associates around him."

Jennings criticized U.S. "multi-national" corporations because of their preference for overseas manufacturing and lack of concern for "their own society"—the United States—over social issues.

"It's amazing these companies—they show responsibility to nothing except the buck," he said, adding "every other country imports workers; we export jobs."

He said that Nixon's promises to balance the federal budget, increase welfare payments and purge crime from the streets have largely gone unfulfilled.

"The American worker is being frozen into a situation and the fella on the top has an absolutely free ride," he said.

"It used to be that 5% unemployment was called a problem—now they say they're gonna live with it," he added.

"There are too many people that can't get on welfare because of the approach of the man in the White House," he said, calling Nixon "just responsible to the corporations."

Jennings concluding by urging students to "work within the Democratic party" because "we have the ability and we have the financial muscle to structure the kind of society that we know is right."

nothing we cannot do." Through a "re-interpretation of history," emphasizing the positive contributions of black peoples and the fact that "as a people" we have fought and will continue to fight the white man's exploitation", a successful outcome to the "revolutionary struggle" will be achieved.

Carmichael concluded his loudly applauded speech by stating: "There is no possible way an unjust cause will triumph over a just one. If the comparatively small number of Vietnamese people could do what they did in Vietnam, then 1 billion united blacks will trample America into an oblivion of whiteness."

Some exception was taken at the conclusion of Carmichael's speech to his stand against what he termed the "illegal and immoral" state of Israel. In response to a question from the audience, Carmichael re-affirmed his anti-Israel stand.

When a man in the audience stated: "Israel belongs to the Jews." Carmichael responded: "Yes, just like America belongs to the whites."

Carmichael is the former Chairman of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and an early spokesman for the development of "black power". He now resides in Guinea, and is actively engaged in the All African Peoples Party.

Saigon, Viet Cong Hold Conflicting Settlement Proposals

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—The Saigon government and the Viet Cong handed each other sharply conflicting proposals Wednesday for a final political settlement in South Vietnam.

Each side quickly rejected the key provisions of the other side's plan and acknowledged failure to meet the Friday deadline set by the Paris cease-fire accord for settlement of the political stalemate.

For the first time since the talks opened March 19, the two sides failed to set a date for their next meeting. Representating the two sides are Saigon's deputy premier, Nguyen Luu Vien, and Minister of State Nguyen Van Hieu of the Viet Cong.

But the United States and North Vietnam agreed meanwhile that Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi Politburo member Le Duc Tho will meet in Paris in mid-May to discuss violations of the cease-fire provisions they formulated in their secret negotiations last winter.

Deputy Asst. Secretary of State William L. Sullivan and Hanoi's deputy foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach, who also played a major role in drafting the Kissinger-Tho agreement, were scheduled to meet Friday, presumably to prepare for the new Kissinger-Tho talks.

Ever since the Paris agreement was signed Jan. 27, the parties have accused each other almost daily of violating its provisions.

The United States and South Vietnam have accused the Communist side of continuing massive infiltration of troops and arms into South Vietnam. In protest, President Nixon last week suspended economic aid talks with Hanoi and halted removal from North Vietnamese waters of the American mines planted there during U.S. attacks against North Vietnam.

Throughout the first seven sessions of their political talks, Nieu and Vien remained deadlocked on their agenda and never even began a discussion of substance. At Wednesday's eighth session, they bypassed the agenda dispute and simultaneously presented their rival plans for South Vietnam's political future.

The 10-point plan presented by Vien and the six-point plan presented by Hieu in essence restated each side's long-standing position, although there were changes of emphasis in the two plans indicating possible minute moves toward compromise.

The Saigon plan for the first time dropped the insistence that future elections must be held within the framework of the existing constitution. South Vietnamese spokesman Nguyen Trieu Dan said the elections would establish an "organism" that would be free to change the constitution as it wished.

The Viet Cong plan for the first time hinted that the Communist side might be willing to discuss withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces from South Vietnam—but only after all Communist conditions have been met and elections have been held under the auspices of a national council of reconciliation.

But the Saigon plan maintained that North Vietnamese forces must withdraw before elections can be held. It proposed a precise timetable for a political settlement, including the restoration by May 27 of democratic freedoms restricted "because of the state of war."

U.S., No. Viets To Negotiate In Paris Sessions

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States and North Vietnam have agreed to hold new direct negotiations in Paris beginning Friday on the faltering Vietnam cease-fire agreement.

Initial sessions will be held between William N. Sullivan, a deputy assistant secretary of state, and Nguyen Co. Thach, vice minister for foreign affairs in the Hanoi government.

Kissinger in May

Barring unforeseen developments, they will be followed in mid-May with talks between Henry A. Kissinger, the national security adviser to President Nixon, and North Vietnamese Polit buro member Le Duc Tho.

The Sullivan-Thach meetings were announced simultaneously yesterday morning at the White House and the North Vietnamese Embassy in Paris. Later, Charles W. Bray, a State Department spokesman, said the diplomatic move was initiated by the United Statee "as part of an effort to bring the agreement as a whole back into an effective force."

Grave Violations

In a formal note two weeks ago, North Vietnam accused the United States and South Vietnam of "grave violations" of the Jan. 27 agreement, including military thrusts at areas in the South under Viet Cong control.

The United States responded last weekend with a note charging Hanoi and "its agents" with several serious breaches, including a clandestine buildup of supplies and 300,000 troops in South Vietnam.

Elsewhere in Indochina, the United States has accused Hanoi of illegally supporting insurgents against the governments of Cambodia and Laos, while North Vietnam has criticized U. S. bombing operation in the two countries.

Review of Agreement

Ronald L. Ziegler, the White House press secretary, said the purpose of the Sullivan-Thach talks is "to prepare a review of the agreement and of appropriate measures to bring about the strict implementation of the agreement."

U.S. officials said, meanwhile, that if Hanoi shows that it intends to observe all provisions of the agreement, the Navy will resume minesweeping operations in North Vietnamese waters and delegate Maurice Williams will be sent back to Paris to continue discussions with North Vietnam on the economic reconstruction of the country. Both minesweeping and reconstruction aid are required under the agreemnt.

In Paris, South Vietnam dimmed as Saigon and the Viet Cong presented radically different proposals at the eighth session of their deadlocked talks.

Both sides called for new elections, but there was wide divergence on the details. The 90-day deadline for reaching agreement on political issues expires Friday.

FDA Bans All DES in Cattle, Sheep

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Food and Drug Administration Wednesday banned all use of the drug DES in beef cattle and sheep because it said illegal residues continue to be detected in edible tissue.

The agency said alternative growth-promoting products are available to avoid another meat price increase. But the Agriculture Department and cattle producers predicted the ban will cost retail beef prices by several hundred million dollars a year.

The FDA said its action was based on new USDA tests which detected residues of DES or diethylstilbestrol in livers and kidneys of animals slaughtered 120 days after the synthetic estrogen was implanted in their ears. The use of DES in animal feed has been illegal since Jan. 1.

DES has caused cancer in laboratory animals and has been linked to vaginal cancer in the daughters of women who took it during pregnancy.

The FDA recently announced, however, that it will approve the use of DES as a "morning after" birth control pill for short-term use by women who did not take precautions before sexual intercourse.

"It's nothing short of tragic the announcement by the FDA that DES as a morning after pill is safe for humans, it's unsafe because of infintesimal quanitities having been found in beef livers," said C. W. McMillan, vice president of the American National Cattlemen's Association.

"A person would have to consume several thousand pounds of liver daily to get the equivalent DES in one of the morning after pills," he said.

The association, representing about 250,000 beef cattle producers predicted the ban would boost retail meat prices eight cents a pound or roughly $1.8 billion a year.

Acting FDA Commissioner Sherwin Gardner, in announcing the new action, said a number of other livestock growth drugs are available to producers.

The FDA earlier had estimated that an animal given DES reaches the market weight of 1,000 pounds 35 days sooner on 500 pounds less feed.

Most feedlot operators switched to more troublesome implants after DES feed additives were banned, McMillan said. Alternative drugs are much more expensive than DES which costs only about 50 cents per animal, he added.

Highly sensitive USDA tests involving radioactive tracers confirmed DES levels ranging from .04 parts per billion from a half dose to .12 from a full dose, the FDA said. Federal law prohibits the use of any carcinogenic animal drug if residues are detected in edible portions.

Gov't Orders Trace On E.H. Hunt Cash

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Federal Reserve System was asked by government investigators to trace money carried by the wife of Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt when she died last year.

Authorities found $10,000 in $100 bills in Mrs. Hunt's purse after she was killed Dec. 8 in a Chicago airline crash.

Her husband said at the time that the money was intended for investment in a motel. Mrs. Hunt has been quoted as saying shortly before the crash that a lawyer for the Nixon campaign was paying the couple money to remain silent about others in the case, and had urged them to invest some money to create some "ostensible source of income" to cover for their continued high standard of living. Most of the bills in Mrs. Hunt's purse were traced to New York State by their serial numbers, but the Federal Reserve determined that it wouldn't be able to trace those bills further.

The Housing Banking and Currence Committee, now no longer involved in the legislative Watergate investigation, asked to have the money traced shortly after the plane crash, according to a spokesman for the Federal Reserve System.

The Federal Reserve distributes money to commercial banks.

Sixty-three of the bills found in the Chicago accident have a serial number beginning with the letter 'B', which means they were distributed originally by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Some of the bills had consecutive serial numbers, making it unlikely that they had circulated very far before reaching Mrs. Hunt.

A spokesman for the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said in a telephone interview that, unlike in other areas, his bank does not keep track of the serial numbers on money delivered to banks in New York City.

The crash that killed Mrs. Hunt also claimed the lives of 44 other persons, including Rep. George W. Collins, D—Ill. and CBS News correspondent Michele Clark. Federal air-safety officials are still investigating the cause.

Suspicions were raised at the time of the crash that the $100 bills in Mrs. Hunt's purse had some connection with the Watergate affair. Those arrested in the Democrats' Watergate offices last June 17 carried pocketsful of $100 bills later traced to Nixon campaign contributions.

Trial testimony established that the entire bugging operation was financed with cash, much of it in $100 bills, from the Nixon campaign.

Haldeman Absent At Morning Meetings

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—H. R. Haldeman no longer presides at regular early morning meetings of senior presidential aides, but a spokesman insisted Wednesday his status as White House chief of staff is unchanged.

The regular daily meetings, which had been held since President Nixon took office, one year ago, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said in response to questions.

But Ziegler quickly added that the change in procedure isn't related to the Watergate scandal or Haldeman's possible involvement.

Haldeman had presided over the daily sessions attended by such Nixon aides as John Ehrlichman, Ziegler, Roy Ash, and George Shultz.

Ziegler said the change in procedure came because it was decided "we could be more productive . . . by meeting with individual members of the staff and with department heads in separate meetings."

During Wednesday's hour-long news briefing, Ziegler was asked about Nixon's mood as he pursues the Watergate investigation.

"He is very much concentrating on this matter . . . He is a man at work," Ziegler responded.

When asked whether Nixon was angry, outraged, or saddened by the major new developments he reported last week, Ziegler said he was "not prepared to project that type of feeling on the part of the President."

"I have seen the President involved in a number of difficult situations in the 4 1/2 years he's been in office and in each of these periods I have not detected a change in mood as such," Ziegler said.

The press secretary gave only limited responses to the barrage of questions he faced at his first briefing since last Thursday. But he said he expects he could be more responsive "at some point in the future."

Ziegler did say, in response to questions, that there has been "no change in the status of the White House staff" and that no resignations have been submitted by aides allegedly involved in the Watergate case.

WASHINGTON, WOLF AT WATERGATE GRANDJURY—Washington attorney Peter H. Wolf talks to newsmen outside U.S. District Court prior to testifying before the grand jury investigating the Watergate bugging affair. Wolf filed a petition in U.S. District Court last week stating eight cartons of documents, including plans to bug the Democratic National Committee offices, were removed from the White House complex and hidden by an unidentified employee of the Nixon campaign. Only 5.3 Million!

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Census Bureau said Wednesday it missed about 5.3 million persons in the 1970 Census, notably 7.7 per cent of the black population.

The bureau indicated that the undercount of blacks in the census was due in part to fear of census innumerators to knock on doors in the inner cities.

Officials said they have no way of estimating the undercount for individual states, cities or other jurisdictions.

However, Joseph Waksberg, associate Census Bureau director, acknowledged that much of the undercount could have occured in cities where there is a large concentration of blacks. The undercount for whites was only 1.9 per cent.

The bureau called a news conference to announce the undercount, which it said represented 2.5 per cent of the total 203.2 million residential population reported in the 1970 census.

The undercount of 5.3 million exceeded 41 state populations, but the Census Bureau's acting director, Robert L. Hagan, said it still was an improvement over the 1960 census undercount of 2.7 per cent and the 1950 undercount of 3.3 per cent.

The fact that the bureau cannot breakdown its undercount for states and cities means there will be no adjustments of population for localities. Their populations will remain based on the original 1970 census.

Census population figures are used in determining such things as congressional apportionment and allocate of revenue-sharing funds.

But Waksberg said "there is no evidence of a serious undercount anyplace that differs substantially from the over all undercount."

Other officials said the bureau received about 300 complaints following its 1970 census, but said that none justified making any recounts. Among cities that complained was Chicago.

Tokyo Train Strike

Commuters Go On Rampage

TOKYO (AP)-Japan's commuters struck again Wednesday, burning trains and tearing up local stations in a renewed outburst against a slowdown by trainmen.

Nevertheless, workers of the state-owned railroad went ahead early Thursday with a planned 72-hour, full-scale strike for better wages and pensions.

The strike was called by the 50,000-member Locomotive Engineers' Union, one of two labor organizations in the Japan National Railroads. A union committee issued a statement calling on the general public to "understand and support" the strikers.

The prestrike slowdown found little support among commuters who smashed train windows and attacked an engineer on the second day of railroad disruption.

The engineer fled after passengers dragged him from his compartment while the train was stopped at the station in Osaka, an industrial city in western Japan. Nearly 1,000 police were summoned to break up a rampage of window-smashing as the city's commuter system ground to a halt.

The slowdown was called off in Tokyo to appease angry commuters, but rail transportation in the capital remained stalled until afternoon because of damage to the system by outraged passengers Tuesday night.

Stranded or delayed on their way home, passengers had smashed train windows, signals and other facilities at about 30 Tokyo stations.

An estimated six million people in the capital alone were deprived of transportation Wednesday because of disrupted trains.

The rail slowdown and planned strike is part of the "spring struggle" organized by Japan's unions under a "Joint Spring Struggle Committee."

Following the engineer's strike, the larger National Railway Workers Union planned another 72-hour strike Friday. Postal and telecommunications workers were set to strike Thursday.

A crucial issue in the strikes is the workers' demand for recognition of the right of state employes to strike.

Faced with mounting labor problems, the government began a behind-the-scenes talks with labor and management to avert a recurrence of Wednesday's commuter rampage.

Gas Eruptions Capped

By QUANE KENYON
Associated Press Writer

WILLIAMSBURG, Mich. (AP) - The well suspected of causing natural gas eruptions in this tiny, half-evacuated community has been capped, Amoco Production Co. officials said Wednesday.

It would probably be at least three days until the danger was passed, state officials said, and precautions were still being taken to prevent and explosion.

Amoco, a subsidiary of Standard Oil of Indiana, dumped more than 1,300 barrels of heavy mud-water into the 6,200-foot well shaft Tuesday in efforts to block the gas flow. Heavier mud was used Wednesday.

Amoco official R. B. LeFever said the company has completed two 300-foot relief holes in the area but neither showed any signs of water or gas. Two other shallow relief holes were being drilled Wednesday, he said.

Amoco has denied its well is the source of the gas which has permeated the area around Williamsburg, but Department of Natural Resources and other state officials say they believe the well is responsible for the problem.

One DNR geologist said: "Gas with about 3,000 pounds per square inch pressure is coming out of that well underground. We don't know where it's going, but there's a lot of gas being built up down there."

A series of natural blowholes that began bubbling up in the area a week ago has forced the evacuation of about 250 residents of this northwestern Lower Michigan town.

State Department of Natural Resources officials said the gas eruptions started in Williamsburg three days after Amoco drillers lost control of the nearby well.

"If the gas pressure starts going down, then we know the matter is solved, and we know the Amoco well caused it," a DNR official said.

"If it doesn't," he added. "That means we have a different problem. . .I don't know what we'll do then."

He said it would probably take several weeks for the gas to stop rising up through the ground.

Residents evacuated from their homes will not be allowed back in them until all danger is over, he added.

Until then, as one official put it, walking through the town is "like walking in Transylvania. There's water and gas bubbling all around you. It's hairy."

The situation is still "about what we have expected. There's still gas bubbling out. As one blowhole subsides, others break out. It's like a bottle of ginger ale. You take the top off and the bubbles keep coming out for a long time."

Three property owners in Acme, six miles west of Williamsburg, have filed a suit in Grand Traverse Circuit Court charging the oil company with negligence in its drilling operations.

Shootin' The Waves-Raft Style

By FENTON WHEELER
Associated Press Writer

MADRID (AP)-"I am neither a women's lib advocate nor a pussy cat."

Dr. Santiago Genoves was explaining Wednesday his decision to organize a raft trip across the Atlantic with women in command and men as their subordinates.

On board will be seven women and six men, all strangers, for the three-to-six-month voyage.

Genoves, who organized the scientific expedition, said: "I decided to turn the running of the raft over to the women because they are technically prepared, and men at sea are far better than women at muscle work."

Genoves, an anthropologist who accompanied Thor Heyerdahl twice on his papyrus boat Ra expeditions, acknowledged, however, that he expects frictions among the sexes during the trip. He said it was part of the purpose of the trip to study such relationships.

Captained by a cool Swedish blone, the steel pontoon raft is scheduled to depart from the Spanish Canary Islands bound for the Americas, hopefully the Yucatan Peninsula in Mexico, sometime after next Tuesday.

Named Acali after an Aztec word meaning "house of water", the raft measures 36x20 feet with a cabin about 12 feet square and 12 feet high.

The purpose of the trip, financed by a Mexican government television channel for $160,000, is to study human behavior under controlled conditions.

Genoves introduced the crew Wednesday to newsmen. They include two Israelis, a Greek cook and a waitress from California.

The common language will be "nonverbal," said Genoves, although most of the participants can speak either French or English. All crew members will keep a diary, he said.

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - When Sharon Miles became the first woman security director at Springfield College, she says the nine men who work for her "did everything they could to make me quit."

Sharon's reaction?

"I'm retraining them. I'm teaching them that when an emergency happens you have to remain calm and impersonal. Their only problem is they weren't properly trained."

Sharon, 32, who is also a graduate student here in community leadership and development, says "an emergency to me is routine."

One of a family of police people, Sharon became the first woman on SC's security force last November. "I've walked around here with no clubs, no handcuffs for five months at night. They told me I was nuts."

Sharon says that "everybody thought it was funny" when she got the top job in early April.

"I got the treatment from the police and the students. They'd see me coming and laugh. They expected the women's libber-they had me stereotyped."

The men on the force have held their jobs three to ten years.

Sharon says she thinks the woman's touch is needed in police work. "I see my function as showing you can be sensitive yet aggressive."

Sharon says she has been combining that mixture all her life. She says part of the reason she may have such a strong need to assert her identity is that she has an identical twin sister. There are also two other girls and two boys in her family.

Sharon says she has never been married because "I have a fear of getting tied down to a lifelong commitment. Being single I don't have to cope with jealousy or possessiveness. I enjoy my freedom. I've met a lot of people who are married and don't know each other."

She also feels that "cops need courses that are taught by people who know fields like psychology and sociology, not by other cops.

A native of Pomona, Calif., Sharon is a graduate of Laverne, College in California. She has worked with delinquent girls in recreational and counseling programs, been a department store security officer, a toll collector on the George Washington Bridge in New York, a youth director for the Salvation Army, and a recreation director and house parent at the Masonic House for Children in Lovina Calif. She has also been a receptionist in a hospital emergency ward.

She says when she and her family get together they talk shop. Her brother is chief probation officer in Fresno, Calif. Her father is a retired California State Police sergeant. Her twin sister is a former policewoman in Arizona and California, and her mother is a former policewoman who guarded Barbara Graham, the convicted murderess executed in the late 1950s.

Autopsies in Mass Seen As Inadequate

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - There are no rules for the performance of autopsies in Massachusetts.

The state's medical examiner system is operating today about the same as when it was set up in 1877, some authorities say. And the belief that medical examiners perform autopsies is a myth.

Four men-forensic pathologists who specialize in criminal death-perform all the state-operated autopsies in Massachusetts.

Whenever a death is unattended, the result of obvious violence, related to occupational hazard, caused by suspected foul play or occurs within 24 hours of the time a person enters a hospital, one of the state's 144 governor-appointed examiners is called in to investigate.

State law requires that a medical examiner be "learned in the science of medicine." But he need not be a pathologist, and few medical examiners are.

If a medical examiner decides an autopsy is necessary, he usually calls in a forensic pathologist. The four perform about 800 examiner-requested autopsies a year.

"We are still operating under a medical examiner system essentially unchanged from when it was established in 1877," said Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn.

One person who is trying to change the system is Dr. Gilbert Friedell, acting head of the pathology department at the (University of Massachusetts) Medical School.

"We deserve a better system than we've got, and most people don't know how little system we have," Friedell said.

There are two big problems, he said. Not enough autopsies are done, and there is no central authority overseeing the system.

"Under the present system, using four overworked men, we miss not only homicides but also infectious diseases," Friedell said. "And we don't even know how many autopsies are or aren't being done. There are no statistics being kept."

Now, there are also no regulations or guidelines for conducting investigations and no set procedures for autopsies. The latest state statistics cover 1953-1962, Friedell said, when 141,000 deaths were investigated by medical examiners. Of these, autopsies were performed on nine per cent.

In Suffolk County, autopsies were performed in 18 per cent of the deaths investigated by medical examiners. But in some counties, the figure was as low as 3.2 per cent.

An associate medical examiner in Fall River, Dr. Gordon B. Robbins, said that of about 500 cases in his district last year, three per cent were autopsied.

"I would do more," Robbins said, "but the county just wouldn't pay for it."

Money for autopsies comes from the counties, and some are willing to spend more than others.

Oil Pollution In Chicopee

BOSTON (AP) - Uniroyal, Inc. was fined $5,000 Wednesday on a charge of illegally dumping 2,000 gallons of oil into the Chicopee River.

U. S. District Court Judge Frank J. Murray fined the New Jersey-based rubber company after it pleaded guilty to an information under the 1899 Refuse Act.

U.S. Atty. James N Gabriel said the violation occured Oct. 10.

Audience Accepts Sensational Ratings

NEW YORK (AP) - Overnight Nielsen ratings on the Ingmar Bergman teleplay "The Lie," which included a nude scene shown on the CBS network Tuesday night, indicate it was seen by 30 million Americans with "sensational" ratings in New York and Los Angeles, a network spokesman said today.

Only three stations - Knoxville, Tenn.; Burlington, Vt., and Tulsa, Okla. - notified the network in advance they were not showing the film because of a partially nude bedroom scene, the spokesman said.

He said the network was checking its affiliates by phone to find out if others canceled it.

In New York, the overnight Nielsens showed "The Lie" with a 23.6 rating and a 37 per cent share of the audience, the CBS spokesman said. NBC, showing the movie "Isadora," had an 8.4 rating and 13 per cent share. ABC, with "The Man Without a Country," had a 16.2 rating and 24 per cent share.

Bicentennial

The States Get Psyched

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England, where it all started, has begun to get just a little excited about the upcoming bicentennial of the American Revolution.

All six states have something in the works, and some of the plans are quite elaborate.

In Maine, Benedict Arnold's march through the Kennebec wilderness to Quebec will be re-enacted.

Connecticut plans to recreate the British invasion of West Haven, East Haven and New Haven.

New Hampshire will commemorate Paul Revere's ride to Portsmouth in 1774, five months before his more famous ride to Concord, Mass. New Hampshire also will commemorate the patriots raid on Fort William and Mary at New Castle.

Vermont, Rhode Island and Massachusetts are working on their own plans and projects.

Most state officials believe Boston will be the prime tourist mecca during the celebration. Massachusetts officials came to the same conclusion several months ago and revved up the to-then ponderous movement of their bicentennial commission.

The legislative leadership of the commission, set up in 1964, was changed in February, a new full-time executive director was hired and Gov. Francis W. Sargent became vocally interested in the commission's doings.

The Massachusetts commission is mainly concerned with what to do with the tourists expected to pour into the Greater Boston area where the first battles and skirmishes of the Revolutionary War took place.

So far, the commission has come up with a plan for emergency parking on Interstate 495, a crescent road about 20 miles outside Boston, to handle tourists bound for Boston and the Concord-Lexington area.

Sen. Chester Atkins, D-Acton, one of the legislative chairmen of the commission, said getting ready for bicentennial tourists "is a real problem in that no one really knows exactly what kind of numbers to expect."

The extent of the tourist influx, he said, will depend to a large degree on the amount of bicentennial promotion that is done by the federal government.

If a lot of promotion is done, he said, the state will expect financial help from the federal government to help handle the tourists.

If the Park Service decides to promote the Minutemen National Park and the Cape Cod National Seashore and then doesn't give us any money to prepare for those visitors," Atkins said, "we're prepared to get quite nasty about that." The Society of Logistics Engineers has scheduled a symposium in Boston on May 17 to discuss the tourist- influx problem.

The group has listed as the symposium theme: "During 1976 millions of people from all over the world will descend on Massachusetts to help celebrate the nation's 200th birthday. How do we inform, house, feed and move around those millions of extra bodies in an already crowded city?"

The buildup toward the bicentennial, which begins officially in 1975, has been purposely low key in the New England states.

"We're purposely not doing a big job of stimulating interest now, in 1973," said W. Ogden Ross, a leader of a volunteer group in New Haven, Conn., which is planning that city's observance. "We would have people peaking too soon."

"People by and large can't get that concerned about something that's so far off," he said. Paul Giacobbe, executive director of the Rhode Island bicentennial commission, said, "We have to build up to it gradually. We have to work up the enthusiasm, and that's what we're doing now."

"The bicentennial isn't just one year," he said. "The thing that we are trying to commemorate is a bicentennial era. We're trying to stress the contributions made during the 200 years.

"The idea is to get people to know their own state. We don't really feel we will be inundated with tourists. We want primarily Rhode Islanders to understand the contributions their state has made."

The New England states are being careful to say they will not get involved with commercial promotions for the bicentennial.

"It is not our intent to promote anyone's product," said Atkins of Massachusetts.

Gilbert Center, executive director of the New Hampshire bicentennial commission, said, "It's a lot more than setting off firecrackers and having a parade on the Fourth of July. We're concerned with things of lasting significance to a lot of people."

"We're playing down the commercial aspect," he said. "We have not endorsed any kind of money-making activity."

However, Rhode Island is not ignoring the commercial aspect entirely.

Noting that most tourists will be heading for Boston, not Rhode Island sites, Giacobbe said consideration will be given to ways of getting some to stop on the way north through the state on Interstate 95.

"We'd like to bag them and get them off the road for something more than gas," he said. Here's a brief rundown on what the New England states are planning for the bicentennial'

MAINE—The Maine Bicentennial Planning Commission picked up a $45,000 federal grant in July last year. Among other things, the commission is using the money to promote projects in local communities.

Eleven grants have been made so far, including one to the Bangor branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for a study of black contributions to Maine history.

Other projects funded so far include one to locate graves of Revolutionary War veterans, to be conducted by the Richmond chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and one to establish a Revolutionary-era courtroom in Wiscasset.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Along with its own plans, the New Hampshire American Revolution Bicentennial Commission plans at least two activities with other states.

'The Patriot': Anti-Gun Control

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—One of artist Andrew Wyeth's subjects who is called "The Patriot" appeared at a Maine legislative hearing Wednesday to register his opposition to a controversial handgun control bill.

Ralph Cline Sr.—elderly, long-limbed, with a smooth weather-beaten face—traveled 50 miles to Augusta from his coastal home at Spruce Head near the Wyeth summer residence.

He did not speak to the judiciary committee. His views were recounted by a friend, veteran Rep. Albert W. Hoffses, R-Camden.

"The Patriot called me the other night and expressed his strong objection to any form of gun registration," Hoffses said.

"He has certainly done all that was required of him. He served his country and served it ably and with distinction," the lawmaker said. "One thing the Patriot did in the discharge of his duties was to permit us to keep and bear arms."

Cline's appearance was the only out-of-the-ordinary occurrence at what has become a routine biennial hearing to consider regulation of handguns. And the arguments were little changed since the legislature grappled with the issue two years ago.

Proponents argued there should be a waiting period for buying a handgun and an investigation of a would-be purchaser, to protect the citizenry.

Opponents contended any form of handgun control would be a "foot in the door" to statewide gun registration.

The bill before the current legislative session is sponsored by Rep. Gerald Talbot, D—Portland.

Anyone wanting to buy a handgun would have to fill out a certificate of information and wait for 72 hours while the police determined if the person was a convicted felon or under indictment of a felony. There is already such regulation in Portland, South Portland, Lewiston and several other smaller Maine communities. The Talbot measure wouldn't apply to gun transactions between dealers.

To prove how easily it is to purchase a handgun, Talbot said he went to an Augusta pawn shop Tuesday "and inside of five minutes I had a handgun."

"My bill wouldn't be taking away rights of anyone," he told the committee. "It wouldn't prevent honest citizens from owning a gun . . . it's just a small ounce of prevention to stop individuals who are quick tempered and might want to kill themselves or someone else."

Morgan Chantre, owner of Wise Pawn Shop where Talbot bought the handgun, said he supported the legislation. "We dealers don't have any protection at all," he said.

"If a person looks neat, talks sensibly, and everything checks out, I sell him a gun. Then the next week he might kill someone or commit suicide," Chantre said. He cited several examples of men who bought handguns and within a couple of hours shot themselves to death.

James Carr, of Richmond, and Rep. Ransom Kelley, R—Southport, claimed that passage of Talbot's bill wouldn't stop shootings or suicides. If he wanted to kill someone, Kelley said, "I'd use my bare hands and enjoy doing it."

Carr said he was a hunter "and I don't want nobody taking my gun away from me." Roy Gardiner, president of the 10,000-member Maine Fish and Game Association, said the handgun control bill was unworkable and similar laws in other states had proved ineffective.

"Why penalize the whole population to prove it won't work," he said.

N.H.Gov.Seeks Access To Criminal Files

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. sought from a criminal agency confidential files on several New Hampshire political and public figures, possibly including Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., New England law enforcement source said Wednesday.

The sources said Thomson, a Republican, and Safety Commissioner Richard Flynn were refused access to the information at the New England Organized Crime Intelligence System in Wellesley, Mass.

But, spokesmen for the governor and Flynn said they were not refused access. Thomson said "I was pleased to learn that files were not being kept there on any political figures" and that he wanted to test the agency's security. The information, sources said, was sought on Jan. 23, the day that an aide to Thomson searched tax files of political enemies in Concord. The tax search was ruled illegal by the state Supreme Court, but Thomson has rejected its decision as "bad advice and bad law."

The sources said information was sought on "McIntyre," with no initials or first name; former Gov. Wesley Powell; Greyhound Racing Commissioners Robert Allard and Leonard Gilman; Former Safety Commissioner Robert Rhodes; Manchester Union Leader reporter R. Warren Pease; Nashua developer Samuel Tamposi; Thomas Carney of Yankee Greyhound Corp.; and former Laconia Mayor Peter Lessard.

McIntyre called the incident "Watergate North." Thomson said that the names "were picked out of the air," including his own, to test the security of the bureau. The sources said Thomson did not include his name in the list.

Tamposi was among those whose business profits tax files were searched in Concord.

Lessard's name also has been mentioned in connection with the New Hampshire incident. Lessard earlier this month was quoted by Concord Monitor reporter Floyd Norris as writing a letter to Thomson about $50,000 he said he was offered in connection with a dog track license. Since then, Norris has been charged with possession of stolen property, a copy of Lessard's letter to Thomson.

Thomson said he and Flynn went to Wellesley after reports that the agency was keeping files on New Hampshire politicians "to personally assure myself that no files were being kept on political figures, regardless of their party affiliations."

Federal Judge Dismisses Air Force Suit

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - A federal judge has dismissed a suit filed last December by two Air Force officers whose early release dates had been rescinded by the Pentagon.

In granting a defense motion for dismissal, U.S. District Judge Edward T. Gignoux ruled that Air Force Secretary Robert C. Seamans Jr. violated no military regulations in revoking the early releases.

Lt. Brian Prendergast of Kinchelo Air Force Base, Mich., and Capt. William Waller Jr. of Loring AFB, Maine, were listed as plaintiffs in the suit, which was filed in behalf of 71 Air Force Academy graduates who had been offered, then denied, early release dates.

When the suit was filed, a spokesman for the graduates said the controversy resulted from an Air Force decision to reduce its strength by up to 5,000 officers.

All officers, including academy graduates, were initially determined to be eligible for early release, provided they had been on active duty since 1969. Academy graduates were subsequently excluded from the early release schedule after Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D-La., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, questioned the legality of discharging them before their five-year active duty obligation had been served.

Gignoux ruled that the officers' action was "wholly lacking in merit," and said there was no indication that they had exhausted all military remedies before turning to a civilian court.

The judge's action came just a few weeks before several of the graduates were scheduled for discharge.

Counsel for the Air Force said the status of the academy graduates is not affected by the action, and all will be required to complete their five-year terms of active duty.

The University Year for ACTION agency selection meeting scheduled for this evening at 7:30 p.m., will be held in Mahar Auditorium and NOT in the Campus Center as previously planned.

Another Way

It was more luck than purpose that a good person was elected SGA President three nights ago, for in the carnival atmosphere of the convention held in the bowels of the Campus Center Auditorium, chaos and madness reigned.

Amidst broken whiskey bottles, balloons, caucuses, political reunions, rumors, shrieks, boring speakers, obnoxious speakers, and totalitarian imitations, it was at times doubtful whether an election would actually take place.

What was wrong with the electoral college election was not the poor P.A. system. It was not Matt Tackeff shouting "ham on rye" when the chairman asked for order. It was not the Sylvan delegation with their balloons and banners. It was not even Henry Ragin's supporters shouting down their own candidate and staggering to and from the Bluewall with Hitleresque precision.

What was wrong with the election was the electoral college itself.

We hope that one of the priorities of President Apostola will be to initiate another referendum on electoral procedures.

We hope that UMass students will see some sense and vote for direct popular election of the next SGA President.

Surely the entire student body of UMass is no less reckless than a group of special-interested, politically courted, and dubiously motivated Assemblypersons and Senators.

Direct popular election is a necessity on this campus. Next election, we may not be so lucky.

Get Us Out Of The U.N.

Has anybody here heard of State Department Document 727? No? Too bad. You should. Question: What is State Department Document 727? Answer: It was put out by our pro-Communist State Department back in the fifties as a plan to surrender our armed forces to the United Nations. (It has been superceded since by another State Department Document which just delayed the plan.)

The closing down of many of our military bases is an essential part of this program. What the State Department, Defense Department and White House want to do is to ultimately surrender all of our armed forces to the U.N. and, then surrender our sovereignty to this U.N.

So let us look at the U.N.

It was formed in 1945 in San Francisco. The acting Secretary General was Alger Hiss, who was exposed as a Communist by Whittaker Chambers. Hiss was convicted back in the fifties of perjury in relation to his Communist activities. There were other U.S. Communists involved in setting up the U.N. Harry Dexter White, Laughlin Currie and Philip Jessup, just to name a few. Hiss wasn't alone, by any means.

One of the amazing consistencies I find in comparing the U.N. Charter and the Constitution of the U.S.S.R. is, generally speaking, this..."You have the right to this freedom as long as we don't pass a law taking it away." This is saying that rights come from governments and governments have the right to take it away. This is inconsistent with our Declaration of Independence states that human rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness come from God, not a government or a despot. The Constitution and, even more so, the Bill of Rights guarantee that these rights cannot be taken away by government. That is quite a difference, isn't it?

Yet Nixon, McGovern and their cronies want us to surrender our sovereignty to this U.N.!

The U.N.'s chief officer is the Secretary General. Four men have held this post. Trigvie Lee, Dag Hammerschold, U Thant and Kurt Waldheim. All four are Marxists. Just a coincidence? I don't think so.

The man who controls the use of Armed Forces and Atomic Energy for the U.N. is the Undersecretary for Political and Security Council Affairs. The man currently holding this position is Kalakov, a Communist from the Soviet Union. In fact, eight of the other nine men that have held this job were Communists from Yugoslavia. And our government wants a Communist, a sworn enemy of the United States, to control our armed forces and atomic energy! TREASON!

If this is done, the Americans will go down as the biggest fools that ever lived.

Now I've heard a lot about this U.N.I.C.E.F. But what they publicize that it is isn't true. What is true is that a lot of U.N.I.C.E.F. money goes to publicize itself, the rest of the money goes to leaders of socialist and Communist countries with no guarantees that it will be used for children's relief. Humanity? No way!

Yes, the U.N. was created by Communists, for Communists and is totally saturated with Communists. And the U.S. is outnumbered greatly here. The Reds can work against our interests there and we can't say boo!

The U.N. Charter demands our eventual surrender of our sovereignty. And if things keep going on as they have been, this will shortly happen.

There is a way out. It may seem drastic but it's the only way to stop this and that is to GET US OUT!

All Eyes And Ears

Slimy as in sleazy, symptom as in simpleton, slick as in slave. . .

Sorry to get abstract, but this all deals with

1. The "Simon Syndrome"

Now, of all things, I would hate to be tagged as a universalist. That is, to believe that all people have something in common; (isn't very "cool", cause you've heard it already, and wonder what the hell you could have in common with that person whom you despise, as being so stupid, so pretentious, so (ugh!) different than you are. Okay, my dear fellows, let us take into consideration for one second what it feels like to be on the "outside" of things. How do you think it feels? How DOES it feel right now? You really don't have to be that much outside. . .just a little. Oh, it's okay if you don't publicize it, and what somebody does in their spare time doesn't both you (I mean, after all, it's a free country, ISN'T it?) Nosir, couldn't write an editorial like this in Cuba, or China, or Russia. . .but that rather misses the point; suppose that I write an editorial – or anything – and nobody listens to me? That's called "benign neglect", and neglect never really is all that benign. . .! But I'm supposed to have an opinion, right? and too bad for me if my point of view doesn't fit yours. How do I combat that? Well, I could tell you that everything you do is "cool" and that I really don't get upset by some of the attitudes that have hit me over the past three years.

Simon as in Pieman. . .

Well, what to do? Simple as a Simon. . .

You (and I am speaking to all of us now, including mayself) share at least some semblance of identity to the person standing/sitting next to you, now don't you? You breathe, don't you? You think, don't you (I hope)? Please answer so I know you haven't died yet. shhh, good.

II. Human Groomin'

Okay, now here I would like to thank Galen Tinder for giving me the praise he did in his editorial. I like you too Galen. I like being personal. I like being human. Do you?

The editorial that I wrote sometime ago, "Robotoid Arthritis" was aimed at exactly that idea – that we should pride ourselves on being human. No, scratch that. . .I heard Stokely Carmichael speak this afternoon, and duly impressed (and moved, I might add) was I. And it sparked my mind to new things (or else, very basic things that were there all along.)

First of all, we are living, breathing, and thinking beings. However, in spite of all these factors, we can still be manipulated, and be aware of that, because with the overwhelming media hype that comes at our eager minds, we can get drowned in all that shit, so you have got to keep your eyes, ears, and minds open. You can become a vegetable otherwise. A rich vegetable, but a vegetable nonetheless. Ah, but if I can be a rich vegetable, I don't mind being a vegetable (a vegetable, in the human sense of the word, means to suck in without giving out – maybe I should have used the word leech–yeah leech fits the thing better than any other word.)

So, you see, you can get away with that mentality, but do you really want to exist that way? Well, if you DO look at it that way, then there will be hell to pay in a few years. Or perhaps tomorrow. But perhaps by tomorrow you'll have realized that thing. I hope. I wish you realization.

Trivial Sensitivities

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

The semester is quickly coming to a close. In view of this I thought that my last editorials should cover a wide range of subjects so that before vacation I may enjoy the personal satisfaction of expressing my views as diverse as they are.

First of all, I'd like to express my disgust with what the Collegian has become. Lately it reads like a shithouse wall. Nobody can say a fucking thing (even something as obvious as support for amnesty) without receiving flak from some brainwashed dipshit. Witness the sick Letters-to-the-Editor page. What ever happened to the solidarity of the 60's? It seems as though some of us have reverted to accepting the dogma fed to us by the establishment.

"Sexist editors and writers" is what the Collegian is said to be composed of. Women on the gymnastics team were upset because a reporter refered to them as "girls". What do they want to be called–boys? The trivial sensitivities are endless. People seem to be split on all the issues—abortion, legalization of marijuana, definitions of satire, Nixon (see pathetic individual refered to him as a "Great American") and moldy strawberries. Even types of toilet paper were discussed.

For the benefit of those that don't know it: Nixon sucks, marajuana should be legalized, abortion is a moral question that should be decided by the woman who is pregnant (is that discriminatory?) or the pregnan man, satire is funny, SGA sucks, the Administration sucks, the Campus Center sucks and because Hitler's benevolence has also been questioned, he was a flaming asshole.

So now that a few things have been squared away have a good vacation (don't read any editorials). I wish you fornication (with yourself).

Letters To The Editor

The Smoke Of Injustice

To The Editor:

A friend goes running in the cold night; returns winded and scared. I touch his hair, sit him down. He throws out his Winstons; but I've never smoked (well, a puff in the tenth grade from a cigarette I lit to watch the white smoke wriggle in the dark). I see the lungs in his chest open and close like desperate hands for a lifeline.

It's Earth Week, Ecology Day in Psych class. Conventionally, students flash slides to impress us with the natural fragilities we rape. I am reverent, still, as my eyes slowly focus on old butts and ashes that color the linoleum a worse grey. I turn back to the slide: a redwood forest, through a silhouette of faces, so many extended with strange protuberances that cough smoke in silence. I cough aloud; my eyes burning even in the classroom, as I stare at slides of the diffused Los Angeles skyline–three thousand miles away. So a smoking friend sits in Psych class, digging redwoods ironically; digging graves for many more than himself. I turn my head to the window. But the windows don't open, and though my lungs gape for air, there is never anything but smoke; the lethal grey strands that choke me for the moment; that will choke my lungs with sticky black forever.

"Smoke!"

"No, I can't stand the taste, and I treasure my lungs–"

But whether or not I choose the habit, is inconsequential. Per a habit of mine is breathing, and as long as I breathe, I'm smoking a pack a day. (Think of the bargain, not even having to pay for cigarettes.)

Democracy has always been bound by the stipulation that one man's rights extend only to the freedom of the next. Why then, may others clog my lungs with lethal darkness, because they've chosen to clog their own? Somewhere, a line must be drawn. The classroom, the auditorium (enclosed public areas), area a good place to start, if anyone has a taste for justice, not tobacco.

The redwoods stand, like the Los Angeles skyline, like the Winstons in their packs. But the forests are falling for paper for Winstons; and in Los Angeles and in Amherst, the non-smokers fall with the smokers who fill all lungs with tar.

Balkan Studies

To The Eitor:

Is Nick Apostola as much of an asshole as I would assume he is after reading his statement in last Friday's Collegian that engineering should be wiped off the face of the UMass campus? I really can't understand how anybody majoring in "Balkan studies," a field I cannot even find in the Course Description Guide, can possibly have the rocks to give vent to verbaliting his desire for ending a major which, in his opinion, does not benefit enough people. Does Balkan Studies?

Conversely, it is rather a comfort to me that there is a place in a state school for the serious student of engineering who might not have the money to attend M.I.T. Being an English major with absolutely no talent for anything resembling the work entailed in learning and using engineering, I am more than ready to allow the engineering students on this campus who will one day be designing tomorrow's buildings, pipelines, bridges, etc., to learn their job and learn it well.

But whether or not they are learning well or how many are involved in it, it still irks me to have to try and find some reason in such a stupid, ignorant, and ambiguous statement such as Apostola's. I am overwhelmed at the thought of him having whatever kind of power he has been elected into. But work hard Nick, and hopefully your fifth year here will be as much fun as your other four. Maybe you'll even want to try a sixth. I don't know. I have no idea how many credits it takes to get a degree in Balkan studies. I'm willing to predict though that the contribution you will make to society in general will be meagre in comparison with those when you are trying to oust from this campus.

Clint Eastwood in the person of Harry Callahan once said, "You'll go far."

Spare Us The Pain

To The Baredo Bros.:

In writing this I am hoping that you were not serious in your letter published in the 4/20 edition of the Collegian. Maybe I am wrong, but I really can't believe there are people on this campus so hopelessly ignorant, whose personality development stopped at the age of five, and who are so completely devoid of any trait identifying them as human beings. I prefer to think, Mr. Jive, that you are just a very immature person with an equally childish sense of "humor". In either event my advice to you is this:

It's sad, too bad, you didn't come with a brain,
But since you didn't, please, spare us the pain,
Of listening to someone who's so pitifully inane.
Jive!

Compassion

To The Editor:

In the four years I spent at this university, I was never prompted to write a rebuttal to a letter in the Collegian, content to wait and read others. However, after reading Mr. Shattuck's incredible letter in Wednesday's paper, I was so angered and disgusted that I felt that I should answer him.

My brother was killed in a mine explosion in Viet Nam in February, 1969. And I am totally in favor of amnesty for the deserters. True, it hurt deeply when he was killed. I loved him and still feel a sense of loss. The question we must ask is 'Who is responsible?'. Perhaps one driven by selfish revenge would direct the blame towards the Godless hordes of Commies in the North (and South). An even more warped mind might shift the blame onto those who chose not to fight. Maybe one of them might have been "returned in a pine box' instead of your brother.

Strangely, though, my anger is directed elsewhere. Eisenhower, whose opinion you might respect, Mr. Shattuck, wrote in his memoirs that perhaps 80% of the Vietnamese people would have voted for He Chi Minh had they been allowed to have the 'free and democratic' elections promised them. We denied him the support he sought from us and proceeded to place Diem in power. It was our war, man. I blame the United States. Period. Amerika killed millions of Vietnamese people (dig it–PEOPLE) and hundreds of thousands of American men, our brothers included. I have great respect for someone who has the balls to stand up and say 'No!'. Perhaps you could kill another human being, but believe it or not, there are those of us who could not. Can you possibly imagine that? Even, as you said, at the cost of a possible jail term (and THAT is no party)?

I hesitate to continue as I wonder if people like you can ever be reached. Nevertheless, another meaning for amnesty is compassion, something you are totally unfamiliar with.

If you would like any other viewpoints from those of us who lost family in vain, I have two more brothers, one here at UMass and the other in Worcester, who would be more than happy to expound on the subject.

Peace.

Not Boys

To The Editor:

Ms. Judith Katz, try not to get caught up with expressions we could do better without. You are not a girl; those reporters are not boys. To label them as such allows you to express your contempt, but makes them children and not responsible for their own actions. They are responsible.

You personally prefer to learn about your body by yourself and with another woman. Fine, but don't project that feeling onto all women. A woman's body is her own business; a person's body is their own business. I learned about my body by myself, with women and with men, and it wasn't like a fifth grade biology class.

Tony Muncey

Brotherly Love

Dear Sister Katz:

I stick my tongue out at you. (It is all I can do without being a SEXIST). I am charmed by the knowledge that you—a pledge to the sorority known as WOMAN'S LIBERATION—still are willing to see males as "boys" and females as "women". I refer, of course, to your "Unfounded and Destructive Statements" letter you pasted together for Wednesday's Collegian.

So you carry the fetus and go through the pain, anguish, etc., of the abortion; nonetheless, my semen and energies are also somewhat intimately involved, and to hear about abortion exclusively from the perspective of women doesn't leave me all that comfortable, either.

Sometimes, I get the feeling you would only have boys around when you want to make babies, or are besieged by pederast pharisees.

At recess today, I played baseball and popped my shirt button and when I went to the Home Economics teacher for a needle and thread, she told me to take it home to me mummy.

If you were trying to get my goat by calling men "boys", you were eminently successful; would you now please let go of the tether line so I can go play with my G.I. Joe doll?

Write on, Sister!

Women's Lib Is Not Sick

Dear Mr. Baird:

In reference to your comment concerning the women's liberation movement quoted in the April 24 edition of the Collegian, I would like to try to explain something to you. I do not doubt your sincerity concerning women's rights and abortion. Neither am I against you because you are a male. I am, however, in favor of the women's liberation movement, and I regret that it, like so many liberationist groups, has its fringe element of fanaticism. However, you cannot judge against the legitimate aims and goals of thousands of women in this country on the basis of that one element that you find distasteful. This is an old argument for an ancient problem, and I am surprised that you didn't see the situation more clearly.

Is it sick when a woman demands the same dignity and respect given to a man? Is it sick to want to control one's own body? Is it sick to believe in one's own abilities? Women's Liberation means all these things as well as female chauvinism and revenge. Because of this, it can mean very healthy things for many people, including men. Therefore, I hope that you will consider this side of the women's liberation movement and realize it is necessary in order to give women the hope of achieving many long sought after goals.

State Of The Economy To Be Discussed

Paul Mattick, the author of "Marx and Keynes," will discuss the state of the American economy at 8 p.m. tonight, April 26 in Converse Hall Assembly Room, Amherst College. The event is open to the public without charge.

He will address himself specifically to the significance of the recent monetary problems and the rising food prices. The event is sponsored by the Amherst College Campus Radical Education Project.

Mattick is the author of several books, including "The Limits of the Mixed Economy," and "Critique of Marcuse: One- Dimensional Man in Class Society." His "Marx and Keynes" has been translated into seven languages. He has authored several hundred articles which have appeared in numerous languages over the past forty years.

Born in Germany in 1904, he was a member of Rosa Luxemburg's Spartacist League prior to and during the German Revolution of 1918. He then became a member of the German Communist Party. Coming to the United States in 1926, he was an organizer for the IWW (Industrial Workers of the World) and worked in various factories.

During the Depression he edited a series of magazines which have recently been reprinted under the title of "New Essays." He now lives in Boston where he continues to write articles for magazines all over the world.

WALTHAM–This UMass alumna is dialing for dollars as part of a "telethon" fund raising event sponsored by the campus Alumni Office. The $40,000 in pledges received to date from Boston-area alumni will go in part to a new scholarship fund. The project, located at the School of Agriculture's Waltham Suburban Experiment Station, will end this month but has already more than doubled alumni giving totals for any previous year.

New RSO Group Aids State Retarded

Community Homes for Children Volunteers (CHC) is a new RSO whose purpose is to provide supportive efforts to the Community Homes for Children Corporation in their aim to set up such homes for children. One such home has already been set up in Easthampton, with 7 children from Belchertown and one from Munson. Five of the children attend special education classes in the Easthampton public schools, and the other three attend the Greenfield Developmental Center to learn skills in self-care.

In 1972 funds were made available by the federal government for the establishment of community residences for individuals confined to state schools for the retarded. The primary purpose was to provide a warm, normalized home environment for people being denied this by institutionalized, custodial care.

Recognizing the great citizen concern and outstanding services in Amherst, Community Homes for Children is applying to the Department of Mental Health for funding for another children's home in Amherst. The success of the home depends on community involvement. It is necessary to raise money for "start up" expenses, i.e., furnishings, play equipment, and renovations to bring the house up to safety standards. To this end CHC volunteers will be running the food concessions at the Orchard Hill Free Concert April 28th, featuring the James Montgomery Blues Band, and the May 6th Free Concert, featuring The Elvin Bishop Group, Cold Blood and It's a Beautiful Day. We are also running a raffle, with first price a 1973 Toyota, and over 50 prizes in all donated by local merchants.

Tickets at $1.00 each will be available at the door or can be purchased in advance from Lori Harrigan, Asian Studies office, 804 Thompson, UMass, 545-0886.

Asian Studies Offers New Courses

The Asian Studies Program announces the following new courses to be offered this summer and next fall:

Chinese 290 "Intensive Intermediate Chinese" will be offered in summer 1973 for 8 credits. The class will meet four hours daily and students, upon completion, will be able to take the third year Chinese course (Chinese 326). The instructor is Professor S. H. Teng.

Chinese 190 (Chinese 110) "Non-intensive Elementary Chinese" will be offered in the fall for 3 credits. This course will concentrate on the modern language usage and development in Mainland China (e.g. Latinisation and simplified characters). The instructor is Professor Teng.

Chinese 290D (Chinese 253, 254) "Aesthetic Patterns of China I, II" will be taught by Professor R. Lyon. This will be a survey of Chinese aesthetic developments from earliest times through the modern period and will include both literary and art criticism. Discussion will focus on the nature and function of the arts, their roles in society, and their relationships with other modes of thought and behavior. There are no prerequisites.

Japanese 190 (Japanese 101) "Non-intensive Elementary Japanese" will be offered in the fall for 3 credits, taught by Professor C. Kitagawa. This is an introduction to the basic structure of the Japanese language in speaking, reading, writing, and aural comprehension.

Japanese 290 (Japanese 215, 236) "Introduction to Japanese Civilization (I, II)" will be taught by Professor Y. Ozawa. This will be a survey of all aspects of Japanese life such as food, dress, housing, work, recreation, family and society.

Bay State Livestock Classic To Be Held

Upcoming Friday, April 27th, and Sat., 28th, the students in the Department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences at the University of Massachusetts will present the annual Bay State Livestock Classic.

The livestock show has been an annual Spring presentation for many years, attracting farmers, 4-H representative, parents, faculty, and interested persons from the New England area.

As it was last year, the show will run on Friday evening from 6:30 to 11 p.m. and Saturday from 8:00 a.m. to late afternoon.

The show has substantially expanded this year, due to increased student participation. This will be the largest student showing and handling demonstration of animals in the history of UMass. Horses, ponies, dairy oxen, and beef oxen will be shown by the students along with sheep, goats, swine, dairy cows, and beef cows.

One handling demonstration that drew intense interest last year was oxen driving. Instead of last year's four teams, this year the event sports thirteen teams. It should be noted that the majority of the drivers are girls. For the parents, it can be both amusing and shocking to see their petitite daughter driving a team of oxen. While their language may not be as rough as an old timer's, they are just as professional and serious. No doubt the crowd's favorite is the baby animal parade. Here, lambs, piglets, calves, ponies, and foals are dressed in "appropriate" infant clothing and led around by their smiling "adopted parents."

The students' favorite is something called the "bucking barrel". Here a 55 gallon drum complete with saddle is suspended by pulleys in the ceiling. Then a professor of the department is placed on the saddle. At this time, ambitious students grab the ends of the ropes, and attempt to buck the professor off. A good time in the saddle is 3 seconds.

In the milking maid contest, little girls from the audience see who can fill the test tube with milk the fastest. They are assisted by the students.

All in all, the Bay State Livestock Classic means a day and a half of free fun for the whole family. Why not enjoy clean country air at Grinnell Arena, UMass campus, Amherst.

Celebrity Series Sponsors Concerts

Amherst, Mass.–The UMass - Amherst Celebrity Series concludes its 1972/73 session tonight and Friday with concerts by The Boston Philharmonia Orchestra, University Chorale and five vocal soloists at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The performance will be under the direction of John Nelson and will include works by Mozart, Honegger and Schubert's Mass No. 6 in E flat major D. 950.

Vocal soloists in the Schubert Mass include three members of the UMass music department faculty: Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass; as well as Donna Harler, contralto; and John Aler, tenor.

While UMass Chorale Conductor Richard E. duBois is on sabbatical, the group is being conducted by Russell Falvey, a member of the Springfield Technical Community College faculty.

The Boston Philharmonia Orchestra is chamber-sized and is composed of some of Boston's finest instrumentalists. The Philharmonia, engaged in a far-reaching educational/entertainment program in the Greater Boston area, will make its third visit to the UMass-Amherst campus. Previous visits included guest conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, in 1969; and conductor Leon Kirchner, joined by pianist Murray Perahia, in 1971.

Remaining tickets to these concerts may be obtained until 4 p.m. at the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst; and at 7 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. They are $2 for UMass undergraduates and $4 for others.

Lonnie Liston Smith, pianist and arranger-composer, says, "Music is one of the ruling forces in the cosmos and I constantly reach for the ultimate. Music should bring a message and I am but a messenger."

Of the newer and younger jazz musicians to arrive on the contemporary scene of the 70s, Doug Carn is indicative of a "new direction" in music. His first record release is "Infant Eyes."

Tickets are $1.50 for UMass undergrads and $2 for all others and may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, telephone (413) 545-0202.

Baba Ram Dass To Speak At Symposium

Baba Ram Dass, formerly a noted researcher in the field of psychedelic drugs, and now a well known spiritual teacher, will be a featured speaker at the "Symposium on Transpersonal Growth and Healing," to be held April 28-29 at the Amherst College Gymnasium. The Symposium is an ambitious attempt to bring together and present to a large number of people in this community, some of the most distinguished and fascinating people and ideas in the field of consciousness research.

The term "transpersonal psychology" refers to the broad and amazing range of human experience outside the realm considered in conventional psychology. Mystical experience, ecstacy, ego-loss, awe, wonder, bliss, ultimate values, ultimate states of mind, cosmic awareness, cosmic play, Yoga, meditation, spiritual paths, telepathy, ESP, mind-over-matter, healing, esoteric knowledge, drug-induced states–and related concepts, experiences and activities, are all within the scope of "transpersonal psychology". All of these subjects will be discussed by the participants in the symposium.

More and more serious study and research is being done in this area, in response to this increased interest, under the general heading of "Transpersonal Psychology". All of it, from marijuana to Yoga, involves people changing, altering, and perhaps expanding their consciousness. As more knowledge becomes available to more people, it is becoming apparent to many that the issue of changing consciousness and consciousness expansion is perhaps the most important and pressing issue for man to consider.

Guest speakers will include Stanley Krippner, a pioneer in psychedelics research, Dr. Richard Katz who will be speaking on transmission of esoteric knowledge, Eleanor Criswell, and Stanislav Grof. For more information on the program of event, contact Room To Move, at 545-0400 or 545-0401.

The cost of the Symposium is $5.00 for students, professionals and all others. Registration is through the Office of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, Tel. 545-2591.

Last Peace Corps Meeting To Be Held

The last official meeting for the participants in this year's Peace Corps Intern Program will be held today in Stockbridge Hall, Room 113 at 7:30. Two veterans of the Peace Corps will report on their experiences and impressions during their service in India. Douglas Downing, a former Biology major from Williams College, is now a graduate student in Reproductive Physiology here at UMass. John Shryock, a Biology major from Wooster College, Ohio, will be a graduate student in Exercise Sciences at the University of Pennsylvania. Both speakers spent two years in India - 1969 to 1971 - working at a fish hatchery helping the government to improve the diet of the people through better management of fish husbandry. This will be of importance for future volunteers interested in service for Ivory Coast, Africa, where the growing artificial lake of the Bandama River will provide opportunities for improvement of the inland fish production.

Also, the latest news from Washington will be available.

Jarvis Tyner To Speak On A 'Strategy For Black Liberation'

Tonight at 7 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, Jarvis Tyner will speak on a "Strategy for Black Liberation." Tyner active in civil rights struggles of the 60's was made national chairman of the Philadelphia DuBois Clubs in 1966, and elected national chairman of the clubs in 1967. As a member of the Political Committee of the Communist Part, and on the coordinating Committee of the Peoples' Coalition for Peace and Justice, Jarvis Tyner has worked consistently in the struggle for the liberation of Afro-Americans.

In his essay, "Black Libertation," Tyner writes, "Black oppression, Black Americans, and the Black Liberation movement flave been and will continue to be central to the whole of America's struggle from here to liberation, from here to revolution. This is because the racist oppression of America's 30 million black people is an inherent part of America's capitalist system and key to the maintenance of that system."

Tyner was the 1972 Vice-Presidential candidate of the Communist Party, and is currently national chairman of the Young Workers' Liberation League.

Golf Takes Two

By MDC STAFF

The UMass Golf team boosted its seasonal record to an impressive 10-2 yesterday in downing both Amherst College and Worcester Polytechnic Institute in a triangular golf match held on the Hickory Ridge course in South Amherst by scores of 394-409-411.

Coach Fan Gaudette was very pleased with the performance of the Minutemen yesterday and noted that their calibre of play "improves with every match." Four matches remain before the all crucial Yankee Conference Meet to be held next weekend in Sutton, Mass.

Gary Russell was again the team medalist for UMass as he shot a fine 715 on the day. "His play has been inspiring the rest of the team and I certainly hope he will carry us through the upcoming championship meets," said Gaudette. Russell will be one of seven golfers going to the Conference match and one of five going to the New Englands in Rhode Island. There is already talk of the golfers going to the National Tournament in Texas.

Whalers Up 3-1

BOSTON (AP) - The New England Whalers and the Cleveland Crusaders have played pretty even hockey in the World Hockey Association semifinals. Both have scored 15 goals.

But, New England has bunched its goals better, giving it a 3-1 game advantage in the best-of-seven series.

Thursday, the two teams meet in Boston for what the Whalers hope is the last game. But, Cleveland is not out of the running. The Crusaders have lost three games to the Whalers, each by one point.

New England will definitely be one man short, and possibly two. Center John Danby, a top penalty killer, underwent shoulder surgery Monday and is out for the season.

Terry Caffery, one of the team's leading scorers, is a question mark. He injured his knee in Saturday's game in Cleveland, but Whalers Coach Jack Kelley said he hopes Caffery will be on the ice Thursday.

The Crusaders are healthy and they have beefed up their lines with reinforcement from their Syracuse farm team, which won the Eastern Division playoffs.

J.V.'s Stand 5-3

By JAY LUPPOLD

The little Minutemen nine pummeled Dartmouth pitching for a 10-2 victory and a split of their doubleheader Tuesday at Hanover, N.H.

Dartmouth took the first game by a score of 4-1 behind the fine three hit pitching of Bill Beattie. Mark Fontaine accounted for the Umies lone score on a home run in the first inning. Pitcher Bob Langlois gave up two runs in the second inning on three walks and a single, and another in the fourth when Joe Nye singled in Tim Hartley who had singled and stolen second. Bill Cullity gave up the final Green tally in the fifth after coming in to relieve Langlois.

It was a completely different story in the second game however. The JV's, with a strong 12 hit attack, and the 7 hit pitching of Jim Bedard, who is now 3-0, buried the Ivies.

UMass jumped on starter Bill Sanders for four runs in the first frame with Johnny Seed and Julian Pina providing the punch. Seed singled in Fontaine and MacDonald, and Pina knocked in Black and Seed. Fontaine, MacDonald and Black had all reached on walks. The second inning put the game out of reach for Dartmouth when Mike Joyce led off with a walk and promptly came home on a Mark Fontaine triple. Fontaine didn't have to stay on the basepaths too long either because Black brought him in with a double. UM scored single markers in the third, fifth, and sixth innings to account for their ten.

Dartmouth scored both of their runs in the sixth when Bruce Potter doubled in Rich Cowan and Dave Clark who had both singled.

The JV's also trounced Quinsigamond Community College last Friday at Worcester behind the combined pitching of Bill Cullity and Dave Mucciarone, 6-1. Bob Disabato led the offense for UM with three RBI's.

The Junior Varsity record now stands at 5 wins and 3 losses.

Football: Blood & Sweat

"All of us have short memories, remembering only the good things that happen. There is hardly anything enjoyable about spring football."--Dick MacPherson.

By EARLE BARROLL

When it began there were pockets of mayhem surrounding the tower of the "Man". 140 strong belted and pummeled each other bent on either making or keeping someone else from making the defending Boardwalk Bowl champs.

"This is when we build the foundation of the team," said MacPherson. "It's a difficult process building that base to work from in the fall." Day by day the body count became all important. Did your man take enough the day before? Could he recover? Was he ready for the fall tune-up?

For some the rigors were too demanding. They perished. For others like veteran defensive tackle Tom Price it was just what the doctor ordered. "It was an excellent spring," he said. "I honestly felt that there could have been more hitting and all out action, but there were a lot of young players and this had to be taken into consideration."

The Tom Price's lavished in the chaos. They fed their appetite with a lusty day on the gridiron. To them the football moment was boss. Violence? Only to those who haven't prepared themselves. As Muhammad Ali answered when he was queried about the violence in his trade: "When we enter the ring we are two well-trained and skilled athletes. We are protected with equipment. There are no weapons, no guns, no wars."

It has been almost three weeks since the number was 140. It is now hovering around the century mark. The foundation for next fall has become firmer. And it will all end on Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium (2 p.m.) when the Minutemen tackle each other in the annual Red-White intersquad scrimmage.

Yesterday afternoon at the Stadium, MacPherson and his band of motley seniors conducted the third annual player draft. It was quite official. They even had titles, like General Managers Peil Pennington and Johnny Jones. There were even chief scouts and area scouts and directors of player personnel.

"The idea behind the players picking the team," said MacPherson "is that it's their game. They're picking the teams, they're sticking their necks out. I've been at universities where the coach picked the teams and loaded them up to impress the other coaches and scouts who were at the game.

"This way the teams are even, the only things the coaches have to do is coach and it invariably makes for a more exciting game."

In his previous two spring games Mac has not placed a foot on the field. "And I intend to keep the string going on Saturday," he demanded. "I'm making my third annual trek into the stands and you can tell President Silber of Boston University that I'm doing so."

Who's President Silber? Well, he's the guy who's been advocating keeping the coaches off the field during games. He's from Texas and the sting of Longhornism and Darryl Royal obviously has left its mark.

Southern Gun Signs Multi-Pact

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) - Dwight Lamar, a 6-foot-2 sharpshooting guard from Southwestern Louisiana, will sign a long term contract with the American Basketball Association San Diego Conquistadors, his attorney said Wednesday.

Lamar was the first player chosen Wednesday in the regular ABA draft. He had been chosen by Detroit in the third round of the National Basketball Association draft Tuesday.

Bob F. Wright, Lamar's attorney, said, "Monday we consummated an arrangement whereby the ABA entered into a long term contract with Dwight Lamar. We have plans to be in San Diego Sunday to complete the arrangement."

Wright said the NBA was "seriously trying" to negotiate a contract with Lamar, but "when we reached an agreement with the ABA, we notified the NBA to take him off their list."

Wright said that Portland of the NBA was going to draft Lamar second, but that's when the NBA was notified of Lamar's decision to go with the ABA, the Trailblazers did not draft him.

The only player in the history of college basketball to have led both the college division and university division in scoring, Lamar is fourth on the alltime collegiate scoring list with 3,493 points.

He led the college division as a sophomore with a 36.0 average and when Southwestern Louisiana became a major college the next year he led the nation again with a 36.3 average.

In his senior year, Lamar concentrated more on playmaking and defensive roles, but still averaged 28.9 points a game.

Gorillas Challenge Crusaders Today

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Today Garber's Gorillas take their lacrosse equipment and their 5-2 record and travel to Worcester, Mass. where they will encounter the Crusaders of Holy Cross in a game at 3 o'clock.

The Gorillas are coming off a big (22-8) win over Wesleyan last Saturday and they are now beginning to roll. Against Wesleyan, "They played a great game," said Coach Dick Garber. The offense and defense blended well in putting together a fine all-around effort. The offense is dominated by the high-scoring attack of Fred Michels, Peter Conolly and Frank Garahani scorer with 23. The defense is made up of John McCarthy, Rich up of John McCarthy, Rich Lally, and Billy Blaustein with John Rutledge in the net. The defense and offense are aided by the powerful midfield of Jack Moran and All-American Dwight Blomquist and Hisch Seidman.

The Holy Cross team plays a rough-tough type of game. "They have a combination lacrosse-football game," said Coach Garber. "They have several football players on defense and we expect to see a rough game." Some of the outstanding players for the Crusaders are: Rick Gaudette Moriarty, and Claude Prioletattack; and Jack Thaler and Jim atteck; and Jack Thaler and Jim Bagdonis - defense. Bagdonis is co-captain of the Crusders and is playing well.

The Crusaders have a 3-3 record so far this season but they are playing a different style of lacrosse than in past years. Their new coach, Harry Tiffany, has brought along a new philosphy on the game and he is responsible for this team's improvement over last year's performance. Coach Garber expects to see an improved Holy Cross team. He commented, "I haven't seen them play this season but judging by their record they have a better team than last year. They are rough, defensively and I don't imagine a repeat of last year's game in which we jumped off to a 10-0 lead in the first half (a game which UMass eventually won 19-2)." The Crusaders record includes wins over M.I.T., 11-5 and Trinity, 12-9 and a loss to Boston College, 12-7.

The UMass Gorillas will have to rely more on speed and finesse than on physical force. "We excel in speed and finesse where we can really beat them.", remarked Coach Garber. However, for the eighteenth-ranked UMass team this contest is also a warmup game for the very important clash with Williams College on Saturday. As of now, the Gorillas are tied for first place with Williams in the New England Divisional of the U.S. Lacrosse Association Garber hopes that "we play a good game. We plan to work on things we'll use on Saturday against Williams. We'll continue to play the same as we have all season and this game should allow us to sharpen up for Saturday." Garber's Gorillas cannot afford to relax today. They have to keep their sharp edge.

Well, the Olympics could very well be a distant goal personified here. But for the moment it's one-on-one and the winner gets a ribbon. You don't have to get one to be a champion. Even so Carmen Letizia has had his share.

Celtics Win "Do Or Die" At Garden

BOSTON (AP) - Boston Capt. John Havlicek, barely able to raise his arm above the waist, came off the bench at the start of the second period and helped rally the Celtics to a 58-52 halftime lead over the New York Knicks Wednesday night in the fifth game of the National Basketball Assciation's eastern championship playoff.

Havlicek, who suffered a right shoulder injury in the third game in Boston last Friday and sat out Sunday's game in New York, shook off the pain with the Celtics facing elimination in the best of seven series.

The 11-year pro from Ohio State scored on his first two shots, using his right hand both times. However, he was obviously hampered as he had trouble at the free throw line, missing four shots.

Havlicek finished the period with 10 points, at one point fooling the Knicks with a left-handed scoring shot off a drive.

Being Number One in anything requires a lot of responsibility. So far Steve Kosakowski's ace, Teddy Donahue, hasn't wilted for the Tennis Team. Teddy will next be in action in the first of a couple of upcoming pressure cookers, the Yankee Conference Tennis Championships at Storrs, Ct. this weekend.

Austin-Blaisdaill Selected

Although now out of season winter heroes Tom Austin of Jack Leaman's mod squad and Dick Blaisdell of Joe Roger's tank remain in the limelight today.

Blaisdell finished second in the recent Yankee Conference individual swimming championships. Austin, who would look a bit out of place in the Boyden pool, has been selected to the Second Team for the '73 National Invitational Tournament. Tom, who recently represented the University Division in the Senior New England All-Star game, has been invited by the Boston Celtics to attend their fall training camp.

UM Swimmers Win In Water Polo Games

Boyden Pool - It's kind of tough to think of the insides of a heated pool now. But although Mother Nature has provided us with the best of spring weather, the Water Polo Club wouldn't know it. They stay inside most of the day, but their time doesn't go unrewarded. Yesterday, the gang in the pool riddled Boston College 15-7 at the Boyden Pool.

The Club is now 2-1 on the season with a win at UNH also to their credit. An 8 goal binge by Henry McLean and the stellar end of the pool work by defenseman Duncan Loomis allowed the UMies to avenge an earlier setback to BC. If you want to see what UMass Water Polo is all about stop by the Boyden Pool at 1 p.m. this Saturday to catch a bit of the splash as the hosts square off with Trinity College. Or is that tip-off?

The UMass Women's Water Polo Club won it's first game last night in the Boyden pool, defeating Boston College 8-4. For the home team Kathy McDonald scored 7 goals and Katy Burt drilled in a 10 meter shot in the second quarter.

Hard pressing defense women Kathy Ryan and Judy Day forced numerous turnovers and held the number of shots on goalie Kathy Zuffino to 7. Centers Jan Felchner and Margaret Walsh had 6 assists between them.

Three Winners To Clash For Blue Grass Stakes

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)-The winners of three major Kentucky Derby prep races this season head a field of nine for Thursday's $50,000-added Blue Grass Stakes, the top producer of them all for Derby winners.

Top weighted at 126 pounds-the same weight everybody carries in the May 5 Derby at Churchill Downs-are Florida Derby winner Royal and Regal and Arkansas Derby victory Impecunious.

Given a three-pound advantage is Our Native, winner of the Flamingo and second in the Everglades.

The Blue Grass, at 1 1/2 miles a furlong shorter than the Derby nine days later, has produced nine of the past 14 Derby winners, with experts citing the timeing, distance and locality of the race as the probably reasons for its success.

Also entered in this year's Blue Grass are A.I. Appleton's My Gallant, Ed Elzemeyer's Warbucks, Stevenson and Stump's Navjo, Lazy F. Ranch's Forego, Greentree Stable's Starkers and the Rosalie Plantation's Hearts of Lettuce.

All are eligible for the $125,000-added derby, America's most famed horse race, where there are no provisions for supplemental nominations.

Just Like The Pros

"You lose one game in this league and you're out of it," said the tough competitor. Sounds like the NFL play-offs, doesn't it? Or maybe Tommy Heinson of the Boston Celtics.

Wrong. It's a comment heard on the Intramural Softball field. Not only is it merely a comment, but it seems to be the general attitude within the I—M program.

And, in my opinion, it is an unhealthy attitude. Intramurals should be fun for the players, not a painful experience like one team had last night.

I watched a game last night, a big game for both teams. It pitted last year's dorm champs against a scrappy, coed dorm challenger. The "champs" were the rowdy, "jock" types. The challengers wanted to win, but they just weren't so tense as the "champs." The challengers won.

It was a frustrating game for a bunch of frustrated ex-champion jocks. Maybe the team was made up of a bunch of Coach Bersquist's baseball rejects. They played like there was nothing so important as winning that (and every) game.

The champs jumped off to a 1-0 lead on three walks and an error after one inning of play and could sense victory. But then the wind changed direction (that's another story altogether) and the roof caved in. In the later innings they had a hard enough time just getting a runner on base.

The other pitcher was fast—very fast and everything the "champs" hit was popped up. The other team's guns exploded.

The frustrated hitters became frustrated fielders as they couldn't even handle the routine flies and ground balls. The champs were choking. And their coach knew it.

"He didn't listen to me!" he cried when a batter had just popped up the first pitch after just being told to take a strike.

Sounds like the big leagues, doesn't it? Well, it has almost all the characteristics of the big times. You have the competition, the coveted title of "campus champs" to shoot for, the ecstacy of winning and the agony of defeat.

'The agony of defeat?' you ask.

Oh, yes! After the game last night, not one of the losing players went over to the winners after the game to congratulate them. No one said, "nice game." You see, losing isn't fun.

A lot of teams hold strenuous practices everyday to get ready for the big games. Some even make cuts. Just like big time athletics. Isn't it great that people who don't make the athletic teams can still enjoy the type of competition that real jocks enjoy?

I don't think it's so great. Many people who play in the intramural program don't want to play in that kind of atmosphere. Many just want to play . . . period.

Something is wrong with the Intraural program when the attitudes are like those seen last night. There is too much emphasis on the "winning" aspect and not enough on the "playing."

Maybe it's due to the fact that the I—M department awards trophies and championships, I don't know. It does seem that these trophies do give the games a purpose. And it's alot of fun to strive for the top; there's no doubt about that. And it's alot of fun to win.

But when losing a game makes a team so dejected as to take the loss so seriously as these "champs" did, it is no longer fun.

And if playing Intramurals ceases to be fun for a player, then he shouldn't be in the program at all.

Graduated Parking Fee Imminent

Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion last night explained the graduated parking fee rates before the Professional Staff Association, an organization made up of campus employees.

7,500 Spaces For 16,500 Cars

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion appeared before the Professional Staff Association yesterday to answer questions concerning the proposal to increase the cost of registering and parking cars here next semester.

In his opening remarks Campion explained the problem facing the University and offered the proposal's solutions.

"We now have 7,500 available parking spaces for students, faculty, and staff members. However, there are approximately 16,500 automobiles now registered on campus."

"The failure of the state legislature for the last five years to provide funds to build more spaces and further expand the bus transit system has resulted in this situation. We will not follow the traditional solution which would be only to pave more area. Rather, we want to move toward a "pedestrian campus."

On April 23, the proposal to increase the parking fees was approved by the Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees. Campion outlined the major points of the proposal for the Association.

A registration fee of $5.00 will be charged to anyone wishing to park in peripheral areas such as "V" lot. Bus service would then be provided to the campus. Any user can then purchase a space in a lot for prices ranging from $24.00 to $75.00, depending on the lot's proximity to campus. The fees would be used to expand intercampus bus service, add more parking spaces and improve lot maintenance.

In order to insure fairness, registration will be by mail only, and assignments will be made on a first come, first serve basis.

During the question-and-answer period which followed, a lively debate ensued in which the Association voiced their objections to the proposal.

Mr. Leo Leverman from the Physical Plant expressed many of the University employees' sentiments: "The narrow vision of the planners of this University employees are told to pay a considerable amount, yet the Legislature gives no money. The Legislature could and should provide money and solutions to this problem. All those opposed should approach the Board of Trustees and ask them not to consider the proposal."

A letter from the Commuter Assembly was read in which they expressed their opposition, and urged the Association to join with them.

A motion by Leverman that no action be taken until public hearings had been held and opposing views had been aired before the Board of Trustees was unanimously passed.

A motion made to ask the Chancellor to establish an ad hoc Committee to investigate the situation was passed and later tabled until the next meeting. That meeting is tentatively scheduled for May 10.

68 Arrested At Knee, 4 Believed from UMass

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

PINE RIDGE, S. D.--68 people were arrested on the Pine Ridge Reservation Wednesday after violating a court order banning all non-residents from the reservation.

Four UMass students who were with the 68 when they began a march towards Wounded Knee on Easter bringing food and supplies are believed to be among those arrested.

The marchers had been turned back from the Pine Ridge Reservation (of which Wounded Knee is a part) earlier this week by Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) police. But a 69-year-old Sioux chief named Frank Fools Crow reportedly had reinvited them on the Reservation after the Bureau officials told them to leave.

Fools Crow, as a tribal chief, has no legal power on the reservation.

Accompanying the marchers were three other Sioux chiefs and an AIM organizer from Rose Bud, S.D., a reservation to the east of Wounded Knee. Arraignment took place yesterday in tribal court in Pine Ridge according to the FBI.

The FBI said that the marchers would not be charged with any federal offense because they were arrested by local, not federal authorities. The spokesman could not say on what charge the group had been arraigned.

A United Press International reporter who contacted Pine Ridge said that only 60 marchers were arrested, but he also said that an additional five Indian supporters were arrested early yesterday monring near Kyle, S.D. after they tried to pass a federal roadblock.

The FBI spokesman said that most the marchers arrested were "non-Indian."

The Bureau of Indian Affairs tribal police station in Pine Ridge, contacted last night by phone, declined to say how many marchers had been arrested, what they were being charged with, or if any of those arrested were from Massachusetts.

Shuldiner Reveals Overnight Fee

By STEVE FINE

Professor Alan Shuldiner, Chairman of the Parking and Transportation Council said yesterday that students would have to pay an extra $12 overnight parking fee next year.

Shuldiner said he wasn't sure whether this would apply just during the winter months "since it may be administratively difficult to handle," he said.

"The extra cost would pay for snow removal from lots during the winter months," he said.

Shuldiner said the reason for the new parking plan was to discourage students from bringing cars on campus unless they need them.

Shuldiner said he was opposed to parking in commuter lots, like V lot, overnight during winter months, since they must remain clear to remove snow.

When asked if he thought the parking rates were discriminatory to students, Shuldiner said he thought the new system was less discriminatory than the one used now.

The provisions that the Parking and Transportation Council have recommended for next year include making the present $5.00 registration fee applicable only for those who park on the periphery of campus. A group of concentric circles will then determine higher registration fees for parking spaces which would be closest to campus. These parking spaces would cost $24.00, $36.00, $48.00, $60.00, and $75.00 each.

Shuldiner said that a small part of the increased revenues from the new parking fees would be used for buses that service parking areas.

Students Against Armed Police

By BILL DENSMORE

A survey completed at the end of March reveals that a majority of the campus would like the campus police to investigate the use of non-lethal weapons.

And a similar telephone survey of 136 UMass undergraduates showed that over half the student body has heard of the Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration program (BDIC) and are satisfied with the requirements of the program.

The two surveys were conducted by Project Pulse, an on campus group sponsored by the Student Affairs office which attempts to sample attitudes and opinions of campus groups primarily through telephone interviews.

The first portion of the survey was conducted for Robert Welch, a student. Respondents were asked 10 questions related to the BDIC program.

The BDIC program allows UMass sophomores and juniors to undertake a program of independent study, blending UMass courses in a logical sequence which is not presently allowed under an existing major program.

The survey showed that of UMass undergrads, 27% are presently unsatisfied with their program of study, and 20% think their studies are not practical enough.

Responding to an open-ended question, students who were not satisfied with their programs suggested the following reasons:

—not enough feminist courses in sociology
—too many specific courses
—curriculum too vague
—should be no foreign language requirements
—should be better organization
—courses do not apply to future
—too much science is required

Part II of the March survey was requested by Jock Gunter, a UMass student who became concerned with the issue of guns on campus last fall.

19% of the 136 undergraduates sampled by phone felt the campus police should "always" carry guns, while 45% thought guns should be carried "only under certain circumstances."

33% of the students queried thought campus police should "always" carry guns on their hips, while 32% thought guns should be on the hips "only under certain circumstances."

26% felt guns should be carried "only in campus police cars."

25% thought non-lethal weapons would "be adequate for campus police duties, and 83% want campus police "to investigate the use of non-lethal means in handling campus security."

Finally, when asked whether administration, faculty students or a joint committee of all three should "advise" campus police, 87% of the undergraduate respondents thought a joint committee would be most appropriate.

Fac-Sen Discusses Parking, Propriety

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

The perennial and ever-present problems of parking, propriety and population came up as the main topics of discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert W. Gage, presented a summary of the newly proposed parking regulations and fees for 1973-1974.

A flat $5 registration fee would be required for all on-campus parking. Payment of this fee would entitle the car owner to park in peripheral lots (such as "V" lot) and use the campus bus service to gain access to more central parts of the campus.

Additional "service charges" would be added to the $5 base fee if a registrant wished a more centrally located parking space. Registration plus "service charges" would range from $24 to $75, with exclusive occupancy spaces being sold for $125.

Question was raised as to whether the Fac-Sen would have more time to debate these proposed regulations before they were submitted to the UMass Board of Trustees for approval. However, Gage reminded the group that "the Transportation and Parking Council, which developed these proposals, has Faculty representatives included in its membership."

"Faculty is only one aspect of the problem," stated Gage. "The largest constituency, in fact, which uses parking on campus is the commuting students."

Propriety entered Fac-Sen debate in a move by Nick Apostola, newly elected SGA president, to remove two standing councils, one of which was the Athletic Council, and one standing committee from the jurisdiction of the Fac- Sen.

It was Apostola's contention that to leave these groups listed in the Fac-Sen by-laws, violated the newly approved Governance document, which delegates authority for student affairs to students.

In Apostola's motion, as presented by Senator Robert R. Wellman and argued by Larry Ladd, these councils and committees should be provided for in the by-laws of the Student Senate, in order to carry out the Governance document stipulations. The motion to remove the Athletic Council from Fac-Sen jurisdiction was defeated and two subsequent motions, to remove another council and committee, were withdrawn.

Population became a subject for debate when various methods of maintaining a "quorum population" at Fac- Sen meetings and ways of encouraging attendance at these meetings were discussed.

A quorum provision motion was defeated at last week's Fac-Sen meeting. Since that time, the Rules Committee had considered the problem and at this meeting submitted a plan whereby attendance records of faculty senators would be used in each individual's re-evaluation for professional increments.

An amended form of this motion, which called for the publishment of attendance records in the Fac-Sen minutes, was passed.

Voted on and approved were the revised versions of both the Fac-Sen Constitution and the accompanying body of by-laws.

UMass Dancers Lack Funds To Make Iranian Tour

By ROBERTA MARTONE

What does it feel like to be the only dance group in the United States asked to perform at the Seventh International Congress on Girl's and Women's Sports? "Great," say the University Dancers on campus. "But, there is one problem— money."

In order to participate in the Congress, which is being held in Iran from August 19 through August 26, the University Dancers need $12,000.00. Presently they have earned $,500.00. This Congress is held once every four years.

This money is primarily raised through performances given by the Dancers. During the past few months, the University Dancers have given 28 performances throughout the New England area. In January the group toured for two weeks throughout the Commonwealth, Rhode Island and, Connecticut.

Another way is which the Dancers raise funds is through the selling of dance booklets and raffle tickets. They also give performances at the residential areas on campus for a minimal fee. Contributions also supply a large amount of their funds since the dancers do not receive state or federal funds. One of the Dancers remarked, "If every student on this campus were to donate a quarter, all sixteen of us could go to Iran."

The University Dancers is an organization concerned mainly with the modern dance technique. It has been in existence since 1909. There are 19 regular members and 7 understudies comprising the group. The dancers make frequent tours to the high schools in the surrounding area where they instruct master dance classes.

The Dancers will be sponsoring a raffle and a bake sale at the Amherst Fair, on May 11 and 12. They hope to raffle sound equipment and a trip to Bermuda. They will also be selling dance booklets in the dorm areas on May 1. Contributions may be made by contacting Marilyn Patten, director of the University Dancers.

C.C. Board Streamlines Fiscal Policy

By SHARON HUGHES

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night approved a Finance Committee motion to employ program budgeting techniques designed to define services the CC/SO should provide, define the goals for management to achieve these services and to provide a system for fiscal control.

They also voted on motions proposed by the Services, Building, and Food Services Committees of the Board.

According to the motion on budgetary policy, the CC Board of Governors assumes responsibility for providing "timely and responsible guidance to management" and management assumes responsibility to implement these policies.

The Board committees will present an analysis of "various" aspects of the building and building services, with recommendations for the following fiscal year to the full Board by November 30.

At that time the Board will provide management with "a target for the student fee so that pricing policies can be defined."

The Board and management will draft a tentative budget including "schedules organized by profit centers, non-profit, activities and subsidized services" by February 1.

The Board will present a completed budget for the Campus Center to the Administration by April 1.

The Board approved the following committee motions to:

—place a bulletin board between the two doors of the Outing Club office

—cut Building Operations costs by 25 per cent by using semi-permanent room set-ups —install a flame holder for the fireplace in the Commuter Lounge

—allocate not more than $200 for the purchase of an ice machine on the first floor

—purchase 150 replacement plastic chairs for the Bluewall at a cost not to exceed $2,250.

—renovate the linen rooms in the CC Hotel at a cost not to exceed $600

—increase prices at the Top of the Campus Sunday buffet from $4.50 to $4.95 with a 20 per cent discount for students

—create the position of a permanent Grade 8 Technical Assistant for the AVA Dept.

—change prices of Print Shop Services that are primarily non-student oriented including a selective 20 per cent student discount.

In other business, the Board passed a motion to compel any person(s) using the CC/SU to sell food or beverages to conform with existing local, state laws and license practices.

Correction

In today's issue of Poor Richard's a story has been written about a theatre group, Earth Onion, which will be presenting "Woman Potion" on Monday, April 30. Because of a change in location, the production will be taking place in the S.U.B. instead of the Hampden Student Center. There are also posters around campus and Collegian ads which state the location as being in the Hampden Student Center instead of the S.U.B. Please excuse the error.

In an interview with the Collegian yesterday, Governor Sargent discussed his reorganization plan. WTOY was there to tape the interview, which will be shown in the Campus Center tomorrow afternoon at 1.

Sarge Shuns 'Bricks And Mortar'

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON—"I want to see more decisions relating to UMass-Amherst made at UMass-Amherst . . . With the direction we're heading in today, I think we have an all-powerful office in Boston that will dominate the whole situation."

Gov. Francis W. Sargent commented Thursday afternoon while in his plush office during a special interview with the Collegian.

The Governor, addressing himself primarily to Reorganization, promised that his plan—if implemented—would not only revolutionize higher education across the Commonwealth, but also serve to the betterment of mental institutions, prisons, and detention centers.

Higher education should turn the corner and get away from the "bricks and mortar" concept and turn more toward improving opportunities, Sargent said.

I think more decisions should be made on the UMass campus by the faculty and by the staff under a regional consideration so that students in surrounding colleges who come to the University of Massachusetts can take certain courses," he said.

Under Reorganization, higher education would have more flexibility in allowing institutions to trade faculty back and forth and in sharing one another's resources, Sargent said. He maintains that the present system cannot assure this.

"I would like to see students and faculty blow the whistle on bricks and mortar . . . Quality education should not be measured by the amount of new buildings, but by the educational opportunities available. The regional pattern is advantageous," Sargent said.

Sargent indicated that the constructions of the "edifices" like the University library should be lessened and that more money should go into books.

He supports an increased tuition based on a progressive scale; the more wealthy families having to pay at a higher rate.

The additional money should go into scholarship funds, but this has not been the case, according to Sargent. The money has gone into the general fund "where the emphasis has been on bricks and mortar."

The proposal of increased tuition with the "sliding scale"—providing more scholarship aid—has been pushed aside by the universities and colleges, and it should be reconsidered, he said.

Sargent said he increased scholarship funds allocated by the legislature 1.3-million-dollars over last year's 8-million total.

"I would like to be able to go further than that, but with the financial squeeze that we're in, I don't think I can at the present time," he said.

De-institutionalization is the solution to the problems that plague mental institutions and prisons in Massachusetts and Reorganization offers a solution to the major problems, the Governor suggested.

"I think that there are some people in our prisons who really belong in half-way houses; who really should be able to go to some of the courses that are available in the community," Sargent said.

"Again, I think we have treated all the prisoners the same way, the mentally retarded the same way. We've built great institutions, again of bricks and mortar."

Belchertown State School depresses the Governor every time he goes there, he said. "Many of the residents there would be much better off in the community where they could join in receiving education.

"Again, Reorganization is going to be a key in de-institutionalization, providing some educational opportunities for some of the young and elderly presently kept in cages."

Prof. Cites New Energy Sources

By HUGH OWEN

Dr. William Heronemus of the UMass Civil Engineering Department spoke Wednesday night in Hasbrouck Laboratory on the vast energy available in wind and the oceans, as a part of the Earth Week programs.

According to Dr. Heronemus, in the last 100 years the demand for energy has doubled every twenty years. If this exponential growth continues for another 120 years, starting in 1960, by 2080 the total heat generated on the earth will equal the amount of energy produced by the sun. However, he said, this can never happen since it is physically impossible for the earth to produce as much energy as the sun.

"This inconsistency," he continued, 'demonstrates the need for a drastic cutback in energy consumption."

"The United States has used more than its share of energy." Underdeveloped countries are demanding more and more energy which simply is not available, he added.

In order to supply the necessary energy for the world Heronemus feels solar energy is the only possible solution.

Solar energy could support 40 billion people at the current US standard of living.

"Two possible sources are wind and ocean energy. These are secondary sources because the energy in the atmosphere and surface waters are largely supplied by the sun."

Winds are tremendous powers of kinetic energy, according to Heronemus. They are also reproducible, meaning their supply cannot be exhausted.

"Wind energy can be capitalized upon by erecting windmills off the eastern coast. These windmills could not begin to handle all the U. S. need for power, but they could provide the Eastern coast with power."

Concerning ecological damage by these windmills, Dr. Heronemus said he could foresee no problems.

Another energy source is the flat plate solar collector. This method is expensive but Dr. Heronemus said it could be able to pay for itself within a few years after being installed.

The ocean thermal differences process produces energy by drawing heat directly from the ocean. This method is only 2-3 per cent efficient.

Career Information For Vets in C.C.

By DAVID SPARLING

If you are one of the 2500 veterans on campus and are looking for a job then go to the first floor of the Campus Center today and take in the Career Information Seminar for Veterans.

Sponsored by the UMass Veterans Affairs Office and the Springfield Urban League, the seminar has been planned since last November by coordinator Francis X. Cotter.

Cotter has invited representatives from government agencies, both state and federal, from business and from industry.

On the first of what is hoped to be an annual service, Cotter said, "The program will offer in one place what a veteran might have to go through a dozen interviews to find out."

William Conners, director of the New England Regional Veterans Office in Boston will head a six-man delegation from Veterans Affairs. The Massachusetts Division of Employment Security will have thirteen representatives to inform the veterans.

Other agencies and organizations present will be the Civil Service (state and federal), the Department of Labor, the Urban League, the National Alliance of Businessmen and representatives from area business and industry.

"Business and industry are making an effort to hire veterans," Cotter said, "The recognize the veterans' problems and will give them preference."

Because of the current tight job market, Cotter said, this program is designed to give veterans "that extra push" and help in finding what is available to the veterans in federal agencies, private business and industry.

For example, in 1975 there will be a wide range of openings in all federal agencies because of the large number of employees retiring after thirty years. A veteran who wishes can join these agencies and can expert "in two years to go right up the ladder", according to Cotter.

Another little known fact veterans should know, Cotter said, was that Civil Service examinations are always given to veterans even though they are closed to the non-veteran now.

The seminar will run from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and all veterans, especially those graduating in June are invited to attend.

Watergate Defendants' Lawyer Meets With Prosecutor, Nixon

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A lawyer representing two presidential aides in the Watergate case visited the federal prosecutor's office Thursday after conference at the White House.

Newsmen saw lawyer John J. Wilson in the office of prosecutor Earl J. Silbert.

Earlier the White House said Wilson paid a repeat visit to President Nixon Wednesday, and returned Thursday morning for meetings with his two clients, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman.

Haldeman is presidential chief of staff. Ehrlichman is Nixon's chief domestic adviser.

Senate investigative sources have alleged that Ehrlichman and Haldeman helped cover up the Watergate affair.

Presidential spokesman Ronald Ziegler, meanwhile, denied a flurry of news reports saying the President is actively seeking a trusted aide to direct a house cleaning of the presidential staff.

Various reports have said Nixon tapped former Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird, Secretary of State William Rogers, or NATO Ambassador Donald Rumsfeld.

Wilson's visit to Silbert lasted roughly half an hour. As he left he told newsmen, in response to a question, that neither Haldeman nor Ehrlichman had been subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury. But Wilson wouldn't comment when asked if the two had been invited to appear voluntarily.

Ziegler has said the President still sees Haldeman and Ehrlichman about governmental matters.

Agnew 'Would Have To Resign'...

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, reiterating his confidence in the President's ability to resolve the Watergate affair, says he "would have to resign" if that or any other matter made it impossible for him to continue in good conscience.

"This doesn't mean that I have any intention of resigning because I still have confidence that the President has not been involved in any way that would shock my conscience," Agnew told the Harvard Republican Club in his office Wednesday in response to a theoretical question.

Later Wednesday, Agnew again proclaimed his confidence in the President on Watergate, in his first statement to newsmen on the subject.

The question put to him at the hour-long meeting with the students was "If President Nixon is shown to have prior knowledge of the Watergate bugging, what course of action would you follow?"

Agnew's replay, as quoted by his office on Thursday:

"Well, I wouldn't want to speculate on what I would do if that were shown to be true because it would depend on the details of what kind of prior knowledge he had . . .

"We have to go into the exact factual situation that exists as to what prior knowledge was and how it was received. I would not make a prejudgment of what I would do. I'd have to wait and see what all the facts about the prior knowledge indicated.

"One thing is clear, and that is what I said before—if I found myself unable to continue on a basis of conscience I wouldn't stay here as vice president and use this as a pulpit to criticize the President, I would have to resign."

The Vice President's press secretary, J. March Thomson, told the Associated Press late Wednesday that Agnew "has made no such statement at any time."

When the private meeting between Agnew and the students was reported in the Harvard Crimson, Thomson had a tape of the question and answer transcribed.

The Crimson quoted Agnew as telling the students he would resign if evidence surfaces showing that President Nixon had a role in the Watergate affair that goes "against my conscience."

Thomson said the remarks had been misinterpreted, adding:

"The Vice President meant the remarks to indicate a general position that if he ever had any inclination to be critical of the President, if there was ever a deep disagreement, especially over some kind of terribly important moral issue, he would never be critical of the President while in the vice presidency."

Judge Raps Government In 'Papers' Case

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The Pentagon papers trial judge halted testimony Thursday and angrily admonished the government for failing to turn over earlier a set of important documents related to the credibility of its own witnesses.

A government prosecutor explained that there was "no deliberate and conscious attempt to withhold this material."He said it had just gotten lost in a "mountain" of secret papers.

U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne was unsympathetic to the explanations. He ordered government attorneys to produce the documents as soon as possible, telling them:

"The burden of the government cannot weigh with the rights of the defendants. The rights of the defendants obviously are superior and must prevail."

Cambodia-Vietnam Situation Unsettled

Enemy Moves Closer; Kissinger-Tho Talks Still Unset

By EDITH M. LEDERER

PHNOM PENH (AP)—U.S. warplanes attacked antigovernment forces just across the Mekong forces just a

PHNOM PENH (AP)—U.S. warplanes attacked antigovernment forces just across the Mekong River from this Cambodian capital Thursday.

Hundreds of Phnom Penh residents watched from a riverside mall as the American jets bombed the river's east bank.

The advance, the closest to Phnom Penh since Oct. 7, appeared to put the enemy in position for a possible attack on the capital.

The antigovernment forces seized control of a long stretch of the river bank almost by default. Refugees said the government soldiers defending the east bank fled two days ago as the enemy moved in.

Military sources said the Communist command troops had gained control of the Mekong shoreline from a point 12 miles to the south to a point 16 miles north of Phnom Penh.

The government identifies the enemy troops as Vietnamese Communists, either North Vietnamese or Viet Cong.

Western diplomats and some Cambodian field officers have said, however, that only Cambodian insurgents are moving close to Phnom Penh, with the help of Vietnamese Communist advisers and artillery crews.

Cambodian censors prohibit the use of the term Cambodian insurgents in war dispatches. The government has 27,000 soldiers inside Phnom Penh, but field commanders apparently neglected to protect the capital's right flank, Western military attaches said. The government positions were reported thinly defended.

One military source said enemy troops were about two miles away from Phnom Penh proper.

More than 20 rockets slammed into the airport 2 1/2 miles west of the capital and an adjoining shantytown jammed with refugees, killing 19 persons and wounding 62. No aircraft were damaged.

Unlike Vietnam and Laos, the Cambodian government of President Lon Nol has not yet signed a cease-fire with the enemy.

Fighting was reported as generally light in South Vietnam.

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) - Hanoi has not yet formally agreed to a meeting here next month between Henry A. Kissinger and LeDuc Tho, sources close to the North Vietnamese delegation said Thursday.

The informants hinted that U. S. agreement to resume economic aid talks and resume the removal of American mines in North Vietnamese waters may be the price Washington would have to pay for a new meeting between the U.S. presidential adviser and the North Vietnamese Politburo member.

White House sources said Wednesday that Kissinger and Tho were expected to meet in Paris in mid-May to discuss violations of the peace agreement they negotiated in secret sessions here between October and January.

Without directly denying the White House report, the North Vietnames sources indicated that a new Kissinger-Tho meeting is by no means certain and depends largely on the preliminary talks opening here Friday between William Sullivan, U. S. deputy assistant secretary of state, and Hanoi's deputy foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach.

U. S. sources in Paris declined all comment on the informants' remarks.

Sullivan arrived early Thursday.

Diplomats noted that while the Sullivan-Thach meetings were announced simultaneously by both sides, there was no such announcement concerning the Kissinger-Tho review of the Jan. 27 peace agreement.

North Vietnamese sources indicated that Tho would probably make the journey to Paris only if Washington showed a willingness to resume clearing mines from North Vietnamese harbors and to return to the economic aid talks broken off last week.

The United States maintains that it is North Vietnam and the Viet Cong that have systematically flouted the agreement.

Underscoring U. S. displeasure over the status of the cease-fire, President Nixon on April 19 ordered a halt in the mine-clearing operations off North Vietnam.

Pentagon Boosts Pay To Attract Enlistments

WASHINGTON (AP) - Failing to attact enough volunteers, the Pentagon Thursday announced a $1.00 boost in a special bonus paid to men enlisting in Army and Marine Corps ground combat jobs.

The move raising the bonus to $2,500 clashes with optimistic statements by senior Defense department officials on progress toward an all-volunteer armed force.

Figures show the Army, the biggest problem area, has fallen short of its recruiting objectives for combat soldiers in every month since the Pentagon started experimenting with a $1,500 combat arms enlistment bonus last July.

The Marines have come closer to their goals, but also have been short in most months.

Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson said the bonus for a four-year enlistment in the infantry, armor and field artillery will rise to $2,500 for May and June, until present bonus authority expires.

In addition, Richardson said, the Army will test the $2,500 enlistment bonus payments for 12 hard-to-recruit technical skills such as maintenance specialists in missiles, electronics and armament with combat elements.

The Pentagon has asked Congress to extend and expand the enlistment bonus program for the year ahead at a cost of $43 million. If approved, that new legislation would take effect in July.

Richardson said in a statement that the number of voluntary enlistments in the 12 skill areas have been insufficient and the test will determine the effectiveness of the enlistment bonus in overcoming shortages in those skills.

The Army will be permitted a total of 2,200 enlistment bonus payments for this test.

The enlistment bonus is paid after a man completes his training and is assigned a military occupational specialty in one of the ground combat arms.

Since the first of the year, the number of young men enlisting for four years in the Army under the bonus plan has outdistanced the number enlisting for three years.

Earthquake Hits Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) - An earthquake which registered 6 points on the Richter scale shook most parts of Hawaii Thursday morning.

There were no reports of injuries or major damage.

The National Earthquake Information Center in Boulder, Colo., said it measured the tremor at 6.2 on the Richter scale. The earthquake that virtually leveled Managua, Nicaragua, also registered 6.2 on the scale.

Railway Walkout Snarls Japan

By FRANCIS K. ICHIGAYA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP)—Three million railway employees and other workers began a spring labor offensive Friday with a 72-hour walkout, plunging Japan into one of the worst transport snarls in its history.

Transport Ministry officials said about 53.2 million commuters and other passengers throughout the country would be affected by the strike.

Participants include workers of the Japan National Railway, subways, buses, taxis and a domestic airline.

All commuter and long-distance services on the national railway were halted at dawn Friday. About 18,000 trains were expected to be idled because of the strike by the 50,000-member Locomotive Engineers' Union and the 230,000-member Japan National Railway Workers Union, officials said.

Shield Law Doubtful In N.E.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There is little chance that a shield law protecting a reporter from having to give a court the sources of his news will pass in any of the five northern New England states this year.

Bills to set up such a law have been defeated in New Hampshire and Maine and are deep within the legislative labyrinths in Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Vermont.

The Massachusetts and Vermont proposals are not expected to see the light of day until next year.

The Rhode Island bill is in the House Judiciary committee where it has yet to have a hearing. Sponsored by Republican Rep. Aram G. Garabedian of Cranston, the measure is given little chance of passage in the Democratic legislature.

Here is a rundown on how the five states are moving on shield laws:

RHODE ISLAND

Garabedian's bill would exempt journalists from testifying in any tribunal, including courts and grand juries, on anything relating to their information or sources, even if the material has not been published.

The bill states it will work "in the interest of preserving the public's right to access to news, information and opinion through the free unimpeded functioning of journalists and the press."

VERMONT

The one shield law introduced into the legislature this year did not make it out of committee before the session ended, putting it into limbo until next year.

MAINE

The Senate first defeated an absolute shield law by one vote and then approved a modified bill by one vote.

The approved version would have allowed state Supreme Court justices to remove the protection of the law from a reporter.

The House rejected the modified bill 89-24 in late April, and the measure has not been revived.

MASSACHUSETTS

A half dozen shield law proposals have been submitted to the House by the legislature's judiciary committee with a recommendation that they be referred to the Judicial Council

The Judicial Council comprises judges and lawyers who do studies of measures at the request of the legislature.

There likely will be efforts in both the House and Senate to pull one or more of the bills out for consideration this year, but these efforts are not expected to be successful.

Most journalistic organizations ahve backed a limited law which would lift the shiel in the event that the information the reporter has was considered "essential to the prosecution of a specific felony" and is not available "through other prospective witnesses." The shield also could be lifted if "a threat to human life" is involved.

There is one absolute shield law in the package and a limited shield law backed by Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn. The bill backed by Quinn, however, is considered by proponents of shield laws to set too narrow conditions for use of the shield.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

The New Hampshire House on March 27 defeated 195-84 a limited shield law which would have allowed reporters to refuse to disclose confidential sources except as part of libel suits or when asked to do so by defendants in criminal cases.

Stroke Risk Linked To 'Pill'

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) - A two-year study by 12 major teaching hospitals across the country strongly indicates that using oral contraceptives may lead to strokes in women of child-bearing age.

The study, published Thursday in the New England Journal of Medicine, was coordinated by Duke University Medical Center. The cooperative project is known as the Collaborative Group for the Study of Stroke in Young Women.

While there has been previous evidence connecting strokes and the use of oral contraceptives, the new study offers the most conclusive and comprehensive data on the risk to date.

The study concludes that women using birth control pills are almost 10 times more likely to suffer cerebral thrombosis than those who do not. This thrombosis is a stroke caused by an artery in the brain being blocked.

Another increased stroke risk found in the study was that of cerebral hemorrhage, the rupture of a blood vessel in the brain. This was found to be twice as great in pill users, although the researchers noted that some thrombosis may have mistakenly identified as hemorrhage stroke.

The study of almost 1,300 women also noted that there was a disturbingly high association between smoking and stroke in women using the pill.

The researchers suggested that smoking "potentiates," or adds to the contraceptive's possible blood-clotting tendencies.

"It should be emphasized, however, that even in nonsmokers the use of oral contraceptive increased the risk of stroke," the researchers added.

In an accompanying editorial in the Journal, Dr. Martin P. Vessey, a British authority on birth control pills, said the risks of Pill-associated strokes must be put into perspective.

Although the risk of thrombosis-type stroke is found to be high in the study, Dr. Vessey said, "it must be remembered that the absolute risk to the individual woman is extremely small."

Dr. Vessey and other pill defenders have contended that the risks from pill side effects are smaller than those from normal pregnancy or abortion.

Other researchers sharply disagree with Dr. Vessey's risk estimates and say the risks from possible strokes from pill use, which currently are noted in package inserts of contraceptives sold in this country, should get greater emphasis.

Quinn Seeks Indictment In Boston Coed Murder

BOSTON (AP)—Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said Thursday that his office would seek an indictment next month in the death of Sandra Ehramjian, 21, one of eight young women slain in the Boston area since last summer.

Miss Ehramjian, of Cambridge, who had been working as a cab driver, was found strangled in a Brockton park Nov. 28.

Quinn, who noted indictments have already been returned in three other cases, called the pending indictment "a significant breakthrough."

Miss Ehramjian, formerly from East Meadow, N.Y., had been a college student in the Boston area, as were three other victims.

Quinn said the indictment would be sought when the Plymouth County Grand Jury convenes next month. He made the announcement after Asst. Atty. Gen. John Irwin, head of the criminal division, met with Plymouth County Dist. Atty. A. Stanley Littlefield and Dr. Michael Luongo, state pathologist and Suffolk County medical examiner.

Already under indictment in three of the killings is Anthony J. Jackson, 33, of Boston.

Quinn's office did not reveal whether an indictment would also be sought against Jackson in the Ehramjian killing. Jackson pleaded innocent to murder charges in the deaths of Ellan Ann Reich, 19, an Emerson College sophomore, Ruth A. Hamilton, 23, a Winthrop school teacher, and Damaris Synge Gillispie, 22, a Boston University student. The victims ranged in age from 18 to 29. Four were last seen hitchhiking. Most were strangled and some were sexually attacked.

No charges have been made in the remaining four cases. The victims were:

—Kathleen O'Gorman, 19, of Brockton, whose body was found July 9 in Milton.

—Debra Rea Stevens, 19, of Lynn, a Boston University student whose body was found Sept. 16 near her home.

—Kathleen Ann Randall, 18, of Centerville, a Boston University student whose body was found Oct. 1 in Nashua, N.H.

—Priscilla Lynfield, 29, a telephone company employe whose body was found in her Chelsea apartment Nov. 13.

Rehab For Young Offender Debated

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Senate is scheduled to debate Monday a bill that would create a "pre-trial diversion" program giving young first offenders an opportunity for rehabilitation instead of jail.

The program, which would operate in selected district courts, would be available to persons between 17 and 25 accused of a crime within the district court's jurisdiction.

It would allow the offender to be sent to educational, counseling and other programs, including "halfway houses."

The measure was up for Senate action Thursday but action was postponed after Sen. John F. Parker, R—Taunton, the minority leader, questioned cost estimates for the program.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee estimated the program would cost $300,000 in 1974, rising to $2.8 million in 1979.

In other action Thursday the Senate initially approved a bill that would make the U.S.S. Massachusetts a memorial to Korean and Vietnam war casualties as well as those of World War II. The battleship is now in Fall River.

The Senate also initially approved a bill establishing a housing court in the city of Springfield.

And it advanced the $880,930 Dukes County budget.

There will be a meeting of the Committee studying change in the Collegian Tuesday evening, May 1, at 7:30. It will be held at 93 Brittany Manor Dr., Apt. D.

On Being Arrested . . .

Editor's note: This is the first half of a guideline written by the UMass students' attorney. The second half will be printed on Monday.

By RICHARD HOWLAND
Student Attorney

I feel somewhat frustrated in trying to convey to so large a population of students advice on what to do if you are arrested. My preference lies in trying to avoid the fact of arrest so that what to do becomes purely academic.

Inevitably, it seems, people are going to be arrested for a variety of alleged crimes during the summer. Most of these arrests will have been avoidable by the application of a little forthought. While it may be subject to judicial construction in any given case, consider these dubious pearls:

1. If you are sure what is your property nothing that you do with it is likely to be characterized as larceny. Anthing you do with that which is not clearly your property is subject to misinterpretation.

2. Anything you do with another person is not likely to be objectionable if they consent to it or initiate it. Anything you initiate that requires force or persuasion is subject to misinterpretation.

3. Anything you chose to do with drugs is a risk regardless of what the drugs may be or whom you are with. Anything you do entirely by yourself (and I don't think drugs can be exclusively one person matters) can't very well be objected to regardless of the law.

4. Any activity, business or motor vehicle etc., has rules and regulations associated with it. If in doubt, ask the local law enforcement or political officials about the rules. In most circumstances it is easier to do what is prescribed by law than to ferret out and avail yourself of loopholes.

If you are arrested for any reason, the following information may be helpful to you.

ARREST

Your Rights When Under Arrest or in Custody: 1. You have the right to remain silent. 2. If you choose to speak, anything you say will be used against you in a court of law. 3. If you decide to answer questions, you may stop at any time. 4. You have a right to talk to a lawyer before answering any questions, and have him present in the event you decide to answer questions. 5. If you cannot afford a lawyer, one will be provided for you by the Commonwealth without cost to you.

When May You Be Arrested?

An officer may arrest you any time he has a warrant for your arrest. A warrant is an order issued by a court charging that you committed a crime and directing a policeman to arrest you and to bring you before the court. An arrest warrant is different from a search warrant.

You may ask to read the warrant after you have been arrested.

An officer may arrest you WITHOUT a warrant in certain situations: When he knows that a warrant for your arrest has been issued and is still in effect. When he has reason to believe that you committed a felony. A felony is one of the more serious crimes such as murder, robberty, rape, possession of narcotics, theft in excess of $100, or receiving stolen goods in an amount exceeding $100.

Whenever you are driving a car, the police have a right by law to see your driver's license and registration. If you are found to be driving without a license, the police may arrest you at once.

Your Head

. . Complaints About The Boss

By DRS. ANDREW W. McCASHIN AND STEPHEN M. KLEIN

Q: I have a personality conflict with my boss. He is always making subtle criticisms like hinting that I am lazy even though I work very hard. I try to shrug it off but after awhile it gets to me and I get angry and depressed. What makes it worse is that he seems to treat other workers better than me. Right now I can barely tolerate it and I am working part-time. What is going to happen this summer when I'm supposed to be full-time? Please don't tell me to quit because jobs are scarce and I need the money.

A: Interpersonal problems on the job represent a significant source of psychological stress for most adults. Interestingly this important aspect of life is rarely dealt with directly in any college or high school curriculum. Learning to cope and interact constructively with authority heads the list of difficult job-related problems. Just as difficult to achieve for the person in the authority position is the ability to provide leadership in a way that is rational and takes into account the needs of employees.

An authority problem is rarely one-sided. When there is conflict both people may dim their perceptions of the other and act out in a distorted manner. These distortions can be re-enactments of early parent-child struggles and/or projections of current personal hangups. In the situation you describe your boss may not be seeing you clearly and is acting-out a concern about controlling his own laziness and/or ability to lead. He may unconsciously resent and envy your youth and vigor. In organizations or businesses where there is a hierarchy of authority, your immediate boss may be experiencing insecurity because of the way his boss treats him.

For your part you may resent his power and your dependancy on him for a job. Your concern about the other employees could reflect ambivalence and competition and envy rooted in sibling rivalry. Your attempts to "shrug it off" while you really feel angry may actually be provocative by reinforcing the idea that you really don't care.

In order to resolve the situation the distortions need to be set aside and reality re-established. Both of you are there to get a job done and make a living. Although it seems difficult, in order to clear the air, you would need to assert yourself more directly with your boss. Such confrontation, of course always involves some risk. Ultimately you have to decide whether total job security is worth the price of holding your feelings back.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in YOUR HEAD. Send or bring your questions to 303 Machmer Hall.

'The Duke' To Lead POW, Berets Parade

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Ex-prisoners of war and the Green Berets who raided an empty North Vietnam prison camp not knowing the POWs were gone will meet in San Francisco for a weekend bash. John Wayne will lead a ticker-tape parade and a Texas billionaire will pick up the tab.

The 88 Berets who swooped in helicopters into the Son Tay prison camp in a controversial raid 2 1/2 years ago and 66 ex-POWs were invited to the two-day party by H. Ross Perot.

Perot is flying the men and their wives or dates here from spots all over the world. They will ride in a ticker-tape parade Friday through San Francisco's financial district with Wayne, star of the movie "Green Berets," waving at the lead.

Actor Clint Eastwood, comedian Red Skelton and the Andrews Sisters will entertain at a Friday night banquet, said Tom Meurer, Perot's assistant.

Then the men plan to hold a three-hour private bull session Saturday, squeezed between cable car rides, bay cruises, Chinatown tours and other tourist attractions in this city of hills.

The POWs all had been at Son Tay, a prison camp near Hanoi. In a daring helicopter raid Nov. 21, 1970, Green Berets specially picked for bravery and skill from units all over the world swooped in to free them. But the POWs had been moved four months earlier.

The raid was sharply criticized in Congress but defended by Pentagon officials as a needed POW morale booster.

Native Americans are struggling to regain their right to control their own lives to recreate their culture, and bury dignity and respect to a people who have long been oppressed.

The Indian culture is based on living within the balance of nature and communicating with the spirits of the land. This creates essential need to have their own land without alien cultures interfering with the natural spirits and forces.

The White American system has forced American Indians to assimilate themselves into an alienating lifestyle. Forced to enculturate, but denied full rights as human beings, they have been driven to live their lives with a high percentage of suicide, alcoholism, a large number of school dropouts, and eventual physical, moral, and spiritual imprisonment.

The Native Americans are overtly fighting now at Wounded Knee to rebuilt and regain what is rightfully theirs— land, culture, and dignity. It is our responsibility now to become aware of the problems and crises facing them, and to show our support of their struggle at Wounded Knee. Their struggle is our struggle.

There will be a table in the Campus Center Concourse today where information will be available and donations will be taken for this worthwhile cause.

Bits Of Advice

Today, there are a number of topics that need to be mentioned. First, the Amherst Sewage Treatment Plant is overworked but manages to provide secondary treatment for most sewage. The problem with the Plant is during rain storms the storm drainage overloads the plant and raw sewage gets dumped into the Miller River which joins the Conn. River eventually.

In a brilliant marketing maneuver, the University Store, Tuesday night, sold ten dollar blankets for a buck. The department manager may be required to take Remedial Marketing next semester. In Tuesday's Collegian there was an ad announcing a sale on UMass blankets. The ad mentioned the time of the sale but failed to mention the limited supply. There were only sixteen blankets. A large crowd had gathered long before the sale began and it was hard to control them when it came time to sell the blankets. When the ad was placed, Friday, there were more than sixteen blankets, but they sold at an accelerated rate between Friday and Tuesday morning when the blankets were removed from the floor in anticipation of the sale. Out of the rowdy crowd of about sixty students only sixteen got the treasured blankets. Mark Hays, an unidentified student at the scene, said that "this was truly an experience I would like to forget."

Someone complained last year that there was politics on the sports page. Well, here's sports on the politics page. The University of Massachusetts should leave the Yankee Conference. If we played better schools, our visibility on the national scene would be increased. This would probably make it easier to recruit players and give the school a better name nationally. At the NIT, I had an opportunity to visit Fordham. In their school newspaper they charged that UMass padded its schedule with teams like Maine and New Hampshire. While this may or may not be true, it is important to remember that you can't be much better than your competition. They are the only basis of comparison available. If we leave the Yankee Conference, we are going to have to make some sacrifices. Paying the guaranteed fee for a big time school will be hard to meet on the present budget. So, if we want a big time team to come here we're probably going to have to pay a higher Student Athletic Fee or pay admission to some events. More games, especially basketball games, will have to be played in Springfield. I can't imagine playing a team like Maryland in the Cage. That's not saying that Maryland is coming here next year. It's the old capitalist system: if you want a little more, you have to pay a little more.

I would like to recommend a course to all the non-science majors out there. Engineering 100 is not only interesting but it's good. The course fulfills an "E" requirement and it's one of the best courses I have taken at the University. Through a series of guest lectures, you learn about how a telephone works, what makes an airplane fly, what causes pollution, what can be done about it, and how electricity is generated and used. If you're in the social sciences or humanities and have no background in science or engineering, this course will increase your understanding of the way this complicated society works. It's worth the effort to look into the course.

'I Caught My Fanny In A Fiat'

By MARY KEANE

Weight Watchers is for losers. Weight Watchers International is a company commandeered by one Jean Nidetch, a Long Island housewife who ten years ago pioneered a crusade against corpulence unprecedented in the history of fats and fads. Jean Nidetch has coached some of the biggest losers in this land. People in the New England area alone have collectively collaborated to shed over 100,000 pounds. (I'll bet you didn't know we're 50,000 tons lighter!) I've lost count of how many Weight Watchers groups there actually are, but the idea is spreading like wildfire. McDonald's may have sold billions of burgers, but Weight Watchers may soon set an anti-record with a no-baloney approach to weight control.

Do true confessions turn you on? O.K., dig this: I was a Weight Watchers cynic! (GASP) I used to make my own dear mother cringe behind her cottage cheese. I would scream: "Ma, how can you get strung out on string beans when Jean Nidetch is slinking all the way to the bank?"—meanwhile I would be meditating on my own occasional bell-bottom bulge.

My mother is a stubborn character. Amidst incessant cravings for sauerkraut, she impressed upon me (with a rolling pin) that this was the only program that had ever worked for her. I hate to concede this, but she's now running around in a size 12. Not bad for a former refrigerator raper.

The Weight Watchers program is in itself fairly standardized. Members gather weekly to share their concerns about their progress (or, oops, regress) on a simple, unfaddish diet. Members are urged to have their doctor's approval before trying the Weight Watcher's fare. Weight watchers are weighed in and instructed by a lecturer who has successfully maintained a loss on the Weight Watchers program, who has been trained by Weight Watchers, and who won't hear of many excuses for maniacal munching.

At your first Weight Watchers meeting, you might think you've slipped into a traveling revival show by mistake. A member might testify: "I caught my fanny in a Fiat before I lost 82 pounds!" Another chimes in: "I ate the profits of the dorm bake sale!" People who've never been fat may not be aware of how desperate and deceptive food freaks can get.

Overweight people who join Weight Watchers are bound together to conquer the age-old rule of 'eat and the world eats with you, but diet and you diet alone.' Many people terribly ashamed of their weight problems have been known to eat only one meal a day. It lasts from 3-5 a.m. If you think that's funny, try living through it.

Weight Watchers isn't a bunch of fanatics bent on turning everyone into Twiggies. Members know that fat is not only physically harmful, but it's murder on psyche. Do you think you will ever meet anyone who's content to be incarcerated by blubber?

Weight Watchers doesn't kid around. It doesn't promise miracles. The diet itself involves a slow process of weight reduction which is intended to reshape faulty eating patterns. It offers support from others who've 'been there' with the problem. Each week, everyone who loses is individually treated to a round of applause. Everyone who doesn't is admonished to go forth and cheat no more.

Weight Watchers isn't going to be everyone's answer to the battle of the bulge. Not all people can be receptive to a group approach to dieting. I can only say one thing about the people I've met who've been able to make a go of the program. I've never seen a happier bunch of losers in my life.

"I do not have the time to hate men."

A "Hard-Ass Dyke" Tells All

By Judith Katz

I really don't know how all of this began happening to me. I had always been a timid, subdued, insecure, pimply, frizzy haired Jewish person from Worcester, Massachusetts (which is the birdbath of the state); in junior high school a soleful not quite adolescent, in high school a soleful adolescent not quite intellectual, a member of New England Federation Of Temple Youth (I was the group song leader), a member of B'Nai Brith Girls (Iwas the group outcast), in college a suicidal playwright, and do you know what they were saying about me in New York? Nothing.

What did I want with politics? I was an artist. What did an artist want with politics? The same thing they were saying about me in New York. Nothing. And then (it all comes back now) I found the women's movement, or the women's movement found me, and somehow, things have never been the same. My work began to frighten me because I was talking about brutal, frightening personal frustrations and ruthless, self-destruction. What I was talking about was my own life. And suddenly it occurred to me that my life experience might not be so very different from the life experiences of other women, suicidal, apolitical playwrights or not. I tested my perception, and found that I had perceived correctly. The effect of this discovery caused a major change in every aspect of my human person. The effect of this discovery was that I was made to realize that I was talking about my own life as a woman. I was also made to realize that I was talking politics.

When I found myself talking politics, I felt myself wanting to act politics as well. So one day I got myself all pulled into one piece, and I marched myself over to one of the trash rooms in John-Quincy Adams Tower, which is a dormitory in Southwest, which is a residential area at the University of Massachusetts, which is where I live. This trash room was no ordinary, run of the mill trash room in John Quincy Adams Tower. This trashroom was painted yellow and had a window, and a door with a lock, and was rumored to be getting louvers, and this trashroom was also the office of Jaqueline Leheny, which was also at that time the Southwest Women's Center.

Correspondences Et All

To the editor of Poor Richard's-

Having just finished Part I of Steve Feld's Best of the Beatles review, there's something I just gotta say. First, though, I should say that I enjoyed the review generally, it was filled with lots of inneressing facks, etc. So, this is no slur on Mr. Feld.

But that phrase... "Paul's puerile nonsense, John's Yokoized nonsense, George's Krishna-ized nonsense, and Ringo's consistently insignificant nonsense." This is what I'd like to deal with; I've been reading and hearing phrases like it for years, and each time it's like another twist of the knife. I don't really have space to deal with this with anything like completeness or detail, but I really must respond. So-

"Paul's puerile nonsense.' This I'm actually willing to go along with, in general. Much of Paul's post-Beatle work has been silly and commercial to the point of WHYN-FM sterility. The problem here is that Feld's phrase is a blanket condemnation covering every single thing Paul has done since 1970, whether intentionally or not, and those who are not familiar with Paul's stuff are likely, as a result, to assume that Paul has given up and joined the Archies. Which is not the case - he has produced some really brilliant things, particularly on Ram. To dismiss it all in three words is a little bit arrogant, to say the least.

"John's Yoko-ized nonsense." This phrase seems to assume that John is really not responsible for his "product" since 1970 - the feeling seems to be that he's fallen hopelessly under the spell of this mad, screaming woman, and has therefore steadily deteriorated. This assumption is a faulty one. In any case, the kind of pity/contempt it generates is very common, and one of the main reasons for it is that practically nobody on this campus, or anywhere for that matter, knows what Yoko Ono is really up to or really like. You could take the number of people in Amherst who have a real understanding of her art, put them into the men's room on the Concourse, and still have enough room for Tony the Wonder Horse and a couple of trampoline acts. I couldn't possibly begin to describe her art in this space - if you want to know more, contact me when you have a couple of free hours. "Nonsense" is really not the word. Gary Gomes, where are you?

"George's Krisna-ized nonsense, and Ringo's consistently insignificant nonsense." The former involves a kind of cultural chauvinism; the latter is kind of absurd. Judged from a strictly musical point of view, George's stuff is very fine indeed - melodic, rich, and far away from the banality required by AM radio. And what is there that makes "Awaiting on You All" any more a piece of nonsense than "Jesus is Just Alright By Me"? I mean really, let's not be so flip. Finally, about Ringo- if by "completely insignificant work" one means very low output, then Dylan's recent work is similarly worthless. Otherwise, it's silly to put down, say, "It Don't Come Easy" while praising, say, "I Feel Fine" or "She Loves You".

But I don't mean to criticize Steve Feld - what I want to say is that, since 1970, criticism of John, Paul, George, and Ringo has been confined to "Well they'll never do anything as good separately as they did together so let's unequivocally reject they do and after all Sergeant Pepper wasn't so good anyway and o we're so much older and wiser now dig dig dig dig dig dig dig". So quasi sophisticated. Such phony disillusion.

In Back Of It All

Now I realize what it's like to be in prison. Now I get it.
It's constant tension that manifests itself in the pit of your stomach and stays there; and hurts you.
It constantly may I this? and may I that? for little things; for stupid things you shouldn't consider having to beg for; having to steal; having to go without.
It's fear everywhere. Fear behind you; fear in front of you; fear above and below you.
It's panic. It's lonliness. It's crying for no apparent reason. It's crying for something to do; for some way to express confused and vague emotions.
It's nowhere to go. It's not being able to go anywhere. It's boredom. It's frustration. It's no one to talk to. It's no place to rest.
It's hating yourself for not daring to hate anyone else. It's concentrating on you. It's saying "I'm stupid." It's cold - very icy. It hurts. It's hard, as ice is hard.
You couldn't avoid it. X met X. You were born a woman Andrea.
Adam may have eaten the apple, But Eve picked it. Cursed Pandora!
Suffer for your sins, woman.

Pack Up The Suitcase

And quietly, without disturbing her tapioca pudding and her coffee, light with two sugars, Moe DePalma carefully removed "Poor Richard's" from the body of the Collegian. She glanced at the woman on the front page. "My, my," she said aloud. Then began to read the story. Sometime later, her tapioca drippy and her coffee cold, she finished. "My, my, my," she said. Then she turned back to the second page of the issue. She read a reader's reply to a record review by Steven Feld ., at our left, then made a point to remember to attend the Earth Onion Theater troupe who arrive on campus next week. The Earth Onion, whose full story can be found on the opposite page, are a group of feminists who travel around the country performing improvisational theater. "Probably the radical fringe," she murmured.

Unpack The Suitcase

Realizing her tapioca stale and her coffee cool, she pushed them aside and continued reading. Someone interrupted her reading of Carl Greenberg's review of "Free Fire Zone", short stories by Vietnam Vets, to comment on how nice she looked in mauve palazzo pants. She smiled, hummed a few bars of "Soon", her favorite song from "A Little Night Music", adjusted a copper bracelet on her left arm and read about how the Vietnam war really isn't over. Just as she thought.

La, La, La

Seeing the review of the Performance Group, she took out her Memo book and wrote: "Remember tickets . . . and don't forget to send Diane a card from Taiwan." Then she sped through a review of the UMass Dance Concert Group's performance last week. "Missed another good one, she sighed. After slipping through the middle, having seen it first, she found the music and album pages. Here was NRBQ and Marcel Marceau. "Charming," she thought and a small smile came to her lips.

Hi Ho, The Glamorous Life

Turning to the album pages Moe jumped up and exclaimed "how nice, more Beatles." And Jeff Bock, the Art Ensemble of Chicago, and (whew) Thomas Jefferson Kaye. Undaunted Moe turned to see Groucho, Chico, and Harpo and an enlightening piece on the genesis and career of the Marx Brothers. Then she dived into Weekend, only coming up once to exclaim: "Shit. No Lesbian seduction scenes in Prison Girls. What a rip-off. She closed the magazine, and rang a bell. Her valet Marcus Joseph Robertson entered quietly. "Yes, m'aam," he asked soberly. "Get the car, we are returning to the estate." At which time she gathered her magazine, her fur, her bag, put on her subscription sunglasses, orange with ruby trim, and left.

"Earth Onion" Highlights Women's Weekend

By C. D. Buffy

Acclaimed at college campuses throughout America, we are proud to announce that Earth Onion is coming to UMass, Monday, April 30, to end the Women's Weekend in Southwest taking place this weekend in and around pierpont. Earth Onion, a unique women's improvisational theatre troupe, will make you laugh, make you cry, and make you high. And it's free.

Earth Onion is a collective of eight women who have been working together in Washington D.C. for the past two and one-half years. A union of dance and drama teachers who met through, and were inspired by the women's movement, they have come together to create a totally new kind of theatre. Their play, Woman Potion, would heartily satisfy any witch, and indeed, as it is brewed, it fills with the moans and groans and suggestions from the audience. WE KNOW-WE WERE THERE! Even Robert Alexander, the director of the Living Stage, was impressed, "I was amazed at their grace, their warmth, and their ability to turn on their audience physically, vocally, intellectually, and intuitively. They warmed up the audience, having them participate in improvisational experiences designed to expand the sensory life of all who participated. Their contact with each other was enviable and their commitment to the work, to the art of theatre is intense, real and consistent."

We have come to a point in time when a rising group of women are beginning to regain a consciousness of their strength and their equality in society; a time when women share and support each others' endeavors politically, socially, and personally. We have worked hard, and Earth Onion is one of the fruits of our labor. "And I know what women get out of Earth Onion - feelings of strength and pride, affirmation of our beauty and perceptions of the world, a sense of freedom and fun," Off Our Backs - Womens' News Journal.

Perhaps we can best describe Earth Onion in their own words, "Our consciousness and experiences AS WOMEN provides one of the strong impulses of our work. The texture of our own lives go into creating improvisational pieces about women. From these, and from suggestions for scenes we solicit from women in our audiences, we hope to delineate more clearly the experience of being a woman, and to show that women's problems are not unique and solitary, but universal. . .We believe that being an all women's theatre group is in itself a statement that women can create and sustain new art forms that express the reality of the lives of women."

It is important to understand that Earth Onion is not an evening expressly for women - men are also welcome.

EARTH ONION is:
—A roomful of people shaking their hand as hard as they can, beating their chest, and yelling like apes.
—A silent crowd as a member of the audience expresses "Vietnam" in sound and movement.
—Tears as two women act out a scene suggested by a member of the audience.
—Uncontrollable exhuberance as children create human machines and statues about bubble gum, dinosaurs, and roller skating.
—A hilarious spoof of a sexy rock star.
—Surprise as two people who have never acted create an improvisational scene that moves the entire audience.

As well as being entertaining, Earth Onion is also education. In order to illustrate more clearly the viability of this free-flowing theatre movement, some of the women from Earth Onion will be teaching a workshop the following morning. The workshop could concentrate on creative expression; i.e., body movement, sound, theatre games, sensory awareness, and improvisation, however that will depend upon student interest. There will be a sign-up sheet in the Commuter Assembly office in the Campus Center, so put down your names and ideas if you are interested in the workshop. The workshop will be held at 10:00, Tuesday morning in the Campus Center - the specific room number will be posted on the daily activities schedule in the Campus Center, and will be in the notices of the Collegian.

It would not have been possible to have actualized our dream of bringing Earth Onion free to this campus without the funds of three concerned student committees. Our sponsers are the Women's Committee of the Student Senate; the Commuter Assembly; and the Southwest Assembly. Because Earth Onion is all about heightened consciousness and political awareness, we will be accepting contributions after the performance for our Brothers and Sisters at Wounded Knee.

The Eloquence Of The Viet Vets

By Carl Greenberg

Free Fire Zone
Short Stories by Vietnam veterans
McGraw-Hill
208 pages, illustrated, $2.95

Free Fire Zone is the second collection of writings by veterans of the Indochina conflict. The first entry is a poem entitled Gliding Baskets by former Sgt. Frank Cross. It is short enough to include here and is representative of the twenty-four stories which follow it.

"Eight Six Foxtrot - Eight Six Foxtrot.
This is One One Zulu. Over."
The woman in blue
Carried the weight swiftly, with grace,
Her face was hidden by her
Conical rice straw hat.
"One One Zulu - this is Eight Six Foxtrot Go."
"Roger Eight Six. I have Fire Mission.
"Dink in the open, Grid: Bravo Sierra,
Five Six Niner, Four Six Five, Range:
Three thousand, Proximity: Eight hundred. Over,"
The two heavy baskets
Balanced on tips
Of the springing Chogi stick
Glided close to the hard smooth path.
"Read back, One One Zulu."
"Roger Copy, Eight Six."
"Shot, on the way, wait."
"Shot Out, Eight Six."
A sighing 105mm round slides through its parabola
Then the explosive tearing at the steel which surrounds it,
And the shrapnel catches the gliding baskets,
And they crumple to the ground with the woman in blue.

There is a strange sense of inspired eloquence in the experience which is reported in this book. None of the writers are professional, but it seems that the experience that they have been through is such that these stories, which often come across as almost straight reporting, involve us more with the special horros of the war they describe than all of the professional reporting that came out of the war for so many years.

It is easier to believe these fictional accounts than what we are used to hearing as factual reports. There are always details that are wrong on the real reporting of the war and there are always denials. Even though these stories may only be vehicles through which the writers are expressing their feelings about their role in the war (and it is more than probably that many, if not most, of these stories are based solidly on fact), they leave an indelible impression of reality and truth. It is hard not to admit that even if the particular stories themselves are not accurate, at least they reflect accurately what these men went through.

While it may seem that the stories tell too much of the gore, the terror of actual combat, the sickness of twelve-year olds fighting and prostituting, there are several stories which are excellently counterpointed to the brutality. The Meeting, for example, is a very simple and well told story of one soldier's early morning sighting of a leopard. It is nothing more than that, structurally, but it evokes a whole host of emotions from the reader.

Lederer's Legacy, recalls the madness of the war through a story about the men writing up the certificates that go along with medals won in combat. "You get an Army Commendation Medal if you get shot at and don't get killed. You get a Bronze Star if you get shot at and somebody else gets killed. Or if you step on a mine and they don't know what to say. Of if you kill two or less dinks."

There are even love stories in the collection. Souvenir is an especially telling story which makes it clear just how of a cultural difference or misunderstanding there was between the Americans and the Vietnamese.

One of the editors of Free Fire Zone, Wayne Karlin, is an especially talented writer and has five stories in this collection. Tow of them, Search and Destroy and The Vietnamese Elections, contrast two aspects of the brutalized psyches that were both the cause and result of the war. In the first story, there is the outright panic that is felt at a slow tortuous death perpetuated by a group of soldiers. The second story is about death through the democratic methodorders are given.

The editors quote from Lederer's Legacy to end the book. It is a highly appropriate one: "And, of course, the nice thing about the story is that now that you have heard it, what happened is part of you, too."

Some of the writers maintain, even within their stories, that non-veterans never will really know what it was like, and that no matter how eloquent they are, they still can't convey the whole picture. This type of feeling is common among veterans, expecially those of Viet Nam. But there is a good deal that non-vets can learn and appreciate from the recounting of the veterans' stories, and a book like Free Fire Zone goes a long way towards bridging the gap.

Small Time Crime In Boston: Closer To Reality

By Ed Smith

The Digger's Game by George V. Higgins
Knopf
214 pp. $5.95

The crime novel has of late become a fabulous commercial success. Formerly, it would seem, crime novels were limited to serial-like detective stories that viewed crime from the legal side of the situation. Now however, the criminal world is becoming more and more romanticized; the mafia shief has become a folk hero. The Godfather is probably the best example of this and that book has undoubtedly opened the door for the massive influx of books pursuing similar themes. The fascination or possibly obsession, in America with violence is a chief reason; one which has been batted about so often I feel it would be redundant to take it up here. The major point I should like to make though, is that the majority of this writing has been shown to be mediocre, cinematically oriented prose. The Digger's Game then comes, in some respects, as a welcome change. The novel is principally a portrait of small-time organized crime in Boston. The violence aspect is played down considerably and as well, there is no attempt to show criminals as anything other than people who are trying to steal. Thankfully, there is no indication that this author feels organized crime should be made into the epic saga of American life.

The Digger is an ex-con who owns a bar and finds himself deeply in debt due to a rather expensive sojourn to the American Mecca, Las Vegas. The book opens with him doing a little moonlighting by stealing some checks from a company. Later in the story he steals some furs to make up the rest of the money he owes the syndicate, the firm to whom he is indebted. Along with this plot there is also the small-time organization to whom he owes the money and their problems. Fascinating the story is not, but it is plausible and retains one's interest. The characterization is good on the whole, though in places rather shallow.

The dialogue of Higgins has been highly praised and is probably the strongest stylistic tool he posses. It seems to be quite authentic and goes a long way in characterizing a few of the novel's major figures. The major problem lies in the dialogue as well; it goes on for such long periods that it becomes insufferable. In one instance, when the Digger goes to see his brother Paul, a priest, the dialogue goes on, non-stop, for thirty pages. This would be fine for a verbose play, but certainly in novel there are a multitude of devices which can be employed to break this type of situation up. After about ten pages, the dialogue begins to drag incredibly and unfortunately this is not the only instance where this occurs. Almost the entire book is made up of similar sequences of short action and then long, long dialogue. I found this to be the major criticism of the book.

The picture of crime which Higgins gives us in his novel is much more realistic than those which have come before it. The three principal criminals in the story are men who act as somewhat of a travel agency. They sell trips for groups of men to Las Vegas, where they proceed to run up huge gambling debts. Apparently these three get a cut from the casinos for all the money they collect, as well as the interest they charge. In other words, they don't get rich, but it's a living. This type of operation along with things like the numbers racket are much closer to what the bulk of organized crime is all about. Higgins, as Assistant U. S. Attorney for Massachusetts, is much closer to the real world of crime than most authors and consequently presents us with a picture which is much more believable.

The question occurs to one after reading a novel of this type, what is it that distinguishes the "modern novel" from the "contemporary commercial novel"? It would seem that the "modern novel" is a progressive moving force in literature. It embodies many innovative stylistic devices which enables it to examine constant themes in new and interesting ways. It holds a great deal of promise and offers new authors a wide diversity of settings in which to work. The "contemporary commercial novel", the class to which "The Digger's Game" seems to belong, is bound in a more classically structured frame. It generally deals with various aspects of the middle-class and all too often is a mundane manner of relating a mundane subject. These two classifications by no means encompass all of contemporary writing, but they do seem to be two large areas presently in existence.

The writing of George Higgins does not impress this reviewer as especially revolutionary or even exciting. No doubt it could be argued that this is not important, but there are other major problems in his writing which are much more evident, such as excessive use of dialogue.

We're Nowhere Near Peace

By James Matlack

We are told that it is over. All troops and P.O.W.'s are home. The claim of "Peace with Honor" is drummed into our ears. There is no denying that the scale of violence and bloodshed is drastically reduced and America's direct combat role in Indochina largely eliminated.

After working for nearly a decade in the anti-war movement, why can't I welcome the present situation as progress and constructive change? Why does it seem sour, perverse, anti-climatic? As I examine my own mood and personal reactions to Nixon's "peace," I am troubled.

I am not happy to have the American involvement in Vietnam seemingly resolved in the manner which has been arranged and executed over the last few months. Yet to wish this staged "end of the war" undone is to ask for a return of the full-scale carnage and genocidal use of our firepower which have ravaged the peoples of Indochina for too long. To insist that some alternative scenario would have been better seems to belittle the genuine relief, reunion, and reduced suffering made possible by the present bargain. What exactly so upsets me about the deal negotiated by Henry Kissinger and President Nixon?

The first and easiest criticism deals with the conduct of the war. The President's record is not one of peace but of bombing and destruction, not of quickly resolving the agony of Vietnam but of prolonging and expanding it. Four tragic years of death and devastation spread over a wider area of Indochina, more than a third of America's battle casualties, and the most intense air bombardments in history -- these are Nixon's achievements. Triumphantly reelected on the promise of peace, facing only fragmented or somnolent opposition, the President mounted massive B-52 raids last December against the cities of North Vietnam. With what justification? To get back our P.O.W.'s (while creating more of them) and to protect "freedom" in South Vietnam.

Here is the heart of the matter. Nixon prolonged the war an additional four years because he remained committed to the Thieu regime in Saigon, one of the least free of the military dictatorships we support around the world. There was miscalculation, folly, and criminality enough in having intervened and fought the war in Vietnam as we did. To have done it primarily to perpetuate General Thieu in his dictatorial powers numbs one's intellectual and moral senses. What an ignoble beneficiary of so much sacrifice and slaughter. Our Vietnam policy was not a victory for freedom. It was a squalid fraud drenched in blood.

Further, the war is not over. The present armistice not only lacks honor; it is nowhere near peace. Our planes, including B-52's, are bombing daily in support of a shaoby military clique in Cambodia whose repression would equal Thieu's except that it lacks the competence to do anything well. In South Vietnam the truce is widely violated by both sides. Saigon's forces go into battle with a vast reservoir of armaments which we recently provided them. Meanwhile, tens of thousands of Vietnamese, most of them non-communist civilians, languish in Saigon's jails. Verified accounts of torture, tiger cages, and gestapo tactics by Thieu's henchmen, backed by American funds and advisors, cause President Nixon no visible embarassment. American public opinion reacts strongly to but hardly stirs when our client ruler inflicts comparable brutality on far greater numbes of his own people.

On the homefront, the President is responsible for a bit of political repression himself. Studied contempt for anti-war groups and protests, further debasing of political discourse, manipulation of the P.O.W. issue, the unleashing of Agnew, sanctimonious cliche and haughty self-righteousness--it was not a pretty or inspiring performance. The latest manifestation of Nixon's tone and outlook toward critics of the war is his savage vindictiveness on the amnesty issue. (It contrasts sharply with his concern and intervention in the Calley case after My Lai.) Real elements of repression have been drawn out by this kind of leadership: snooping, surveillance, infiltration, bugging, agents provacateurs (e.g. Tommy the traveller), violance against peaceful demonstrators, phony arrests and legal harassment, attemps to block public assembly and petition, illegitimate refusal of conscientious objector status, entrapment (e.g. the Camden 28), conspiracy indictments and other Federal prosecutions designed to break the back of the anti-war movement rather than to serve the ends of justice. Many of the same Nixon appointees (e.g. Mitchell, Mardian) who sanctioned or encouraged the use of such techniques against peaceniks apparently came to surveillance and sabotage against the Democratic Party in the 1968 election. The current outrage over Watergate, et al brings little consolation to my friends and former students who had to endure public abuse, trials, prison terms and/or exile (some also died in Vietnam) during the war years of the Nixon Presidency.

Two widows whose husbands have recently died in renewed Vietnamese fighting.

So far this has been a standard though heartfelt indictment of Mr. Nixon. The more troubling aspects of my reactions to "peace" involve deeply personal attitudes. I have had to recognize the degree to which my own ego was tied to the struggle against the war. For nine years that struggle has been a central and constant factor. Practical organizing and moral crusading were combined in a long, uphill effort. Victories and defeats, friends and allies and enemies gained along the way gave meaning and texture to a decade of my life. Suddenly the central element seems to be gone. Nixon says, and the public believes, that the war is over. I resent and somewhat fear the change. What does this say about myself, about my reasons for struggle? On whose behalf was all that anti-war effort really made? It is as if I must balance a loss of vocation against the massive loss of life and feel tempted to wish for prolonged high-visibility war so that I can continue to be a peace activist. Such pride should not stand against reduced (though not eliminated) killing and suffering. "Pull down thy vanity, I say pull down."

There is a yet deeper level. The present armistice arrangement is sour and joyless because it demonstrates the relative ineffectiveness of the campaign against the war. I say this less in terms of broad political developments -- where opponents of the war did have a strong and constructive impact -- than in terms of intensely personal, gut feelings. I have been made to feel powerless. All the moral urgency, all the clear analysis of events which cut through official lies and secrecy, all the patient, exhausint labor of advocating, instructing, organizing, lobbying, vigiling, protesting, going to jail seemed unable to deter Nixon a whit from bludgeoning his way to "peace with honor." I am back on the Washington Monument grounds with half a million people and the President is watching the football game on T.V. again, while the bombing and killing rage on. And he has gotten away with it. I feel stalemated, impotent, invalidated by so vast and searing a moral contradiction.

Out of such frsutration and powerlessness furge feelings of resentment, anger, and vence. Here is the greatest temptation, the fullest test of peace-making -- resisting hatred against the leaders who have generated such feelings. Here also lies the source of a corruption of spirit which gnawed at the anti-war movement. The circumstances under which we have had to struggle against the killing in Indochina tended to create a killing mood within ourselves. In opposing brutality so deeply entrenched and so cunning, it was likely, almost inevitable, that many of us would become morally toughened and brutalized in turn.

The frustration and angry feelings are real. The present deceptive "peace" settlement only heightens them. I find myself at times almost venomous with rage. Yet I know that it is just this mood which gives rise to the worst cruelty and violence. As I have struggled (and will continue to struggle) against the external atrocity of Vietnam, so I must struggle within against the hadening of my heart. I bear a long grudge against Richard Nixon, an incredibly passionate and detailed indictment. Nonetheless, if I cannot sustain a loving attitude toward Nixon, I harbor the seeds of war in myself. Hatred corrupts. Absolute, self-justifying hatred against those who do violence engenders counter-violence. I must be as ready to forgive American leaders whom I have cause to despise--when and if they are open to moral accountability -- as I am ready to show sympathy and compassion toward any other participants in the war. Or else the killing spirit remains in control. How hard it is to learn this lesson, much less to live it.

If there is a synthesis between my resentment at false peace and the lesson of love, it centers in the awareness that love is not blind, that forgiveness is not to be equated with uncritical acceptance. Love requires honesty. It speaks truth to those in error, without rancor or vindictiveness, in hope that error and misunderstanding on both sides may be put right. Forgiving a person does not mean forgetting what was wrong and terrible in his deeds. Richard Nixon is still the recent bomber of Bach Mai Hospital and Kham Thien Street. When he suggests that the Vietnam War may have been America's finest hour, he is only demonstrating the further reaches of triumphant mendacity. His war policy and the war itself continue in altered form. The same fundamental issues must be struggled over. Plain speaking and peace-making are still tasks of love as urgently needed as they ever were.

UMass. Dance - Next Time Go

By Joe Arsenault

The Umass Concert Dance Group remains one of those untouched gems that nobody seems to accept. It just finished its stay at good old Bowker, and except for those too few who enjoyed them, it might have disappeared into the night, unappreciated. Well, it's not going to be that easy. I want to tell you all about it, make you drool with frustration (which you deserve) and perhaps even make you jump out of those cuddly corners or hardcrassed shadows, so that next time you'll go. It's time that you opened your arms to this darling newcomer, were amazed by its repertoire and applauded its efforts. The troupe combines subtle innovation with a graceful imagination; they are as much at home with the court of King Henry VIII as Harlem's deepest soul. They experiment with different forms like theater and mime and are not afraid of their own ingenuity. Friend, if you are one of those who missed it altogether, what can I say? You schlepp.

The performance started off rather weak only in that we sensed alot of nervousness. Limbs did not quite go up high enough, they quivered, and even the point of the dance was lost. However, Bruce Smith's next number caught the spirit, hid and improved their beginning. Bruce happens to be of Canterbury Tales fame and the origin of the piece could easily be traced to it. It was an interpretation of a medieval child's song and it allegorized the role of Death. Sensitive, Imaginative and Timely. Bruce lends easily to bigger than life roles. He dances powerfully.

Bill Serralles demonstrated such talent, poise, and dynamism that he deserves the best of congratulations. "Espiritu Libre" generated such sympathy, that I was enraptured by its sheer beauty. It was strong yet soft, it was not complicated. Nor was it too wrapped up in difficult body positions. On the contrary, the solo was marvelously simple, yet diversified. It expressed all those hidden mysteries that he keeps to himself. Here was truly a free spirit dancing, celebrating what it is to be alive. The next number in the program was a delightfully humorous idea-- "The Playdream", choreographed by Bill and carried across by the dancers amusingly. It captured the dayworld inhabited by a child, bordered by sleep. Each sunrise brings a bustle of activity and new experiences and is nicely closed by the sunset. Pajamied dancers, skipping, twisting, hopskotching, managed to recall our own distant childhoods. Yet not in sad nostalgia, rather as it was--complete in its own memory.

Andrea Watkins "Encounters" captured the violence of being alive in this age, the tension, of throwing ourselves bodily into experiences, into love. The troupe demonstrated that it can function as a unit, that it can show its own individual personality when needed. Yet when the dance calls for self-extinguishing, collective consciousness, they can do it. This is no easy feat, for any dance group, when the balance is found, it marks the troupe as beyond the amateur.

I have not yet even mentioned that each dance was individually, brilliantly colored. Red, purple, green, pink leotards, marvelously youthful bodies moving across the stage aesthetically...Why weren't you there?

Marcia Thomas' "Scorpio" was a modernistic, West Side Story, dance routine, not too exciting. But it managed to demonstrate their ability in a classic group number. "Taquineries" was delightfully teasing and made a statement about male-female relationships, as they are even today. It was the only number where a couple danced. It must be said that they were able to complement each other and make a harmonic ensemble.

"Exhibitions," a black and red, all girl number, resembled "Scorpio" in that it was classically choreographed. I must admit that this did not particularly excite me. Not until The middle of the second half with Tarcosic Dialogue did I really feel moved as I had been by the first part. This number was so curious, so unique, that I have to talk about it. David Smith, who danced so much all evening, was a reliable performer and demonstrated his ability and ingenuity. He said two words "question and answer". He spent five minutes with each of them and yet did not lose our attention once. It was exquisitely imaginative and entertaining.

"Moving in and Out" has to be a humorous adaptation of the fashion show. At least twenty girls promenaded across the stage in their flashy, elephant pants, capturing a rainbow of colors. Suddenly, out from the orderly procession, some of the Mses. start leaping across, breaking up the parade. By the end, each dancer was dancing to her own rhythm.

Rudkin's "Four Clowns" was the most baffling of the numbers. In it, three dancers dance in the modern style and their bright red costumes caught the eye. They were representing a family group, mother father and child. Suddenly a girl in ballet tutu dances across and confuses the small group. It is dance's statement about the evolving world. Yet, because it remains ambiguous and marvelously portrayed, one is left to one's own interpretation.

As for the finish, it defies words. They captured Pachelbel's moving music and transformed it into an artistic dansepoem. "Credo" was quietly sensitive, harmonically touching and a moving finish.

Words never adequately justify experience. The Concert Dance group is a budding newborn. Its performers are excitingly creative. This seems to be going by unnoticed and even unloved. At each end it gets nothing but hassles. Under the auspices of the phys ed. department, it never gets adequate funding, receives only the most limited attention, and one wonders if it is even secretly despised. On the other end, it never gets enough of an audience even proper coverage. Dance remains, with theater, one of the most alive of the modern art forms on this campus. Next time, go.

Editor's Note.
The University Fine Arts Council will bring the Performance Group to campus next week and the group will be in residence April 30 to May 2. They will perform Sam Shepherd's new play The Tooth Of The Crime on these nights in Grinnell Arena at 8 p.m. each night. The following review of the play was taken from the New York Times, March 1, 1973.

By CLIVE BARNES

Sam Shepard's new play, The Tooth of Crime, given Wednesday night at the Performing Garage on Wooster Street by the Performance Group, confirms all of the playwright's promise and establishes him as a major theater figure. The play had its American premiere last November at the McCarter Theater in Princeton, N. J. That production, far more conventional than this New York premiere, was for various reasons preferable. But first something about the play.

Mr. Shepard writes mythic plays in American jazz-poetry. He writes about today but obliquely, which is possibly the only way today can be written about. He is trying to express truths wrapped up in legends and with the kind of symbolism you often find nowadays in pop music. His command of language is daring and inventive—some of the words sound new, and quite a few of them actually are. The playwright has a musician's command of speech rhythms and links them to character and thought patterns. It is a lean and supple language, hip and bouncy. In a way, it is a white man's version of black argot—but not quite. It has its own way of dealing with words; and, while it clearly acknowledges a debt, it does have its own sound.

What separates this play from Shepard works I have previously encountered is quite simply its directness. This is a pure and simple confrontation that even the Greeks might have approved of. It is a play about change, about the awareness of history and the inevitability of age and death. Mr. Shepard's combatants are those all-American superheroes, pop stars.

The play's fantasy is to envision a world—or perhaps merely to symbolize a present world—where pop stars are killers. They have turf and possessions, areas of influence and gold disks. But these stars, playing according to the code of the game, are prey to the gypsies, the pop singers who come out of nowhere and fight them to the death. It is like a passage from Frazer's The Golden Bough, but this is drama not anthropology.

Hoss is reigning king. Part of the drug subculture, dressed in leather and hot with that old rock 'n' roll. He is also aging, and even his girl friend, his manager, chauffeur, astrologer and Maserati cannot turn back that clock. Crow — young, cruel, hungry and so cool you could freeze sherbet on his tongue—arrives and challenges him.

They fight, in a verbal boxing match at times reminiscent of that black name-calling game, "the dozens," and of course Hoss is defeated. He kills himself, leaving Crow the new king of a not quite new castle.

At Princeton, the play was staged in a conventional theater and was seen as a ritual between throne room and pop arena. It seemed perfect and was very boldly acted in a manner that emphasized the emblematic nature of the text.

Members of The Performance Group perform The Tooth Of Crime.

The Performance Group gives it with much more originality, but, with respect, I wonder whether this originality is not misplaced here. The playing area is an open space filled in part with stairs, ramps and various climbing structures, an environment that makes the average jungle gym look positively pastoral

The audience clambers around these structures, and the performance takes place in the interstices between wood and bodies. It plays around the arena, and the audience is encouraged to go around with it. It is fun, valid and interesting; but not, I think right for the structured ritual of this particular play.

The style of the acting, especially in the weaker first half, is low keyed and conversational. The actors throw asides to the audience and seek out eye contact. The text is played straight, although some of the speeches are repeated antiphonally, which detracts from their linguistic muscularity.

Despite my objection to the nature of this staging for this particular play, I must admit that in the second half particularly, where Hoss and Crow fight it out. It generates excitement.

The play itself, with its strange jive obscenities and inventions, catches the mind's eye. Yes, and makes contact.

"Hello," I said to two women who were sitting inside the trashroom. "My name is Judi Katz, and I have just recently come out, and I would like to get involved in your women's center." This was without any doubt at all one of the most difficult and easy sentences I had ever tried to get out of my mouth.

The two women in the room said that that was just fine with them and would I please fill out an index card and figure out what hours I wanted to work.

The things that have happened from then to now in the course of my life and, simultaneously in the course of my life in the women's movement have happened numerously and quickly. Before I knew it I was spending most of my free time in the women's center. Before I knew it, I was organizing and writing plays for a Southwest Women's Center cultural day. Before I knew it, it was summer and I was applying to be a student co-ordinator for the Southwest Women's Center. Before I knew it, it was September, and I was a student co-ordinator for the Southwest Women's Center. Before I knew it, it was this semester, and I was one of the most vocal, pain in the ass, hard ass bitch dykes in Southwest. (I am currently working on gaining that reputation at the University, and if I do, with a little luck, it will spread to the entire five college community).

The obvious question a sensitive person would ask at this point is why? No, the obvious question that a sensitive person would ask at this point is what? Let me change that one more time. The obvious question a sensitive person would ask at this point is two questions: why and what? Why and what would cause, an apolitical, suicidal playwright, timid and subdued, pimply and insecure to transform herself into a vocal, pain in the ass, hard ass bitch dyke? I mean, what besides noticing that her plays were becoming political, because, surely political plays don't say anything except that they are political plays.

Well, to tell you the truth, I am sure that much of it had to do with the other women I was meeting in, through and around the Southwest Women's Center. It had to do with meeting women who were my age who had just as shakely stumbled into the women's center. It had to do with meeting and loving a group of Lesbian women who were strong, warm, supportive, and not at all frightening. It had to do with meeting many women older than I was, some ten years older, some twenty years older, some thirty years older, (which made them my mothers age), all feeling just as strongly as I about the women's movement. It also had a whole lot to do with getting to know, to like, and gradually to love myself. When I got to love myself it was like I had been sitting in an empty and air tight aluminum can when some one hit it with a can opener. I popped out of that can with the rest of that air and I began to breeze. There was nothing that I could not do, there was no one who would listen to me. I was strong, and I was beautiful, and I was the person I really wanted to be. It is a feeling that I feel most of the time and will not go away, or if it does go away, it will not go away for very long. I will not allow it to go away for very long. I will never permit it to. I will give it no leave.

That is the end of the cause section of this up-to-the-minute true-confessions, you-were-there, eye-witness report. It is now time for the dirty part of this verbal junket. It is now time for the section entitled:

The Long Range Effects Of Being A Hard Ass Dyke

There are quite a few long range effects of being a hard ass dyke, many of them unpleasant, most of the unpleasant ones boring. In my opinion (and each hard-ass dyke has her own, very personal, preferable un-co-optable opinion) the most unpleasant, and there fore most boring side effect is that people keep telling you that you hate men. They are very adamant about this. Often you will say that you don't because you truly believe you don't, and always they tell you that you do. If you say "no, no" they say "yes, yes", and there is really no changing their minds. If you do not hear them telling you this, or if you are so bored by the statement you do not choose to answer it, those stating it point their fingers and beat their fists against the table and say, "You see! I'm right! I was right all along! You do hate men." And then you have nothing to do but shake your head, gently frown and leave the room.

I do not doubt that somewhere, perhaps even among my closest circle of very close friends, there are hard ass dykes, or moderate feminists, or even low key feminists who do hate men. For my self–for my own, personal, Judith

"We were sick because we had never yelled, 'Free Bill Baird'."

Katz self, I do not hate men. I simply do not want to bother with them, that's all. I want to ignore them for awhile. Ignoring does not mean hating. I'll repeat that just to make sure you all got it right. Ignoring does not mean hating.

I'm going to do something here that Edward Albee calls going a long way to get a short way. I am going to pause to tell a story. The story is fairly interesting and also fairly long. But it is a relevant story. It is relevant to me because it got me not only all over the second page of last Tuesday's Collegian, but also all over the editorial page of that same issue. It is relevant to you because you might have read last Tuesday's Collegian, and even if you didn't read last Tuesday's Collegian you are obviously reading this article, and the story will eventually have a point in this article, so why don't I just settle down and tell the story.

The story started about two months ago when a member of the Southwest academic division called me at the Southwest Women's Center and asked me if the center wanted to co-sponsor abortion and birth control advocate, Bill Baird. I told the person on the phone that I wasn't sure, but I would consult some other Women's Center people to see what they all thought, and that I would get back to her. Well, we all consulted, and we all talked about it, and the unanimous opinion of the staff members who were present at the decision making meeting was that Bill Baird really did alot of ground breaking and legislation changing work in birth control and abortion, but so had alot of women. What that feeling led to was a discussion of the fact (and it certainly is a fact) that there are several women doctors who are just as qualified and just as experienced as Bill Baird in matters of birth control and abortion. We also discussed the fact that it would be a lot more comfortable for us, and most women we knew, if we could hear a woman doctor talking to us about our bodies. I mean, they have the same anatomical parts and there's less room for feeling giggly and googly embarrassed when you talk to some one with the same anatomical parts about your own anatomical parts.

It just so happened that one of the women who was doing the opinion and decision forming knew a fairly well known and very good woman doctor from Washington, D.C. who just so happened to have done a great deal of work on birth control and abortion. So what we ultimately decided to do was to send this woman over to talk to that person from the academic division. She did go over and she suggested that the Southwest Woman's Center would rather co-sponser this woman doctor than co-sponsor Bill Baird for all of those reasons I have mentioned in the last paragraph. The person from the academic division said nothing doing, and the woman we had sent over came back, and we all decided that we just wouldn't co-sponsor Bill Baird. We all said, he can come if he wants to , but the academic division can get its money from another source, because it isn't that we don't like Bill Baird and we don't think that he didn't do a lot of valuable and ground breaking work in birth control and abortion reform. We would rather spend our money for a woman to come and speak.

About a week later, the same person from the Southwest academic division called me at the Southwest Women's Center and asked me if we wanted to co-sponsor Bill Baird. I told her that I thought we had already told her no, and she said why not and I said because we would rather pay a woman to come and talk to us about birth control and abortion. She said thank you very much and I said it was nothing and I hung up the telephone, and continued to go about my other Southwest Women's Center business.

I continued to go about my Southwest Women's Center business for at least two more weeks, when the phone rang again. It had, of course, rung many times in the interim, but this particular time is especially worth mentioning. This time it was anther person from the Southwest academic division calling the women's center to see if we wanted to co-sponsor Bill Baird. I did not answer the phone this time, and it was a good thing, because I don't mind having to tell people from the Southwest academic division things twice (you almost expect to, after you work with them for a while), but I definitely can not see having to tell them things more than twice. The person who answered the phone told the person from the academie division no, and it was only the first time for her, so it really wasn't so bad after all, and that was the end of that. Bill Baird would probably come, but we would not pay for him. Bill Baird would speak, and some of us would go to hear him, but many of us would not. Those were the facts we knew, and they were not especially effect producing. None of us was especially ecstatic about Baird's up coming arrival, but none of us was especially angry either. The truth of the whole thing was that most of us over at the Southwest Women's Center and certainly I, did not give a flying fuck one way or the other about whether Bill Baird was coming to speak at Southwest or not. The truth of the whole thing was that most of us at the Southwest Women's Center, and certainly I, had forgotten all about Bill Baird and the fact that he was going to come and speak, and were in the process of trying to forget about the Southwest academic division.

As it turns out, the Southwest academic division was a whole lot easier to try to forget about than Bill Baird. On Monday, April 23, The Daily Collegian, UMass' answer to the yellow press, ran one of the most frightening and destructive articles I have ever seen any where and they ran it on the front page. It was an article written by Mark Vogler, The Collegian's answer to Mickey Mouse, and it concerned alleged threats that Baird had received, supposedly from women, telling him something like he better not come to UMass. to speak or else. What that "or else" was is still in question, but so are the phone calls, so I suppose it all evens out. The other thing that Vogler's article contained (and this is the thing that was so frightening) was a series of extremely sexist remarks that Baird had made about the women's liberation movement. I will not use the word allegedly here, because I asked Baird if he had made the statements and he not only admitted that he had but he repeated them as well, but that part of the story comes in a few seconds, so hold on.

What I thought about the article was that Baird was a real pig, even if he did do a lot of ground breaking and legislation changing work in birth control and abortion, and I wondered who called him up and asked him not to come. I didn't even have a chance to say this to any one when the phone rang. Fortunately, it was not the Southwest academic division. It was a woman reporter from one of the Springfield newspapers. She asked me what I knew about the phone calls and I told her the same thing they are saying about me in New York which was nothing. She asked my why we were objecting to Baird's coming to speak at UMass. I told her that prior to Baird's statements we had no objections to his coming to speak, we just hadn't wanted to co-sponsor him because we would rather have our money pay for a woman to speak. Now what we were going to object to, if we were going to object to anything, was the statements Baird had made about the women's movement. The woman asked me if we were planning a demonstration against Baird and I said that I didn't think so but I would check, so I asked every one who was standing around in the center if we were planning a demonstration and they all said we don't think so, so I told the reporter that we didn't think so, but maybe a few of us might want to go over to Baird's talk and challenge him on a few of his statements. She asked me a few more

The Movement On The Hill

-By Barbara Joseph, Joan Stoia, Lynn Santoro for The Orchard Hill Women's Center

This past year the Orchard Hill Women's Center has been operating on a total volunteer basis. Activities have usually been limited to the Center itself. Women who attend the weekly meetings (Wed. 6:30 PM, 112 Field) have discussed fund raising projects, issues of support and mutual concern, and the recent Liberation Corridor proposed for the fall, seen women's films, and developed a colloquium program which has evolved into the Hill's Feminist Studies Program for the fall.

The most successful colloquia conducted this spring were "Feminism: Focus on Lesbianism" (Theresa Carr, Laura Simeone) and "Our Bodies, Our Selves" (Linda Faller, Kate Gillmore). Women from the Center administered a questionnaire to women in the four houses to ascertain the types of activities desired by Hill women and discovered that there is interest in films, discussion and counseling groups, men's support groups, courses and colloquia.

Plans For The Fall

The Center's philosophy has evolved from four major areas of concern to women:

1. The history of women and the Feminist movement
2. The education of women as people and as individuals
3. Personal well-being of women on the Hill (personal counseling, referrals, work in conjunction with the University Health Services to make women aware of their personal health needs and how to service them, discussions on issues of rape, abortion, birth control, pregnancy), and
4. Future role of women in society (discussions on women in the professions, Third World women, ways to effect change.)

Through our work next year we hope to effect a broader based education of the Orchard Hill community in the area of Women's Studies. The mechanisms for this education include:

1. The establishment of a speakers bureau
2. Conducting a film series
3. Publishing a newsletter
4. Working with the Hill counseling staff and Area Government
5. Working with the Third World Center to co-sponsor events of mutual concern
6. Working in conjunction with the Liberation Corridor
7. Assisting in the setting up of Men's Support Groups in the area
8. Sponsoring courses and colloquia which deal with the four afforementioned areas of concern.

Courses For The Fall

Although Orchard Hill is still under investigation by the Faculty Senate, Hill women feel a strong need to plan for the future an area of study which effects them most directly. If we are funded we will offer the following courses in the Fall semester:

1. The History of Women in America - This course is designed to fill out and elaborate on the casual and isolated comments which have, in general historical writings, passed for "women's part in American history." Some of the topics considered will be: The Sources of Power, Puritanism, The Post-Revolutionary Period (Changes in Women's about our bodies, male-identification, group expectations for out future, learning to take our bodies seriously, anatomy and physiology, sexuality, women and health, feminism, and women and the economy. Women taking this course would be trained to conduct Our Bodies Our Selves colloquia in their houses.

Roles), Abolitionists and Feminists, Black and White Women in the South, The suffrage Movement, Radical Women, The Birth Control Movement, The Current Women's Liberation Movement.

2. Our Bodies, Our Selves - This course will discuss: How we have grown up feeling
3. Women and Art - The object of this course is to further develop and communicate an analysis and practice of the role and image of women in art. The course will be team taught by four women, representing varied perspectives in the arts.
4. American Philosophy From a Feminist Perspective - This study in social theory will involve a presentation, defense and application of a marxist, feminist, pragmatic theory of the relation between ideas and society to some key American and European philosophies from the 17th to the 20th century.

Colloquia will be created out of each course and will focus on some of the issues raised in that particular course. Students would be encouraged to take advantage of both a three credit course and a small group experience.

We are enthusiastic about our plans for the future. Next year, we plan to establish strong ties with other women's groups on campus to work towards bringing women's issues to the forefront of campus concern.

questions which were the same questions she had asked me before, and I was beginning to suspect that she too was from the Southwest academic division when she said goodbye and thank you very much, and things ended on a relatively pleasant note with us.

The next few hours passed in relative peace, the most monimental occurance being that I was actually able to find any one of my more ellusive but favorite English professors, in her office. Actually, that was monumental. We had a nice chat about requirement waivers and what we were going to read next in class, and I might have even smoked a cigarette, then I left and went back to the Women's Center.

I was sitting down and asking if we were going to even bother about Baird, and thinking about preparing a statement addressed to him when who should happen into the Women's Center but Bill Baird himself. Of course we did not know he was Baird at the time, and of course he was not alone. He came with a woman and two college boys, who we later discovered were Jimmy Olsen Junior Secret Cub Reporters from the Collegian. Kevin Mack was not exactly discreet about it because he kept taking nochalant photographs, the whole time Baird was there.

Baird essentially wanted to know the same things that the woman reporter from the Springfield paper wanted to know and he was just as repetative and much less pleasant about it than she was. What Baird kept telling us was, he had been arrested eight times in the past ten years and we were sick because we never had yelled "free Bill Baird" when he was in jail, but we always had yelled "free Angela" when she was in jail, and obviously, we didn't want him to come and speak because he was a man and he thought any movement that banned men was sick. My first thought was, Bill Baird is very paranoid. It was not an innaccurate perception.

I asked Baird who specifically had not supported him when he was jailed and he said every one, and we all raised our eyebrows. He then mentioned the names of two nationally known feminist women, and repeated that no feminist had ever been arrested eight times on abortion issues. I told him I thought he was a very brave man, but maybe he shouldn't take the actions of two nationally known feminists as actions which speak for all feminists. He then asked me what I had done about abortion issues and I answered, unembarassed, that I had done nothing, that all of my energies were going into a different area of the women's movement.

We spent a great deal of time, decidedly too much time, reassuring Baird that we did not take offense to him personally, but rather to the fact that we would have preferred to have a woman talking to us about our bodies and this prefrence was ignored. Baird, like every other non-feminist person to whom we spoke and explained this issue did not hear us at first, and when he did hear us, he misinterpreted, and told us that we were down on him because he didn't have a vagina, and by the way, he had been arrested eight times in the past ten years.

I tried very hard to explain to Baird, it was not, at least for me, that I did not like men. I simply wished to support and be supported by women.

The whole conversation boiled down to another woman and I having to make our points over and over and Baird announcing over and over he had been arrested eight times. Finally, Baird looked down at his watch and said he had to go. It was exactly at this point it occurred to me to ask Cub Photographer (the still unidentified) Kevin Mack, taking pictures. I asked in my calmest, most monotone, hippy voice. Mack turned around and very pointedly took my picture. I asked him why he took my picture, he mumbled about the Collegian, and it occurred to me that the reporter was probably one of the reporters who wasn't allowed into the rape conference. I was right again. The other Cub reporter who was busily taking notes (could it have been shorthand?), was Mark Vogler, who had made quite a name for himself by bitching all over the Collegian about what chauvenists women were because they wouldn't let men into their rape conferences. Poor, sad, baby Mark Vogler. Of course, being the big, brave, Jimmy Olsen's that they were, they still hadn't told us their names, and as a matter of fact never got around to it. I found out who they were the next day.

I found out who because those big, brave boys came with axes to grind and they used them, with no finesse at all, in Tuesday's Collegian. What happened before they left with Baird was this: I asked why Baird had come with two male reporters. Mack responded by saying that I hated men. I responded to Mack by saying that I do not hate men, I just choose to put my energies into women. Mack responded by saying I did so hate men. That took care of that. Baird took his cortage and went home, or maybe to the Newman Center, but check with them because they have a different story, just as good as this one.

At any rate, Vogler and Mack each wrote articles for the Tuesday Collegian. Mack wrote an editorial, and Vogler a so-called, un-biased news report. Both attacked me and other Southwest Women Center staff for our "misbehavior" (we weren't nice ladies, all the way to the very end). As I said, they both ground their axes with very little finesse, and the attack did not hurt. It was just annoying. It was like having a mosquito bite or athlete's foot, really. Because I had to devote about an hour to writing a letter to the Collegian explaining that I did not hate men, and that Vogler and Mack and yes, even Bill Baird were all very much off the wall, and that one feminist did not speak for all feminists and by now you all know what else I had to explain.

So here we are, many paragraphs later, back where we started. The exciting story of Bill Baird, Micky Mouse and Jimmy Olsen was here to show you some people get very paranoid and insecure and stop hearing you, or if they are hearing you, stop listening to you as soon as you say you would rather relate to women. It doesn't even have to be sexually. It can be any way that is not the traditional, competitive, insincere way women are supposed to relate to each other.

I, for one, say phooey on that. I am going to relate to women the same, warm, wonderful, supportive way I hope I have been relating to them for the past year and a half. I feel better about myself, I feel a great deal of love and warmth from them, and we all feel very, very good about each other. I am not going to apologize, prostrate myself, or try to make amends to those people who challenge my relationships to women. It's not worth the effort anyway. Those people can't hear me.

If men insist on believing that I hate them, then I feel very sorry for them. I do not have the time to hate men. I really am too busy loving women.

Just Enough To Make Expenses

By Mike Kostek

A person walked over to one of NRBQ's roadies and gestured to the 300 people in the room, "Why didn't you promote this more? You could've really got some people in here."

"Oh no, No! This is fine. Just enough to make expenses," said the man.

Good enough. The 300 people comfortably filled Art's Gallery in Deerfield and kept things extremely relaxed throughout the evening. There were a few beeries, but they were mere fodder for the misplaced minds of the acoustic Travis Shook & The Club Wow, and were effectively blown out by the two electric bands.

If you're at all entranced by the semi-sane musical meanderings of Dan Hicks, The Bonzo Dog Band and Martin Mull, or haven't heard any of these particular deviants and just crave inspired craziness, go see Travis Shook.

They are Mr. Travis, who plays guitar, and Mr. Shook comes up with bass, bongos, harmonica, and mike stand. I hope I've got their name straight. Actually, I don't think they really care. Both can sing and play well, as is required for all musical aberrants. In order to make fun of "La Bamba", you've got to be able to play "La Bamba" as well as Harry Bellefonte.

"Do you wanna boogie?", Travis asks the crowd.

"YEAH", they do.

"Well, go on ahead. We're gonna play."

Mark my words, time's a-gonna fly, and we'll all meet again in the sweet buy or bye.

Enter the heroes, NRBQ. These fellows are perhaps the purest, most organic rock and roll band in existance today. Unsullied by widespread acceptance or riches, there they were, after four albums, playing for cost in a decrepit former roller skating rink.

"I figure we'll get popular real slowly," says Terry Adams, their clavinet player and mainstay.

They have been ignored for years, but they were up on stage, as enthusiastic as ever, bumping things off nicely with "Do You Feel It?". Lately they've been getting good reviews in the lead spot in The Village Voice, so there's still hope.

Steve Ferguson, one of the originals, is back, after over a year's absence. Back for a while, actually, as he's just passing through before he goes back to his own group, The Wild Dogs. He gives the band a big sound, with two guitars, bass, drums, clavinet, occasional horns and vocals that are not on the shy side.

While they didn't pull out all the stops like I know they can, they still made a revitalizing time. They zinged through "All Mama's Children", "Let's Make Some Love", RC Cola and Moon Pie", "Tragic Magic", "Magnet", Al Anderson's 'hit', "We'll Make Love", "Get That Gasoline Blues", "Slow Poke", "New Tune", "Better Take Me Home", "All In The Game" and their most famous title, "Howard Johnson's Got His HoJo Workin' On Me".

That last paragraph combined with the other new tunes and odds and ends they threw in (they did a great fifteen seconds of the "I Love Lucy Theme") contains memories of a delightful set. I get the same feeling from seeing these guys as I do from seeing Captain Beefheart or listening to Rundgren's new album. Someone told me that the greatest music made him laugh. Notha ha, but HA ISN'T THIS IT!!! HA! It's laughter that means the music's carried you aloft and opens up the gate of triumphant, fantastic feelings of affirmation in everything. Masterful music makes you a different person after you've heard it. (Attention NRBQ fans, it's true that the band will be playing for free at a certain area on campus at 2 p.m. on the 28th.)

Clean Living mopped up afterwards, and it was a strange sight. Here is a band, a competent band, in trouble. Their first album of country-tinged rockers, as well as their 'hit single' "In Heaven There Is No Beer" has pigeon-holed the group into a narrow rut. Just as Area Code 615 reached this certain level of popularity/ability so has Clean Living ascended to their level of mediocrity. It's hard playing country-rock, at least the real country-rock they play. They've reached the point of proficiency where their progress will be very slow and subtle. Once you've got the basics down the road becomes very hard, and you really must be dedicated. Playing country versions of "Party Doll" every night isn't the most appealing thing to do, nor the most rewarding, but that's what you've got to do to get really good at country-rock.

You can explode a lot faster and easier in straight rock than you can on the slow country road, and it's gotta be pretty tempting if you're getting hungry. I've heard there's some dissention in the band on this account, so they're edging slowly more into rock. Right now it's too early to say how well their straddling will work out, but the crowd liked them last Thursday, and they were laying some good stuff down.

All in all, this low-keyed show at Art's was about the nicest time I've seen in a while. Thanks to the folks who didn't want money, just a good time.

French Arts Live At Sanderson

By Antoinette Bosco

A live "art" demonstration of popular French positions was held last week at the infamous Julia Sanderson Theatre in Springfield. The show featured self-proclaimed thespian Marcel Marceau, "World's Greatest Non-Verbal Communicator", and in the passive role, his statuesque partner, Pierre Verry. Marceau may not in fact be the world's greatest non-verbal communicator, but he is unquestionably the greatest style pantominist at large today, which is something close. In other words, Mr. Marceau has devoted his life to skipping around the stage wearing a skin-tight sailor suit and doing silent skits in whiteface. He does this better than anyone else in the world. He is better at it than Etienne Decoux, h s old instructor, and also better than Verry, who earns perfunctory applause and gratuitous critical praise for heading Marceau's pantomine school, anc for his own impressions of a storefront manikin: he holds Marceau's title cards and then disappears. It's too bad, in a way, to see an artist accomplished in his own right performing in a capacity that might have been satisfied by Charles McCarthy, but that's Art for you.

Anyone who ever spent an hour in front of the tube has a rudimentary idea of what Marceau does. He's one of those people that no one particularly thinks of or talks about, and yet when he is mentioned everybody knows instantly who's at stake. Multiple appearances on shows from Rowan and Martin to Captain Kangaroo have ground him into our hearts, so that everyone remembers Bip (say "Beep") the Clown, whom Marceau created and who has by this time subdued and eaten his master. Marceau apparantly accepts the fate of being Bip first and Marcel second, since he routinely caps his act with Bip stylings, in which the little clown in the pullover and opera hat encounters bees, dogs, subways, butterflies, suicide, dynamite, circus lions, high society, auditions, sports, drugstores, and Future Life. As a comedian, Marceau is top o' the morning. His routines are uniformly original and (better than that) really funny without ever getting lewd, crude, rude, boorish, low, common, ha-ha, or god-obvious. He can treat dog shit in an amusing way without letting anyone forget that he's watching Art with a capital R. No mean feat, but the greatness is in the performance. His creative control of his body is so great that as he reclines on a puff of thin air he converts it into a solid mantlepiece, and when he climbs imaginary ladders you'd be prepared to swear that at some point he was standing with both feet off the ground. He is an unsurpassed student and analyst of motion. He has his moves down to the point where a blind man couldn't doubt whether his character was old or young, drunk or sober, happy or sad or what. He's an accomplished comic pantominist, who will be remembered for his gags but who has succeeded in occasionally transcending the limits of his form. Generally speaking, he kids around a lot and puts on tours-de-force of character quick-change, but every so often he gets in a genuine comment on our condition, which he seems to find inexpressibly sad. His famous "Youth, Maturity, Old Age and Death" is an amazing piece of time compression, and as sad as watching your favority puppy racing toward the finish line years ahead of you. There's another bit involving illustration of music with hand motions that comes as close as you please to pure abstract Art. So you'll probably like yourself more if you dig on some Marceau pantomines. Even the usual crowd of zombies and bowtie deadheads at the Sanderson seemed to come away with something or other.

Part Two

The Best Of The Beatles: 1967-1970

By Steve Feld

The Beatles always waited agonizingly long periods between releases. The six month interim from "Yellow Submarine" to "Strawberry Fields Forever" was particularly excruciating because of the rapidly changing cultural climate and the emergence of the Youth Movement, San Francisco's Haight/Ashbury district, marijuana and LSD. At the forefront of everything the Youth Movement stood for were the Beatles, and now we waited for their next record, which would hopefully give us the Word.

When "Penny Lane"/"Strawberry Fields Forever" was released in February '67, we caught a glimpse of "the boys" as they now looked. They sported mustaches, and suprisingly short hair. John unofficially became "the walrus" because of his namesake mustache and his wire-rim glasses, which he wore for the first time in public (and thereby starting another trend). Paul looked prim and proper, like a member of England's distinguished House of Lords, and took a fancy towards double-breasted Edwardian suits. George became mystical, went around talking about the Purpose of Life, and took to wearing a Vandyke beard and long, flowing robes. He was now studying the sitar with Ravi Shankar, which he used sparingly on Rubber Soul and Revolver. And Ringo, for the first time, looked famous; or, as one writer put it, like a young, slim Orson Welles.

Now was the post-acid, pre-Maharishi days. Revolver was released the preceding August, Sgt. Pepper wasn't to come until June. They had stopped touring and subsequently produced films to promote their singles. The "Penny Lane"/"Strawberry Fields Forever" film was shown on the "Hollywood Palace" and keenly reflected the McCartney-Lennon paradox. Paul's "Penny Lane" was typically delightful and melodic, while John, in his song, was now contemplative, revelating, and surreal. Naturally, "Penny Lane" got to be the A-side because, at that time, the group had no idea how people would react to "Strawberry Fields Forever."

There was, at first, a mystery surrounding "Penny Lane." The first pressings, given in advance to radio stations, had a different ending where, instead of the piercing cymbal, there was a closing cornet line. This was pulled off from circulation and the current version replaced it. Nobody knows why. "Strawberry Fields", meanwhile, was the first in the Lennon trilogy ("A Day in the Life" and "I Am the Walrus" were to follow) and gave Hippies and non-Hippies something at marvel at. John wrote it in Spain during the filming of How I Won the War; a time when, due to personal conflicts, he found writing songs difficult. An enchanting and cryptic song, it proved to be a precursor for the following complexities of Sgt. Pepper. (And what will it be? "I buried Paul" or "Cranberry sauce?")

The Beatles 1967-1970 has four songs from Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band: the album's opening triad, which consists of the title song, "With a Little Help From My Friends", and "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds", and lastly, "A Day in the Life." The title song sweeps us into the musical circus of the album, but also rips-off the chords to a previous McCartney song, "You Won't See Me." "With a Little Help" is the perfect Ringo song, and if he records for the rest of his life he won't touch it. "Lucy" is the acid-laced sojourn into the ozone which would become faintly familiar with "Cry Baby Cry", a later Lennon song. "A Day in the Life" is faded up quickly during the opening guitar chords. The final forty-second E-chord on Sgt. Pepper is given a quicker fade-out on this record. It remains what it always was and always will be: a hauntingly beautiful, majestically conceived work of Art. Give Lennon the credit for this one; McCartney's stuff in the middle seems like a digression. Side one ends with "All You Need is Love", another song thrice revived. The opening French anthem, the sleazy burlesque horn line, and "She Loves You" at the end all point to the boys having a good time in the studio. This was going to end.

In many ways, "I Am the Walrus" represents the Beatles' high point. Granted, if "A Day in the Life" was "Strawberry Fields Forever" one step further, then "I Am the Walrus" carries the abstract nihilism and musical intricacies one step further than "A Day in the Life." John credits a police siren with inspiring the mesmerizing melody, but the lyrics are really the forte of this Lennon opus. By this time in his life he was through with his "crab a locker fishwife" (Cynthia) and had found his "pornographic priestees" (Yoko). The song paints a surreal picture of Lennon's life with Apple ("corporation tee-shirt"), the Maharishi ("you let your face grow long"), getting busted ("pretty little policeman in a row"), his adultery ("you let your knickers down"), and his influence on people ("elementary penguin singing Hare Krishna"). He could have said "Fuck You" at the end of the chorus, but it comes out as "Goo goo a 'joob."

The chant at the end of "Walrus" is "Everybody's going up", not "Everybody's smoking pot" or anything else. The ending also has a BBC broadcast of King Lear, which, John swears, was accidentally picked up on tape, and they decided to leave it on. (And by the way, that is not Lennon asking "Where's that joint" on Their Satanic Majesty's Request. For my money, it's Keith Richard.)

When the Beatles' film of "Hello Goodbye" was shown on the Ed Sullivan Show, a group of exotic dancers came out bellydancing during the coda. John later condemns Paul's song, calling it "wallpaper." He likes "The Fool on the Hill", though, as does everybody else. It's a fine McCartney ballad, written during Sgt. Pepper. "Magical Mystery Tour" is no great shakes and, sight unseen, the TV special that had English critics dipping their pens in blood, is probably the same. The song surreptitiously changes keys; the verse being in E, the chorus dropping down to D.

When asked why they returned to the Mersey beat for "Lady Madonna", Paul reveals, "A rose of any other color would have smelled just as sweet." It's a nice funky number, but there still remains three Beatle songs never on an album: "I'm Down", "The Inner Light", and "You Know My Name (Look Up the Number)." "Hey Jude" follows, so that's cool. It was recently voted the most popular Beatle song of all time. It's Paul's baby, and the group's first release on their own label, Apple. John admits that perhaps subconsciously the long ending was influenced by mantras, but he doesn't think so. They did this and the up-tempo "Revolution", also on this album, on the Smothers Brothers Show.

Side three of The Beatles 1967-1970 picks up the group's career at the White Album. Nothing from the Yellow Submarine soundtrack album is here. All selections from The Beatles are from side one. "Back in the U.S.S.R." is nice, but there were several on the double record that were better. "Ob-La-Di, Ob-La-Da" simply doesn't belong here. The White Album was, in many ways, the group's nadir, and these two selections were, in part, the low points of the album. "While My Guitar Gently Weeps" was the best song on that album and is included here. That's Eric C. on lead guitar.

The version of "Get Back" here is, in spite of the info sheet that says otherwise, the single version, the one with the false ending. Paul says, in an advertisement for the single, that "Get Back" is a rollercoaster of a song that was written in the studio. John says about his song, "Don't let me down on 'Don't Let Me Down'." The "Get Back"/"Don't Let Me Down" single wasn't bad, but it was totally mundane. In the tradition of Murray the K, Ed Sullivan, George Martin, Pete Best and Yoko One, a fifth Beatle is added for this single: organist Billy Preston. The radio snips out the "Christ" from "The Ballad of John and Yoko", which was not by the Beatles, but rather just John and Paul (a veritable super-session!). McCartney runs the gamut of instruments while Lennon sings and plays his rhythm. "Old Brown Shoe" follows and I can think of at least a half dozen Harrisongs I'd rather hear.

Side four, the last side of this eight-sided anthology and the last chapter in the history of the Beatles, is devoted to Abbey Road and Let It Be, the two final albums that were recorded by four egocentric, decidedly incompatible musicians. Recorded after Let It Be, but released before, Abbey Road was a shimmering oasis in the desert of wanderlust that was now the Beatles. A fine, highly polished album, it placed a false facade on the Beatle institution with its veneer, exactly what it was meant to do. From Abbey Road is "Here Comes the Sun" and "Something" which attests to George's rising predominance as a songwriter, one factor in the Beatles' break-up. (When Dick Cavett asked George if John and Paul held him back, George answered, "Yes, but very subtly.") "Here Comes the Sun", written in Eric Clapton's garden, besides being a cheerful, encouraging song, makes a very nice tempo change from 4/4 (the verse) to a 3/4 refrain. "Something" was George's first and only hit single with the group.

"Come Together" was written by John after he and Yoko got into a nasty car accident. Replete with walrus-type lyrics, it was the B-side of the "Something" single, released in October of '69. At his "One to One" concert in New York last summer, he sarcastically introduced "Come Together" as "the song I did with the Stones" Ringo's "Octopus's Garden" is gratuitously included, making it three songs he sings on the entire set. (George does four.) The Let It Be film shows George helping Ringo with "Octopus's Garden", a song with one of the oldest chord progressions in the world. Scoop! – it's also a drug song: "I'd like to be under the "C" (for cocaine)".

Which brings us to Let It Be and its three songs: "Let It Be", "Across the Universe" and "The Long and Winding Road." All versions have been Phil Spectorized, which means "Let it Be" has some blaring brass, "Across the Universe" uses strings for an ethereal effect, but loses Paul's and George's backup voices.

"The Long and Winding Road" is smothered with strings but remains, strings or no strings, one of McCartney's finest ballads, better than "Let It Be."

To which I can only add my congratulations and appreciation to four humans who put us through so many changes. It's been close to four years since the Beatles split; a void has been created that will never be fully filled until their comeback, which should be in about 1973. Until then, enjoy "Mary Had a Little Lamb", enjoy "Woman is the Nigger of the World", and enjoy "My Sweet Lord" and "It Don't Come Easy", because this solo Beatle stuff isn't going to last forever. The Beatles will return.

Jeff Beck

By Mike Kostek

Beck, Bogert & Appice
Epic KE 32140

Of all the twisted stories of tormented individuals, few in rock can compare, at least in wasted potential, with the stupid saga of Jeff Beck, Trick Grit guitarist supreme.

Most people, who start out slowly and slowly and get better and better, but Jeff's whimsical bubble sprang out full-bloom and has been going progressively downhill year by year. His unworldly, string-splitting guitar work with one of the premiere ground-breaking bands of all time, The Yardbirds, represents the high water mark in his career, and can't be forgotten when you talk about innovators. Until Hendrix came along to blow him (by comparison) out of the studio and into the alley, Beck was the master of the 15 second Incredible Guitar Break. Whether he'd echo, feedback, reverberate or smash the guitar against the amp, he is personally responsible for some of the most gutbusting, hyperactive, exciting moments in the history of Early Heavy. He also could play well 'normally' with licks that were economical and always seemed to fit perfectly, with speed and rugged precision. With Jimmy Page also in the group at this time, Beck could well afford his hysterionics as they made for some of the greatest, toughest Top 40 singles in the history of A M : ' ' O v e r u n dersideways down'', ''I'm A Man'', ''Shapes Of Things'' and ''Happenings Ten Years Time Ago'', all classics, and these were only the tip of a mountain of excellent material that never made the charts. If the Yardbirds had had a Lennon or a Jagger to sing and write, they might have been as big as The Beatles; certainly as big as anyone around today.

Exit Yardbirds. Enter Page/Led Zeppelin. Enter Jeff Beck/Jeff Beck Group. Yes, with Rod Stewart, Ron Wood and, at times, Nicky Hopkins. This lineup's two albums, Truth and Beck-Ola, were rough-edged and often spectacular, with chances taken and wizardry performed that is all too-often absent in any of their latter-day independent work. The material may not have been up there with The Yardbirds, but things like ''Rice Pudding'', ''Jailhouse Rock'', ''Plynth'' and ''Beck's Bolero'' are nothing to sniff at.

Surrounding this band were indefegatible stories of dissent, deceit, inconsistency and an aura of 'Jeff Beck: bitchy band leader' began to form around them in all the papers. They were supposed to play Woodstock, and Rod says that if they had, things might have worked out, but they never did make it, as Beck was busy firing and refiring the group's personnel (he actually did fire the drummer one night and hire him back the next). To make matters worse, Beck spoke openly and wistfully of a dream group he'd like to form, consisting of himself and two prominent members from a stagnant band of eunuchoid rockers going nowhere fast The Vanilla Fudge. As if to punish him for his erratic nature, fate or (fill in your own Supreme Being) wrapped Jeff and his flashy sports car around a telephone pole. Even worse than the assorted serious injuries that accompanied him to the hospital for a two-month sojourn was the blow to his hot rodding pride, for J.B. is a car buff with a capital 'B'.

1969 and 1970, two of rock's most productive and interesting years, steamed by with no Jeff Beck. Here he lost his second chance for stardom, because if he had been able to keep anything together (especially the Stewart band), it seems certain he'd be within sneering distance of Clapton's stature today. History Of Jeff Beck, anyone? But no, these two years brought little news of Jeff; he's recording at Motown, he's forming a supergroup, blah blah.

Not until late 1971 did the new Jeff Beck Group emerge, and the results of its one year existence are ever so so-so. It was a strange group for Beck, with a featured 'jazz' keyboard player (Max Middleton) and a lead singer (Bob Tench) who had had quite a few problems hitting the high notes. After two albums, one quite good (Rough And Ready), one quite bad (Jeff Beck Group), and mixed critical success, this one split and at last Jeff was to join the two now ex-Fudgers, ex-Cactus, Carmine Appice (pronounced ah, peace) on drums, and Tim Bogert, bass. When I heard about this trio, I wondered who they'd get to sing, as all of them had a history of unfortunate vocal attempts. But, they didn't seem worried, so everything looked good.

Hope ran high, at least from early reports. Most people didn't like the conspicuous absence of Beck's magic guitar tricks ever since Beck-Ola, and were waiting to see if he would let it loose at last, ''Amazing!'', said Chris Welch in England's Melody Maker, of an early BBA performance, ''There have been one or two rock concerts in the last decade, but Beck Bogert and Appice's will be remembered when we have all gone to the Great PA System in the sky...they worked like madmen...the air became electric with excitement...Beck slipped into the best rock guitar work heard since the great days of the sixties...I don't think I've ever heard Jeff play so well...as Jeff roared back on stage for the encore in a genuine hot-rod, revving up amidst clouds of dry ice, there was a feeling Beck, Bogert & Appice had turned the rock machine back on, and we're going to love it.''

I'm going to believe that when I see it, because an album like Beck, Bogert & Appice is the type of album that turned off the rock machine: heavy to the point of boredom and stupidity, trite and uninspired, and containing some of the most perfectly awful vocals this side of Bloodrock. In fact, they even blew their chance to make it big with the Funker crowd, as the two or three slow numbers will put them right to sleep. Beck does play well, popping a few good runs and terrorizing a few notes into doing things they haven't done since Truth, but if Beck replaced Mark Farner in Grand Fund, would you listen? Bogert and Appice are eminently (and, hopefully, easily) forgettable. Sad to say, this is almost total Beck Drek (a stupid rhyme I hoped I'd never have to use).

Look at the back cover. There's the band on stage. Appice's kissing the mike wnile no doubt doing his insipid imitation of the insipid Buddy Miles on drums. Tim Bogert's looking intently at Beck and with good reason. Eyes shut, teeth clenched, Jeff is in the process of keeling over on his kisser (''Going down/down, down, down..''). Which goes to show either that he's been put to sleep, by their novacain music, or else he's been dead ever since the car crash.

Art Ensemble of Chicago

By Gary Gomes

Bap-tizum
(Atlantic SD 1639)

Ahhh, oh joy of joys -- at last an Art Ensemble of Chicago LP that is (how shall I put it)...accessible. By accessible I mean you can order it from your local disc shop. Of course, by accessible, a critic(which I deny that I am) means that the record is easy to ''get into'', ne c'est pas? Well, the Art Ensemble of Chicago is accessible, me friends. They certainly break down the barriers of definition in Black Music, and no one of you out there should let that particular name and label throw you off.

The Art Ensemble of Chicago, huh? Sounds fairly ritzy, huh? Well, let's just assume we are transported a few years back in time, to the city of Chicago. Here you have a multi-instrumentalist by the name of Joseph Jarman, who's having a little bit of difficulty keeping his own group together. Let's assume that at the same time and in the same place, you have another multi-reed man by the name of Roscoe Mitchell, who also has his own group -- the Roscoe Mitchell Art Ensemble. Now let us further assume that in this group you have two more of the most innovative musicians around -- Lester Bowie on trumpet and Malachi Favors on bass (and ''little instruments''). You find that no drummer currently on the scene is subtle enough to play your music. So you decide to head off for Europe (seeing as how the United States is a wretched place to be a creative Black Artist in), you garner a few awards on the way for albums, and still find that you are BROKE. It seems that your copyrighting company has strange ways...but you've managed to pick up just the right percussionist for the group, in the person of Don Moye, originally from Detroit. So, in what seems like a short period in time, but is actually about 5-6 years, you are respected as one of the finest groups in Black Music, have won several critics' polls, played extensively throughout Europe, and still find yourselves with very little money to show for it. You figure it out, kid...

In actuality, the Art Ensemble of Chicago are almost all members of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians of Chicago (AACM), and have been one of the most consistent groups ever around. In Lester Bowie they have an extremely powerful and emotional trumpet player, who covers the entire range of trumpet history. All the way from playing a slow sympathetic background to piercing bursts which evolve to make his voice a part of his playing style. On certain records the Art Ensemble has released, you can hear Bowie gasping for breath quite audibly, and it's a tribute to the man for how much of himself he puts into the music. Joseph Jarman can play practically any reed or woodwind with virtuosic skill, and so can Roscoe Mitchell. The main difference between the two is that Jarman seems to favour obscure reed instruments from other cultures, and that Mitchell seems to favour the more conventional reeds, such as bass sax (huh? that's conventional?). Well, no matter. Mitchell and Jarman are two incredible musicians, with Jarman also focusing his favour on the odd ''little instruments'' (toy whistles, etc.) and such things as vibes. Malachi Favors is one hell of a bass player, and Don Moye is one hell of a percussionist. Be that as it may, the Art Ensemble of Chicago is one hell of a group.

The album starts off with an introduction by John Sinclair. Who's John Sinclair? Oh, yeah, that's right, he was the White Panther (and former manager of the MC 5) who got busted for grass and received a ten year sentence. Oh, yeah...

Well, after that, the Art Ensemble leaps into ''Nfamoudou 'Boudougoo'', a free-for-all percussion bit written by Don Moye. Well, it really isn't all that free, since there are African and Carribean touches all over the place. Need I say that it is astounding?

Next on the album we have ''Immm'' by Malachi Favors which starts off with a bit of the Art Ensemble collectively going off and making rude noises at the audience, then goes into a little Imm-mm by the Art Ensemble. A lot of different things happen here, with each member going up to the microphone and saying or singing something. Roscoe Mitchell does his bit on a blues (''You know I love you, baby, but...'') and another member going up to the mike and asking the audience how they're doing.

''Unanka'' is a Roscoe Nitchell composition which starts with an almost spiritual quality to it, and is supported later by a bass figure from Favors which gives him an incredible amount of freedom in improvising the solo. This leads into side two, which features an incredible alto solo (I could be mistaken, but it sounds like Jarman).

Quick splice into ''Ohnedaruth'', with plenty of Bowie trumpet and plenty of everything else the group has to offer (including a fine drum solo by Moye. The drum is the heartbeat -- remember that.). ''Ohnedaruth'' in addition to being a composition written by Joseph Jarman, is also the spiritual name of John Coltrane, and it would definitely not be too much to assume that this composition is written in memory of this great man.

Finally, the Art Ensemble of Chicago take a long fadeout on Side two: ''Odwalla'' by Roscoe Mitchell, which comes across as fairly straightforward bop riff. Exceptional.

A few more points to consider before I leave you. The Art Ensemble of Chicago (as of this album), had their first festival appearance in the United States on this album (recorded live at the Ann Arbor Blues and Jazz Festival, 1972). However, the audience response to what they do in this relatively short set is astounding. A lot of people in high places refuse to give all that much attention to Black Music, primarily on the grounds that it won't sell, and yeah, hell, it is easier to make a fast buck from groups that are doing boogie - rehashed-for-the-fifteenth-time. But hell, you here this music a couple of times, and let it grow on you, and Christ...it is amazing.

Thomas Jefferson Kaye

By Andrew MacKenzie

ABC Dunhill DSX-50149

In a nutshell, the only definitely unique aspect of Thomas Kaye's work is that he has managed to present us with still another synthesis of musical styles. Emerson, Lake and Palmer have classical-rock, Poco has country-rock, and now Kaye introduces Delta-blues-rock. While this is in itself something of an accomplishment, I doubt that the executives of ABC/Dunhill Records are interested in works of cultural scholarship and are therefore likely to be disappointed when they discover that there is no audience for this kind of music.

Delta Blues is by far the strongest influence on this album. For a white man, Kaye has surprisingly pure roots in this field. At the age of seventeen he was playing in a black blues band and as he recalls, ''The youngest member, other than myself, was 61. I just played away on my Silvertone guitar and amplifier and sang Jimmy Reed songs. I swore I was black.''

All well and good. Many whites have been successful in imitating black music, and by allowing his later experiences in the field of commercial music (producing people from Jay and the Americans to Capt. Beefheart) to be grafted on, Kaye could have produced an exciting new sound. Unfortunately, in this case the effect is like sunlight being seen through a dirty window: What gets noticed is the window. The music on this album is just pure enough to make the listener realize that all the other garbage has been thrown on to jazz it up a little. Can you imagine taking solid blues recordings and overdubbing a thousand Muzak violins? Yech!

I think the trouble is that Kaye is trying extremely hard not to play or write Blues. I get the impression that he really wishes he were someone like Tom Rush. (Lord knows he has the voice for it. He sounds like Lou Reed with a chest cold.)

To sum up, I'd have to say that Thomas Kaye has no future in this particular type of musical mutation. Unless he can interpret his blues more clearly or else forsake them completely for pop or rock he will probably wind up as just one more name on the list of record industry fatalities.

A Talk With Nils Lofgren

By Steve Feld and Mike Kostek

Nils Lofgren, the principal figure in an excellent rock troupe called Grin, and singer/songwriter of three critically acclaimed albums (Grin, 1 1, All Out), called our offices last week for an informal chat. Nils is only twenty-three but already he's played with Neil Young (keyboards on After the Gold Rush), Crazy Horse (guitar, keyboards on Crazy Horse) and Roy Buchanan (in a live jam on a nationally broadcast NET special). The Kid writes, sings, plays guitar, accordion and keyboards with a grace and skill not easily found on rock's rugged road. A soft-spoken, polite country gentleman, he sounds genuinely grateful to get a compliment and handled himself with extreme cordiality during our half-hour talk.

''Yes, things are going fine with the band, thank you. We're touring a lot now, and having a pretty good time. We really like playing. Myself, I don't really like the touring itself, but that's the only way you can place in different places so I guess I'll have to put up with it. I returned a few hours ago from Detroit (I'm at my home in Virginia) for a few days rest before we play New York. We're going to be the opening act for Slade and Black Oak Arkansas. They're both hard rock groups, aren't they? It might be a rough gig. We just got through playing gigs with J. Geils and the Mahavishnu Orchestra.

''My influences? I grew up listening to the Beatles. I was kinda young and I never heard Chuck Berry or any of the real early people. I've been playing jazz accordian for two years as well as piano. I've been playing since I was five years old. Just now I've really been getting to listen to the Rolling Stones, and their records are really something. I've also been listening a lot to Free, with Paul Rodgers, the singer. I think he's about the best around, nobody can touch him. I also like the Mahavishnu Orchestra and what they're doing. No, to my knowledge no one's ever gotten confused with myself and Todd Rundgren.

''Neil Young? The last time I saw him was about six months ago. I saw his movie, Journey Through the Past, and thought it was really interesting. There were some boring parts, but there's a lot in there that'll appeal to Neil Young fans. I don't think he's getting egotistical. He's human, just another person to me, not a star or anything like that. He just wanted to make a movie. You'd probably do the same if you could earn a million dollars.

''I don't know exactly what's going on with Crazy Horse. I know they're having a lot of troubles. Of course for me, Crazy Horse was always Danny Whitten, and now that he's gone, I just don't know what's happening. I was never in the group, I just happened to play on the first album, which was a pretty fine record. But that was really Jack Hitzsche's and Danny's album.

''I got to know Roy Buchanan about four years before the TV special. Right now, I don't think that the band he's got touring with him is a really good band. I've only heard the first two albums, the live one and the first studio record. You know the really good parts on those? Well, in person he plays like that all the time. I don't know why he's started touring and recording now. I guess he's a lot less suspicious of people now, and also I guess he's gotta eat.

''As for Grin, we're not making any money, just enough to live fairly comfortably, but I'm not too worried about that. Too many groups get one gimmick, a hit single or something, and then make it big, and fizzle out. I realize we need a hit single, but that's really Columbia's (Spindizzy's parent company) job. They plan on putting out a song from ALL Out, not ''Love or Else'', for a single. They have a three-year option to pick up on us if they want to, so I can't just go ahead and sign with any other label as yet. But as for gimmicks, I'd rather make it on my music alone. We don't have any tricks or anything, we're just interested in the music. I haven't really checked the sales figures on the new album, but I know our albums sell about average. They might get into the Top 100 and then fall out. Columbia doesn't really seem to want to push us.

''There are a few things you must know about the music: First, it is a totally corrupt business. The competition is phenomenal. Think about it: all you need is fifty-thousand dollars and you can make your own record. So everybody today makes records and the ensuing fight for exposure, air play, press, anything to beat the other guy is rough. Right now, we're an opening act and I'd like to see that change.

''As for our albums, I kinda like the last one, All Out because that's the one I've heard the least. The cover is elaborate, but I had nothing to do with it. It's enough of a hassle to write the songs, teach them to the band, and get them recorded properly. I don't want to have to worry about the cover art, so I let the label take care of that side of it.

''It's easier for me, since I've been playing music so long and have had so much training, to find the music for a song before the words. It's a lot harder to write the lyrics. Presently I use a Fender Stratocaster guitar, but I'm thinking of doing a couple songs on a twelve-string for our next album. We're thinking, also, of doing half of our next record live, but there are no definite plans or titles just yet.

''The little kid on ''Soft Fun?'' It's my producer, David Briggs' girlfriend's brother. He's five years old and did fine -- I think it took two takes for him to get those opening bars just right. I'd eventually like to do some producing myself, but that will come in time. I really enjoy my life now, it's the culmination of everything I've wanted to do.

''And hey, if you ever need a good opening act, give us a call.''

The Marx Brothers: Ascerbic, Brilliant, Absurd

By Jeffrey Polman

One day, during my senior year of high school, I was approaching Algebra class with two of my friends, and in a nutty mood. We were inclined to think up some weird, expository way of entering the room.

"I've got it," said one of my friends, "we'll walk in like the Marx Brothers."

"How do we do that?" I asked.

"Just crouch down real low, take big steps, and stay right behind me in single file. Walk up and down the rows about ten times, or on top of the desks before you sit down. That's what the Marx Brothers do."

We eventually made our comedic entrance that day, surviving a barrage of inhospitable gazes from people in the room; but this was only a beginning of the Marxian methods which were fortunately destined to influence my character.

Simply from watching four of the Brothers' Paramount films on local television I had accumulated such a desire to take after them in every way, that by the end of my senior year I had been making a habit out of making moderately soft honking sounds with my mouth while walking behind girls, running up to blackboards occasionally to pull down irrelevant geography maps, and asking my mother what the password was whenever she knocked on my bedroom door. When my name was called at Graduation I was about to Groucho my way up to the podium to get my diploma but someone lit off a skyrocket in the back row, so I decided to hold my act for a future occasion when everyone would be watching me.

These roguish antics have left me since coming to the University, but in no way have I stopped loving the Marx Brothers.

I was just leaving another satisfying showing of Duck Soup in Mahar Auditorium about a month ago, when I happened to overhear a few post-movie comments from the people I was walking out in back of.

"Harpo is definitely the best" said one tall fellow who was holding a half-empty beer bottle.

"Aw, fuck you," said his friend, "Groucho has all the good lines."

"Everything they do is such hot shit" said one girl in finality.

Knowing that the number of loyal and potential Marx Brothers fans on campus is on the upswing, I will try to prove why the three and sometimes four men from Manhattan are still coined today as hot shit and how they were almost flushed down the Hollywood funnel of schmaltz.

Unlike any other comedians (except for the great W.C. Fields, yesh indeed), the Marxes succeeded in cutting down every aspect of society: from education and sex to politics and culture, from every upper class cocktail party to the last college faculty address. Most of us at one time have had the urge to insult the system, and the Marx Brothers do it for us, with each brother providing his own brand of insult.

Groucho, alias Rufus T. Firefly, Hugo Z. Hackenbush, Quincy Adams Wagstaff, Otis B. Driftwood, J. Cleever Loophole, Wolf J. Flywheel, and Ronald Kornblow (to name a few), is the vocal point of the team. The Master Insulter has given us a swarm of unforgettable lines (get your cigars ready!):

to Thelma Todd: "I was going to get a canoe with a flat bottom, but the girl at the boathouse didn't have one."

to Margaret Dumont: "You better beat it. I hear they're going to tear you down and put up an office building where you're standing."

to Sig Rumann: "In case you've never done it, this is known as washing your hands."

and one I've always wanted to pull over at Whitmore: "Say, could you lend me twelve dollars until pay day? You'll get it back. I'll give you my personal note for ninety days, and if it isn't paid by then, you can keep the note."

Harpo, late of top hat, blonde wig, and horn, has the knack of stealing every scene he is in. Give him a cigar, and he lights it with a blow torch; give him a bottle of ink and he'll drink it; ask him for money for a cup of coffee and he'll pull a steaming full cup out of his pants pocket. Every absurd action he performs leaves a tingling feeling of backwards accomplishment. For instance: the opening scene of a Night in Casablanca depicts Harpo leaning against the side of a building. A policeman comes by and sarcastically asks him if he's holding the building up. When the cop pulls him away, the building falls down.

Chico, with his pinhead hat, shabby sportcoat, and pseudo-Italian accent, is the perfect example of loveable illeteracy. His prolonged discussions with Groucho which never get off the ground are classics in comic misunderstanding.

Zeppo, the fourth brother, wisely quit the team after their fifth movie. Playing the unneeded "straight man", he never contributed fully to the Marxian cause (occasionally he is seen lingering in the background of scenes which the other brothers clearly dominate.

The Marxes began on the Broadway stage, and after three plays: I'll Say She Is, the Cocoanuts, and Animal Crackers, along with the generous support of New York backers like New Yorker critic Alexander Woollcott, they had reached a popular plateau throughout the city.

Then, in 1929, Paramount Pictures hired the Brothers to make a film version of the Cocoanuts. Up to this time, their comedy had been extensively plagued with romantic subplots and musical production numbers. Through film they had the opportunity to expand their gifted talents to the point of ultimate hilarity, but they were to find themselves disillusioned, because their first film, although tremendously funny in places, was merely a Broadway musical comedy with the movie camera positioned at front row center. The Brothers' routines seemed to be only filling in the gaps between the "more important" scenes of drippy music and love interest. Their second film, Animal Crackers, had better dialogue but was still a Broadway play underneath, and the Marxes were still accompanying the rest of the plot.

Their next three films, Monkey Business (1931), Horsefeathers (1932), and Duck Soup (1933), were all written solely for the screen and consequently were much better. Almost all of the subplot romance had been extinguished, and the musical numbers were frequently hilarious, with Groucho showing off his bizarre dancing skills. However, with Duck Soup, the brothers lost their job at Paramount. The film was a direct political satire, and although it is pretty goddamn funny today, the 1933 audiences, influenced by nasty facist uprisings in Europe, were not exactly flocking to the theatre in approval.

The Marxes, now minus Zeppo, were in temporary despair at this point, but then Producer Irving Thalberg from MGM came along, and the Brothers' success was to be reborn. Thalberg was interested in making an extravagant production, and he also believed in making the Marx Brothers and their insurrous comedy the centerpiece of the film. This he did in a Night at the Opera, which I believe was their best achievement, and in a Day at the Races, which soon followed. No other Marx films came close to these in overall wit and side-splitting routines. A sample line from a Night at the Opera:

OPERA SINGER: "I've never been so insulted in my life. They threw apples at me!"

GROUCHO: "Why, of course. Watermelons are out of season."

If the remainder of the Marx Brothers' movies were to sail along in this fashion, all would be pleased; however, three weeks after filming began on Races, Irving Thalberg took ill and died. The Brothers, particularly Groucho, began to lose interest in making films. The loss of Thalberg was spontaneously evident towards the end of Races, where a musical display of racism was included to show how "happy" the black folk were down South. This scene, as well as the other musical numbers in the film, were totally irrelevant to the plot and only succeeded in making it step dead.

The Marx Brothers themselves did not go downhill after this, only the quality of their films did. Many say that the worst Marx film is still better than anything pasted together for television today, and I tend to agree, but there should never have been a bad Marx film. With their later features: Room Service (1938), At the Circus (1939), Go West (1940), the Big Store (1941), a Night in Casablanca (1946), and Love Happy (1949), the romantic subplots and unnecessary music returned to dilute the Marxes' brand of distilled laughter. Room Service had no music or romance, but it was previously a Broadway play, thus the dialogue was not written for the Brothers' style.)

When people say today that the Marx Brothers were ahead of their time, they don't mean a cop-out way of saying that the time was actually way behind the Marx Brothers. Hollywood never gave them full control of their roles, instead they were manipulated by commercially-minded producers and, in fact, audiences who didn't really care at the time. For instance, a publicity poster for a Night at the Opera described the movie as follows: "Glorious with music! Thrilling with romance!" Go West in the same mode was "rip-roaring with laughs, girls, songs!" The Big Store was advertised as "The Big Music Show! Romantic TONY MARTIN sings!" From reading this one-sided puffery, it is clear that the movie audiences enjoyed the Marx Brothers' humor, but also wanted, or at least expected, the standard Hollywood coating of lipstick and glitter which went along with a good number of the popular films of the era.

But today, with the always-cliched auteur theory in operation, the big Hollywood spectacle has become almost obsolete, and the field is more open for independent film enthusiasts. Indeed, if the Marx Brothers were still performing, we would most likely see them producing their own films and giving us pure displays of their "insanity" (which Woody Allen and the Firesign Theatre are successfully trying to keep alive). Groucho would probably be using four-letter words on occasion (while puffing on something stronger than a cigar), Harpo's blonde afro would be real, and Chico would play the role of a Don's uneducated godson.

The Marx Brothers will never be topped; they will only have disciples. Viewing a handful of their movies has helped me rid myself of various social inhibitions, and learning about their experiences in Hollywood has driven me to seek an maintaining my personal integrity.

Knowing what the Marx Brothers were do on the [illegible] screen, it is safe to say that to ignore this comedy team, the most brilliant of screen history, is to ignore a few (three, actually, part) of mankind's valuable commodities: laughter and a happier world for all.

Theater

THE HOUSE OF BLUE LEAVES

John Guare's tremendously entertaining, beguiling, poignant little play about a group of weary misfits who gather in an apartment in Queens the day the Pope comes to speak at Shea Stadium. Absurd, devistatingly funny and sad: one of the best American plays of recent seasons. Performed at Theatre 14 Smith College. Friday and Saturday, 4/27 and 4/28. 8.

MACBETH

The UMass Theatre will close the Spring semester with its production of Shakespear's Macbeth. The play will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium on May 2-5 and 9-12 at 8:30 p.m. with matinee performances on May 5, 6, 12, and 13 at 2:00 p.m.

Under the direction of Jim Young and Carol Korty of the Theatre faculty, the UMass production contronts the audience with a unique and challenging concept of Shakespeare's classic tragedy of "o'erleaping" ambition and murder. The director and cast have rooted their interpretation in a world of myth and ritual appropriate to a Stonehenge-like culture. The staged experience is an exploration of the intense animalism of Macbeth and his tribal macrocosm. Strongly juxtaposed against this animalism are the sensations of imagination and conscience birthing within Macbeth, a man conditioned by his tribe to violence and destructiveness.

The scene designer, Jeff Fiala, has created an environmental theatre space which evokes similarly earth, violent, and jarring qualities. The actors and audience spaces are not defined by the traditional proscenium arrangement. The audience sections are separate from each other, and the action of the play is sometimes around, above, and below the various audience "cells". Thus each audience member is likely to have a very different, but dynamic perspective of Macbeth.

The costumes, designed by June Gaeke, are a further extension of the primitive, mythological context of the production: furs and leather are the primary materials used.

Tickets for Macbeth will be available at the Bartlett box office beginning April 23 (Tel. 545-2591). Tickets are $1.50 for UMass students and $2.50 for the general public. However, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings (May 2, 3, 9, and 10), all tickets will be $1.00.

NEW AFRICA THEATER/DANCE ENSEMBLE

This is the first performance anywhere of this group. The performance should be stimulating and extremely enjoyable. Diana Ramos, who is director of this group, is a member of the Eleo Pomare Dance Company, one of the leading Black dance groups in the world. To be held in Webster lounge this Friday night, April 27, starting at 8 p.m. The Orchard Hill Art and Society group, who are sponsoring the performance, invite everyone to attend. Admission is free.

Music

JAPANESE MUSIC CONCERT

A rare opportunity to hear Japanese music will be presented by visiting artists Ayano Ichimura, Jodo Tanaka, and Noriko Iguchi. The instruments used for this performance will be the koto, a large stringed instrument; shakuhachi, a type of in blown flute somewhat similar to the recorder; and Shamisen, a distant relative of the banjo. The emphasis of the performance will not be on the Western concept of instrumental dexterity, but rather on the interplay of the instruments in musical heterophony. The concert is being put on by the Japanese-American Club of UMass with the Asian Studies program, and the International studies office. The concert will take place on Friday, April 27th at 8 p.m. Tickets are $1.00 and are available at the door or by contacting Lori Halligan, Asian Studies office, 804 Thompson, 545-0886.

LONNIE LISTON SMITH AND THE COSMIC ECHOES AND THE DOUG CARN QUINTET

A concert of Great Black Music will be presented this weekend featuring Lonnie Liston Smith's and Doug Carn's ensembles. Before forming his own group, Smith had played with such musical giants as Gato Barbieri and Pharaoh Sanders. Describing his own music, he says, "Music is one of the ruling forces in the cosmos and I constantly reach for the ultimate. Music should bring a message and I am but a messenger." Liston is among the top ranks of pianists, as well as being a fine composer arranger. His set should be stimulating, to say the least. Doug Carn is indicative of some of the new directions in Black Music today. He has recently had an album released called "Infant Eyes." The concert will take place this Saturday at 8 p.m., and is being sponsored by the Fine Arts Council and the Third World Alliance. To be presented in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are $1.50 for UMass undergrads and $2.00 for all others, and will be available at the door or may be obtained by calling the Fine Arts Council, 545-0202.

NRBQ, JAMES MONTGOMERY BLUES BAND, & SWALLOW

Three groups will be featured this weekend on Orchard Hill. NRBQ is currently signed to Kama Sutra records, and can look back on a five year career featuring four albums, hundreds of low-key, high excitement shows, and an unenviable reputation of being one of the best unknown rock 'n'roll bands in the allegedly free world. Swallow is currently flashing their second Warner Bros. album, and comes out of Boston with the catch all 'jazz rock' monicker slapped on their music. They also appeared at UMass earlier this year. James Montgomery is another Boston-bred group and have been compared favorably with the J. Geils band, both in spirit and in flavor. The afternoon of music will take place on the Hill and will begin at noon. Admission is free.

Films

BANANAS (1971)

Woody Allen's very funny comedy about a timid who falls in love, loses his girl, runs away to South America, and becomes a guerilla leader of a band set on overthrowing the government of a Banana republic. The plot is continually interrupted by some of Allen's funniest gags: his embarrassing attempt to buy pornography, the surprise appearance of J. Edgar Hoover at his trial for treason, and the superb opening and closing pieces involving Howard Cosell; one a play-by-play of a political assassination, the other a play-by-play of Allen's wedding night. The best film by Allen to date and it recalls the best of the Marx Brothers. With Louise Lasser. Mahan, Friday and Saturday, 4/27 and 4/28. 8:30, 10, 11:30.

THE BIG SLEEP (1946)

Raymond Chandler, from whose novel this film was adapted, has reported that while the film was in production the scriptwriters (including William Faulkner) implored him to help figure out the complicated plot. He couldn't and it is doubtful that any viewer will be able to patch this thriller together, even after the denoument. The plot, though, seems a slight device for Howard Hawks to build around. The atmosphere is the Night City at a distinctive amoral best. A location which would turn up, in a more tar 'ry way, in later detective films. The story concerns a private eye called in to help two rich spoiled sisters. The dialogue is witty, sophisticated, and filled with exciting innuendos which audiences picked up with delight. The rogues gallery of characters is led by Humphrey Bogart as the detective, Lauren Bacall as the nicer of the sisters, Martha Vicker, as her thumb-sucking counterpart, and Dorothy Malone, whose bit part makes for the quickest seduction in film history. Nothing can diminish this film's enchantment, even Hawks's remark: "Neither the author, the writer, nor myself knew who had killed whom." Student Union Ballroom Thursday 5/3 8:45.

BROTHER SUN, SISTER MOON

Franco Zeffirelli's youth operetta about the life and times of St. Francis of Assisi. He escapes the materialistic vacuum of his father's home, sees visions, and builds a commune-like mission for his band of fellow believers in the outskirts of Assisi. The film ends with a visit to the Pope and the sumptuously appointed finale recalls the best of Cecil B. DeMille by way of the worst of Busby Berkeley. A hokey stab at relevancy, beautiful to look at, but shallow and shapeless. Graham Faulkner plays the limp-wristed Francis, his sexless lapdog with Judi Bowker is meant to represent the purity of the celebrite life, but it appears to be a tag-to-tag hag relationship. Alec Guiness plays the Pope in the greatest headdress since Carmen Miranda last blessed the screen with three-foot garlands of fruit piled on her head. With Guiness, its bejeweled, Donovan plays the plodding score. Begins Wednesday. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

CABARET (1972)
The best American film of last year is this dazzling musical portrait of Berlin immediately prior to the Nazi takeover. It's the best musical since the great M-G-M musicals of the Fifties and effectively alters the genre since the musical numbers are prisms through which we view the action. They are written by Fred Ebb and John Kander, who improved from the stage production. The direction of Bob Fosse crystallizes the gaudy night life of Christopher Isherwood's "Berlin Stories" from which this film was adapted. Liza Minelli is splendidly full-bodies as Sally Bowles with Michael York, Helmut Griem, and Joel Grey. Best Picture citation by the National Board of Review; eight Oscars, including direction, actress, supporting actor (Grey), film editing, and music scoring. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

CLASS OF '44
The inevitable sequel to Summer of '42. Directed by Paul Bogart, with Gary Grimes and Jerry Houser. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

CRIES AND WHISPERS
Ingmar Bergman's magnificent new film takes place in a nineteenth century manor house where two sisters await the death of a third. The film explores continual Bergman themes with a clarity and intensity unlike any other film you may ever wish to see. Hypnotically photographed by Sven Nykvist, the film has the mood and feel of a dream and suggests the works of Edward Munch in its composition and Strindberg in its design. The acting by a quartet of Berman's favorite actresses in superb, going beyond the realm of naturalistic acting. The film has the power of ritual; a devastating emotional experience. Amherst Cinema, Amherst; Academy of Music, Northampton.

DIONYSUS '69 (1970)
A film by Brian DePalma of the Performance group's loose adaptation of Euripide's "The Bacchae". DePalma made the film during two performances of the play and is more than successful in conveying the sporadic energy of this performing group. Mahar, Monday, 4/30, continuous from 6.

FIVE FINGERS OF DEATH
The first major commercial feature to come from Hong Kong; like most everything stamped with that city's name, it hasn't much more than a flashy veneer. With Lo Lieh and Wang Ping. Directed by Chang Chang Ho. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE FRENCH CONNECTION
A fact-based account of how police track down a shipment of heroin in New York City which is a fast, flashy, and fascinating thriller. The grittiness and chaos of New York City is captured at breakneck speed and brutality by director William Freidkin who has fashioned perhaps the stylish and finest thriller in some time. Gene Hackman plays a boorish detective who, as the antisocial, antihuman, detective, somewhere between Bulitt and Joe, the latest film cliche. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, Saturday, 4/27, 4/28, 7 and 9:15.

GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES (1952)
Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell star in this Howard Hawk's glittering adaptation of the smash 1949 stage hit which made a theatrical superstar of Carol Channing. This film musical is the fourthcommercial go-round for its material. It initially appeared in the Twenties in Anita Loos celebrated novel about two gold-digging chorus girls and their exploits with wealthy men in Paris; next it appeared as a successful play, which was subsequently made into a successful film. In the late Forties Jules Styne and Leo Robins wrote words and music to Ms. Loos story and it became one of the most celebrated musicals of its time. Twentieth Century Fox saw a perfect union of material and talent when they bought the film rights and cast Marilyn Monroe in the part of the madcap blonde Lorelei Lee. It remains her best remembered part and she's quite good at golddigging, although one prefers her madcap charm in How To Marry A Millionaire and Monkey Business to this glamorous piece of nonsense. Jane Russell is wonderful as her brunette foil, who with brains and the right amount of guile gets Monroe through their romantic adventures in Paris. The score has been significantly altered, although there are two super numbers: the opening "Just Two Little Girls From Little Rock" suna by Monroe and Russell in a New York nightclub, and Marilyn's greatest moment in a musical film, "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" sung in a sophisticated Parisean bistro. The material, by the way, simply refuses to die: Carol Channing is presently in a year long, pre-Broadway tour of a new musical readaptation of this material entitled Lorelie, scheduled for opening next year on Broadway. Wright Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 4/28, 4.

THE GREAT McGINTY (1940)
Preston Sturges is one of the least known and best respected Hollywood directors of the Forties. His screwball comedies were the culmitative films of the genre and this, one of his earliest, is one of the best. It concerns a breadline bum who rises to governor by playing ball with the right political pals; he eventually begins to lose grip of his acquired power when he threatens to go straight. The film is reminiscent of Frank Capra's social comedies of the Thirties, but with a decidedly bitter and absurd bent. With Brian Donlevy and Akim Tamiroff. Hopefully this film may spark a revival of Sturges comedies to this campus next year—why not The Lady Eve and The Palm Beach Story and Hail The Conquering Hero and Sullivan's Travels? Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 4/29, 7:30.

THE GODCHILDREN
Oh, my. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE HARDER THEY FALL (1956)
Humphrey Bogart's last film is a return for him to a more typical Fortyish part. Based upon a novel by Budd Schulbert, the film concerns the brutal world of boxing. Bogart plays a broken down journalist, a bit on the wrong side of the law, who gets integrity in the last reel. Featured are the wonderful Jan Sterling and Rod Steiger in a strong performance that matches Bogart's. Mahar, Monday, 4/30, 7.

THE HEARTBREAK KID
A refreshingly peculiar comedy about the transiency of love and marriage. Charles Grodin discovers on his honeymoon that he is no longer in love with his wife, Jeanne Berlin, and falls head over heels for beautiful and sensual Cybil Shepherd. As Groudin goes about getting rid of his wife and snaring his beauty, we are provided with many brilliantly acted, hilarious scenes. Director Elaine May uses a simple, detached approach to exploit the comic potential of this unusual situatin. The film has a wonderful naturalism; there are many slow dolly shots and almost no backgrmund music. Unfortunately Ms. May used this detached approach in her treatment of the characters as well. The viewer is not allowed to feel anything for the characters, especially poor Jannie Berlin, who is mocked for her suburban Jewishness, milked for laughs, and disposed of mercilessly. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY (1941)
In the year of Citizen Kane, this nostalgic and charming John Ford drama about life in a Welch mining village won the skew of major awards, including the Oscar for best film of its year. Based upon the novel by Richard Liewellyn, the film concerns a teacher who comes to the mining village and his relationship with its inhabitants. Directed by John Ford. With Walter Pidgeon, Maureen O'Hara, Donald Crisp, and Roddy McDowall. Hampden Dining Commons, Tuesday, 5/1, 7:30.

MACBETH (1971)
Roman Polanski's youthful, freak adaptation of Shakespeare's play; mostly gore with little care for the power and resonance of Shakespeare. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 4/29, 7 and 9:30.

THE MACK

PETULIA (1968)
Richard Lester's bitter, kinetic hate letter to America. Lester, whose disjointed cinematic style lended itself to the madcap charm of the early Beatles films and the frenzied pace of The Knack, takes his tongue out of his cheek and exposes his fangs in this film about contemporary mores in America. The film concerns a bored, lonely young woman married to a rich, effete young man. She has a casual affair with a recently divorced doctor, but the whole thing evaporates as quickly as it came. Lester has a fine, firm style and handles the intricate flashbacks and forwards with an exhilerating ease, and the film is superbly acted by George C. Scott as the doctor and Julie Christie as the titled heroine. Still the film as an overriding bitterness that's both hard to digest and forget. A brilliant piece of acting by Richard Chamberlain as the effete, young husband. Filmed around San Francisco, but with a conscious, deceptive attempt at underplaying the city's visual beauty. Thompson 104, Wednesday, 4/2, 7 and 9.

PRISON GIRLS
The title is a cop-out: it's about girls on leave from prison. So if you thought there would be tremendous scenes of lesbian wardens seducing young criminals, forget it. The film is shot in 3-D, which means you wear those ridiculous glasses and have thighs fall out the screen and into your lap. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

SCORPIO

THE SOUND OF MUSIC (1965)
The musical, with Julie Andrews, neatly dressed children, smiling, singing nuns, Nazis, the Alps, and music and lyrics by Rodgers and Hammerstein. Directed by Robert Wise, now in super wide screen which means the tops of the mountains are probably chopped off. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

SOLYENT GREEN

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ATHLETE
Walt Disney Studio has, unintentionally, made the first G-rated homosexually oriented film. It puts the "Bijoy" to shame. The film concerns a young man who is raised in the jungle and is found by a good, black physical education teacher. They return to the Midwest where the boy becomes what the title tells him to be. Disney Studio goes all out in this film, not only are they attempting to cash in on the fantasy world of thirteen year old girls with their star Jan-Michael Vincent (the good looking one on the cover of "Tiger Beat" and "Fave"), but they throw in some social consciousness to boot. Still one has the feeling that the film's primary appeal is to, to use the vernacular, chicken queens, and has put a new twist on the rating called "G". Calvin Theater, Northampton.

AMERICAN COMEDY SERIES
Preston Sturges'
The Great McGinty
(1940)
THE GREAT McGINTY is a vigorous satire of big city politics and the story of a hobo elevated to governor, or how the lowliest boob can rise to the top with the right degree of luck, bluff, and fraud. Sturges has been called the "wryly raunchiest" of directors and comedy. Hollywood's first "sick" humorist.

Letters To The Editor

Oppressors And Their Victims

To The Editor:
I always have a good laugh when I hear Stokely Carmichael and other Pan-Africanists speak, particularly when they slander Israel. I reject the notion that the world is divided into victims and oppressors and that blacks fit the first group and Israel, the second. Such categorization smacks of racism and naivete. Have we forgotten the oppression of the Biafran by the Nigerian or the Asian by the Ugandans?

When it comes to Israel, I really do not understand the concern of a Pan-Africanist. Geographically, Israel is not in Africa. Demographically, I suppose Mr. Carmichael feels that the Palestinians are African or Black, but that seems to me to be a rather extreme stretching of the terms Black or African. I am left with a feeling that to be black is to be non-European and have roots somewhere west of Bagdad. In any case, I went to talk to a Palestinian to see what he thought about being black. My friend has blonde hair, blue eyes, and was born in the Galilee twenty seven years ago. He didn't feel particularly black, but felt that a case could be made for Israel being black, using Mr. Carmichael's definitions. First of all, over sixty percent of Israel's jewish population is of African or Middle Eastern origin and therefore black. All non-jewish Palestinians are black since Stokely says so. That leaves the white jewish minority. Where did these white invaders come from? Europe. Then they're Europeans. No. In Europe they suffered the same universal plight of all black men; non-possession of land, racism, and victimization by capitalism. They lived in other people's countries. They were the victim's of anti-semitism - racism against jews. And they were also the victims of capitalism. Because of their non-European alien qualities, they were forced for survival into the only open occupations. These were being the middle men and merchants who would trade between countries where payment was other than in barter and conditions were risky and unstable. One day some of these white jews decided to chuck the whole European scene and go home. That was called zionism in the twentieth century. Of course, jews had been quitting Europe all the time and going home, but it had different names depending on which century you were in. And then Hitler came along, and a lot more jews left for home since it was the only open option. I guess they didn't feel wanted in Europe. Maybe the white jews figured out the truth-they were really black people deep inside and they belong in their African home, Israel.

Perhaps then Mr. Carmichael's concern is oppression and maybe he feels that the Palestinians are oppressed by the State of Israel, or more specifically, by the white jews. If that were true, why is it that Palestinian guerillas kill more Palestinians than Israelis.? While there are inequalities in Israel and this is true of any new, developing nation, I would not call it oppression, but I would call murder oppression, against Arabs and Israelis. In my opinion, El Fatah and its Black September arm are oppressive since they murder innocent people.

While I expect differences of opinion concerning my views, I would encourage others to talk to Israelis and Palestinians to get a closer view of what constitutes oppression as defined by the parties concerned. I have talked to my Palestinian friend and intend to talk to others.

Someday soon I will be going home, and I will not be buying tickets to Munich. When I do, I intend to live on a kibbutz and everybody knows what a kibbutz is. It's one of the many concrete examples of scientific socialism in Israel where oppression is a dirty word.

No Excuse

To The Editor:
After spending considerable time and effort in a fruitless drive to rectify an inexcusable situation in the dining commons, I wish to submit this solemn charge.

Mr. Joel Stoneham, Director of University Food Services, was notified in advance of the Jewish Passover Holiday (8 days in length) of the necessity of supplying Matzoh for meals during this period, as was done last year and previously. Upon discovering nothing had been done, I complained to a D.C. manager, Mr. Flynn, and wrote a letter to the Collegian. Again, nothing happened and further complaints followed from myself and other students, although I hadn't the time to chase Mr. Stoneham myself-knowing he was aware of the situation anyway. I wish to note that Amherst College, with a far smaller Jewish population, made this accommodation.

The facts being as they are, my charge follows: Either Mr. Stoneham's conduct (or lack of action) is an example of callous disregard of a large segment of the student populatiin he supposedly serves, an example of bureaucratic incompetence, or he is an anti-Semite. I hereby formally request and demand an open and formal letter of apology to be printed on this page of the Collegian, addressed to the Jewish students on campus.

It will be sincerely appreciated. Thank you.

Defending Nick

To The Editor:
On behalf of Nick Apostola, newly-elected SGA President, I would like to respond to Mr. William T. Walsh, Jr.'s letter, "Balkan Studies," in yesterday's Collegian.

Apostola, as the Senate's Academic Affairs Chairperson, has worked harder for the academic well-being of all students than any undergraduate within the last several years at this University. His concerns have been to expand academic alternatives so that any student will have had his educational needs met by the end of his college career.

No where in his pre-election story ("Collegian, April 20) did Apostola make the statement, "The Engineering Department should be wiped off the face of the UMass campus," as claimed by Mr. Walsh. Apostola did suggest that funds be disseminated in such a way that residential area programs be given as high academic priority as the traditional departments on campus. That is, allocations would have to be lowered in some departments to supplement the funding of others, particularly in those programs that benefit larger numbers of people (i.e. area programs).

As a former student of the Home Economics Department (and a semi-student of theirs under the BDIC program), I am in a very similar position to an engineering student: we are both enrolled in small, professional departments. However, I in no way interpret Apostola's words to mean that he would eliminate these departments altogether.

Mr. Walsh also wondered why Apostola's major (Balkan Studies) was not listed in the Course Description Guide, and "how many credits it takes to get a degree in this major." It is not listed simply because it is a specialized major granted under BDIC, and it requires that at least three courses be taken for four consecutive semesters within this area of study.

Apostola's background in Balkan Studies is being designed to serve him in his future goal to become a Rumanian Orthodox priest. In fact, the reason he cannot respond to Mr. Walsh's letter himself is because he is at home celebrating the Orthodox Easter with his parents.

Not Women

To The Editor:
This letter comes as a reply to Ms. Emmons comment against the use of the term girls in reference to the womens'/girls' gymnastic team. The Collegian was quite correct in using "girls" for, accor·ling to Mr. Webster, a girl is: a young unmarried woman. Also womanhood is not determined by one's ability to drink, drive, vote or even by physical maturity. We feel that womanhood is more of a state of mind--one which Ms. Emmons does not seem to have reached. Furthermore Ms. Emmons comment was quite trivial and detracted from the congratulatory tone of the Collegian's editorial.

Orchard Concert

To The Editor:
This Saturday, April 28th, the Orchard Concert Committee is presenting a concert in the orchard between the Orchard Hill and Sylvan Areas on the hill in front of the observatory.

After much trouble in obtaining a sound system large enough for the concert, and performers cancelling out on us, the committee now has its plans completed and is now hoping that the weather will cooperate. The concert will be held rain or shine starting at 12:00 noon and will feature Swallow, NRBQ, and The James Montgomery Blues Band.

The committee asks that people please take care in their treatment of the orchard in order to prevent the further physical decline of that area, and so that future concerts can be held. Trash containers will be provided, please use them. The extremely long grass in the orchard makes it very difficult to see small sharp objects on the ground and also difficult to clean the area up. Things such as preventing the breakage of bottles (bring your wine in a wineskin) and putting your can tops in the cans they came off of (I'm told that the last gulp of beer in a 12 oz. can is 15% saliva and besides, it is usually too warm and foamy to enjoy very much anyway so you won't be missing much) would help a great deal.

The entire university is invited to the concert and it is hoped that a good time will be had by all.

Editorial Points

Can you believe it? Nick's been in office only two days, and already he's controversial!

The absolute deadline for correcting "REJECTED" inspection stickers is May 15. If you think your car may fail inspection, get it inspected early so you have time to correct it before May 15.

Distasteful

To The Editor:
Many females on this campus enjoy reading the sports page. However, the articles of Marty Kelley are making such activity very distasteful.

Isn't it sweet of him to designate the female gender to objects such as Harvard and Boyden. At the same time he refers to females as "Radcliffe bitches", "Emmanuel babes", and "lily white virgins of Pembroke."

With all the fuming against Bill Baird, who is a fantastic person, and the complaints about the definitions in the dictionary, we are missing the trash that is right in front of our eyes.

Sarah Clinton

Egocentric Attitudes

To The Editor:
In response to Ms. Debora Saccone's letter of Wednesday, April 25, indicting the People's Market for not being able to supply her with "delicious, juicy, red strawberries."

Yes, Ms. Saccone, the People's Market is run for the people of U.Mass, but it is also run by people, by students just like yourself, not by professionals whose sole occupation is running the store. It was set up by students as an experiment, a co-operative venture to be helped along by all the people at U. Mass.; it was not a pre-fab supermarket that would never need suggestions or improvements. The students involved in running the People's Market have done all the work-setting the store up, ordering food from Boston (and often going themselves to pick it up), organizing and training the employees - entirely on their own, starting from scratch. The managers and the employees of the Market may often be found in the store until one or two in the morning, marking cans and stocking the shelves, and not so that spoiled children like yourself can waltz in and "exit with feelings never to return again," merely because "the answer to your desire" does not happen to be in stock at the moment.

Instead of complaining in the Collegian, why didn't you speak to one of the managers or workers, or, as so many other customers have done, write your request on the suggestion list hanging on the refrigerator. They do listen, you know, and they do fill requests. Your outburst is an example of the childish, egocentric attitudes which will only cause the People's Market to fail, rather than to succeed, as it would if people like yourself would be willing to offer constructive suggestions for its improvement.

Purpose Of The Claridad

To The Editor:
Upon reading the letter in Wednesday's Collegian, concerning the Claridad, I felt some sort of response was necessary, because of the assanine nature of the letter.

There is a purpose to a newspaper, although you seem to miss this. There is also a purpose to your ass, besides sitting on it, although you seem to have missed this too. The purpose of the Central Area Claridad, is to act as a service media for the area. Another purpose of the Claridad is to act as an educaional media for those interested in journalism, photography, art, writing, etc. Another purpose, which is probably the Claridad's failure, is to get people(?) such as yourselves off your apathetic asses. (I'll return to this.)

The letter in the Collegian, signed by E. Galaid, and B. L. Dumas, and apparently by most of the residents of Butterfield, was completely unnecessary. First of all, the funding of the Claridad is done by the Central Area Council. Your letter should have been sent to your dorm's representative, to the council itself, or even to the Claridad office. (I can guarantee you it would have been printed.) Secondly, as editor of the Claridad when the article you speak of was published, I personally took the article to Ms. Mundy myself for her proof reading. A few corrections were made in the accuracy of the story, but nothing else in the line of what the story has or has not was mentioned by Ann, nor the resident who was also there.

I stopped in at the Spectrum office before writing this to inquire whether or not you two were by any chance promoting the allocation of the Claridad's funds to the Spectrum because you might be on the Spectrum's staff. As to my expectations, you two are not. How could you? It involves getting off your asses and doing something. And as we all know, it's much easier to sit back and criticize than it is to do something. - My only response to your "pernicious" remarks about the staff for the Claridad is FUCK OFF.

New Courses

Care Of The Elderly

The first of four short courses on care of the elderly given by the Continuing Education Division of UMass will begin tomorrow.

Applications are still being accepted for the series opener, "Applicable Standards and Regulations for Long Term Care Facilities." The course meets in two nine-hour Saturday sessions tomorrow and May 5. Those who take the course get a free specially-prepared booklet listing rules that apply to institutions that care for the elderly.

The booklet is by Professor Karol Wisnieski of the UMass public health department, who teaches the course with F. A. Taher Moustafa, a colleague in the department. Among the areas covered will be federal, state and local rules on diet, cleaning and disinfecting, safety, construction and employee practice.

Full information on fees, registration and other courses in the series is available from the Division of Continuing Education, UMass, Amherst 01002.

Honors Program

The following Honors program is offered in the Fall 1973 semester:

Soc. 101/Honors C-47 Introductory Sociology
Lect. 1 MW 11:15
Disc. Sect. 10 F11:15
4 credits Professor T. O. Wilkinson

The regular Sociology 101 is designed to explore sociologically the relationships between the individual and society. Honors students will have more independently assigned readings as bases for student report/discussions to class, and more written assignment which ask the student to apply concepts of the course.

Readings: Bergen, Invitation to Sociology; Brown, Manchild in the Promised Land; Roszak, The Making of a Counter Culture.

Soc. 390/Honors C-48 Sociological Theory; Critical Perspectives
Seminar M 2:30-5:30
4 credits Professor G. Platt

This course will read and compare works of the phenomenological and neo-radical attitudes toward sociology. We will read works by Schut Garfinkel, Goffman, Birnbaum, Gouldner, Dahrendorf, Lucacs, Djilas and others. It is important that the students have had some sociologic courses and that they be interested in reading and criticizing theory. The specific works, course format and requirements will be discussed at the first meeting.

Holyoke Tutorial

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to sign up for the Holyoke tutorial course Spanish 301 (3 credits). Students tutor Puerto Rican children in Holyoke public schools and mothers in private homes on a one to one basis. Possibly tutors will work with the New England Council of Migrant workers.

Bus service leaves campus Monday and Friday mornings at 8:35 and returns 11:45. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings for discussion or occasionally to hear speakers. Tutors are asked to keep a journal which serves as a basis for the final paper.

For further information contact Professor Nina Scott, Dept. of Hispanic Languages and Literature, 5-0613 (Enrollment limited to 25).

Polish Civilization

The Department of Slavic Languages announces a new course, Polish 290, Polish Civilization. This course presents a survey of the historical, social, intellectual and cultural evolution of the Polish people from the tenth century origins of the Polish state to the present. It is designed to give some understanding of the historical experience of the Polish people especially as manifested in literature and other aspects of culture.

Among the topics to be considered are the origins of the Polish state; the place of Poland in European history; folkloric reflections of pre-Christian Polish culture; the cultural accomplishments of Poland; and the influence of Polish emigration both on Poland and on the countries of immigration. The deadline for submitting candidates for the Distinguished Teaching Awards has been extended to 5 p.m. Wednesday, May 2. Baha'i Celebration Tonight

From April 21 to May 23, the Baha'is of the United States are joining with their fellow Baha'is in 137 independent countries and 196 significant territories and islands of the world in celebrating the successful conclusion of an international teaching plan, begun in 1964 and lasting nine years, a period that has seen the unprecedented growth of the world-wide Baha'i community.

The celebration will center on a month-long effort to proclaim the message of Baha'u'llah, Prophet-Founder of the Baha'i Faith, in every country where Baha'is now reside.

In Amherst, the opening event is tonight at 7:30, at the Amherst Woman's Club, 35 Triangle Street. A panel will discuss the Baha'i teachings on a number of issues currently facing many Americans: the Role of Women; Law; its relationship to society and to the individual; Ending Racism; the Purpose of Religion; the Unfoldment of a World Civilization.

Panelists are Nancy Jordan of Northampton, student; Billy Roberts of Sunderland, editor of Drum Magazine, former project director, University Year for Action, and student; Bette Roberts of Sunderland, student; and Juan Cabana of Amherst, Assistant Professor, Media Center, School of Education at UMass.

The public is cordially invited, and is encouraged to look for notices of other weekly events.

Spiritual Messengers To Perform 'Ritual,' 'And'

The Spiritual Messengers will perform "Ritual" tonight at 8:30 in the Lamumba Hut of the New Africa House. Afterward dinner will be available and there will be a dance to fill out the evening's activities.

"Ritual" is constrcted in two movements. First comes the poetry which is arranged and directed by Arturo Lindsay, Don L. Lee, Sonia Sanchez and other poets are represented. New poetry by Babatunji and the Messengers own Suzanne Vargus is also being performed. In this part we see a revival of ancestral African traits. Black men and women call on the strength of their heritage.

"And", the second movement, is a short play, written and directed by Mungu Abudu. In it the ancestral-cultural mode of polygamy is used to express a unity of African-American people. The values of the bourgeois, street and revolutionary elements of Black life in America are explored.

If It Keeps On Rainin', Levee's Gonna Break...

By LEE GOULD
Associated Press Writer

The Mississippi River and its tributaries spread over more land Thursday and along its 1,500-mile length men and equipment fought the battle of the levees.

Millions of acres of farmland, from Quincy, Ill., to the Mississippi's mouth at the Gulf of Mexico, have been flooded.

The latest drisis was touch

The latest crisis was touched off by new rains last week on top of earlier heavy spring downpours. In Louisiana alone, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers estimated that 12 per cent of the state was under water.

It was the worst flooding in the recorded history of many of the hard-hit areas. At St. Louis, the Mississippi reached a record high early Thursday and was expected to rise another two feet by Saturday, to a crest of 43.5 feet.

Nearly 10,000 persons were reported homeless and damage in seven Mississippi River states was estimated at more than $200 million. Estimates included from $100 million in Louisiana alone, and $50 million each in Illinois and Missouri.

In Washington, the White House indicated President Nixon was considering an aerial tour of flood-ravaged areas Friday when he is scheduled to fly to Meridian, Miss., to participate in ceremonies at a naval air station.

The crest, or highest flood level, of the Mississippi swept past Quincy, Ill., Thursday, but officials reported the serious threat to the levees continued.

The crest, which isn't visible to the eye, occurs when the river reaches its highest level. Although the crest moves on with the flow of the river, the crest level can remain at one point for several days. When the Mississippi crests at St. Louis, it is expected to remain at that level for two days.

To the south, the Missouri topped a levee about 15 miles above its confluence with the Mississippi. Army Engineers said the break could allow the Missouri to cut a new channel to the Mississippi and converge upstream from Alton, Ill.

"If this happens, it could get pretty 'ough for Alton," an Army spokesman said.

Officials said they didn't know if such a new convergence would occur.

Two more people drowned Wednesday, in Missouri and Illinois, raising the death toll from the flooding to at least 10.

The long-term effects of the flooding depend to a large extent on future rainfall. The Southern cotton crop would be dealt a severe blow if the rain doesn't stop before the mid-May planting season. Cotton prices already are rising.

Even with a dry period, the flood stage will continue along the Mississippi and Missouri, and many of their tributaries, for weeks.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

A widow has informed the editor of a national magazine that she had her heart set on a Taurus man. She reports that her astrological findings indicated that Taurus persons have a notorious fondness for chocolate. So, she says, she baked a delicious chocolate cake—and she got her Taurus man. It does appear that the "Venus signs," Taurus and Libra, often exhibit a craving for sweets. Although not always to the good, apparently this is one instance in which it indirectly resulted in marriage.

Soviet-American Basketball to Begin Sunday

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK (AP) - The Russians insist they won't be trying to prove anything when they meet a hand-picked U. S. basketball team in a series starting in Los Angeles Sunday.

"Our consciences are not hurting because of the way we won the Olympic gold medal," assistant coach Sergei Bashkin said, speaking through an interpretor. "We won the game fairly under FIBA rules. We dominated the game until the last two minutes.

"We can understand the distress of the Americans but we do not think there is a taint on our victory at all."

The FIBA is the International Basketball Federation, whose secretary general gave the Russians a three-second reprieve after time had expired and allowed Alexandr Belov to score the layup that gave the Soviets a 51-50 victory.

It was the first defeat for an American basketball team in 64 games and 36 years of Olympic competition.

Belov, a 6-foot-7, 213-pound redhead, was one of 12 Russian players and two coaches who arrived here overnight from Moscow and departed Thursday for Salt Lake City, where they will warm up Friday night in an unofficial game against a team of Utah all-stars.

The Russian head coach, Vladimir Kandrashin, said he did not consider the American tour a replay of the Olympics.

"If we felt we had to prove ourselves, we would have brought along our most experienced team," he said. "We left three of our Olympic players at home because we wanted to give younger players a chance."

Kandrashin speared the assumption that the Russian national team is like a pro team, playing together year after year.

"This is the first time the team has been assembled since the Olympics," the head coach said. "The Olympic team members returned home and joined their individual clubs, playing against each other in our national championships."

"Since arriving here, we have heard much of your player, Bill Walton," Kandrashin said, referring to the 6-foot-11 UCLA whiz. "We know nothing about him, but reports don't make us very nervous."

The American team will be coached by the old pro, former Celtic star Bob Cousy.

Celtic Don Nelson, rebounding against Knick Phil Jackson, has assumed a key role since the injury to John Havlicek. The Celtics now trail the Knicks three games to two after hanging on to edge the New Yorkers 98-97 Wednesday night in Boston. (AP Photo)

Gorillas Down HC, 13-5

This game had been billed as a preparatory match for the clash with Williams on Saturday. It is hoped that the conditions will be more favorable for that game. Coach Dick Garber felt that this team played very well. He commented that his players "controlled the ball well and if it had been a better day they would have scored more but we played a good game under the conditions." However, the coach was disappointed because, "we didn't get a chance to run the offense the way I wanted to. On a dry field we would have tried many things which we could use in Saturday's game."

Although the defense was tested with only seventeen shots on goal (as compared to forty-three shots on the Holy Cross goalie), Coach Garber feels that his Gorillas will play "their tough, consistent defense." "They'll be ready." said the coach.

Remember! Saturday's game against Williams is an important one. Gametime is 2 o'clock at Boyden Field.

Blaisdell: He Let The Air Out of His Gym Career

By STEVE CROWE

If he hadn't let the air out of his high school athletic director's tires, Dick Blaisdell probably never would have been a Yankee Conference Swimming All-Star.

Blaisdell, who was recently selected as a YanCon 50 yd. freestyle All-Star, was a gymnastics star at Winchester High. He competed in three events: high bar, vaulting, and floor exercise and went to the State tournament as a junior.

"I would have done better in my senior year," said Blaisdell. "But I got kicked off the team just before the States."

That was when he let the air out of the A.D.'s tires.

The athletic director, said Blaisdell, gave a lot of money to the basketball and baseball programs but he wouldn't do anything for the gym team.

"He especially didn't like me," Blaisdell recalls, "because I used to give him a lot of heat."

As he thought back about the whole incident, Blaisdell felt that it was a stupid thing to do. "It really hurt the team at the time," he said, "I really shouldn't have done it."

After graduating, Blaisdell went to Huntington Prep School in Boston where there was no gymnastics team. There was, however, a swim team. His prep school coach told UMass swim coach Joe Rogers that he had a "good swimmer"

Since he was two months old, Blaisdell had been swimming in water. "My parents threw me into the ocean and said, 'Here, swim!' " And that's what he's been doing.

He was the Most Valuable Member and high scorer of the UMass team last year and has been elected co-captain along with Geroge Kwiecien, for next year. He was consistent swimmer this past year finishing first, second, or third in every meet he competed in the 50 and 100 yd. freestyles.

Despite all his swimming efforts, Dick Blaisdell is probably best known around the campus sports fans as "the guy who rides the unicycle." He was a cheerleader at the football games and rode his unicycle at a couple of basketball games. At the Fordham game he had a girl riding on his shoulders.

Blaisdell, a junior, is in the BDIC program, specializing in "music and dance". When asked what he planned to do with that major once he got out of school, he said he wasn't hung up about "all that vocational stuff". He said, "Playing piano is something I enjoy doing, that's all."

UConn, the YanCon Champs, placed 11 swimmers on the all-star team and Vermont, 7. Blaisdell was the only UMass swimmer selected.

UMass-Maine in Crucial Series

By MIKE BROPHY

The Black Bears of the University of Maine will be in town this afternoon and Saturday afternoon for a pair of baseball games with the hometown Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts. Maine boasts a 7-2 record coming into the series and is 1-1 in the Conference, having split a twinbill with UConn.

UMass has now raised its overall record to 14-6-1 with nine victories in twelve contests since returning from California.

Coach Butterfield of Maine is very confident of his team's defensive ability and feels that if Mike Jones (3-0 on the season) can throw a good ball game, they can walk out of Earl Lorden-Field with a victory. With Mike Flanagan on the mound, however, UMass should be at it s fighting best as Flanagan boasts an undefeated 6-0 mark on the hill. The UMass bats are now going at full tilt as the team batting average is well above .300.

Flanagan himself has a .333 average while others such as Eddie McMahon are in the neighborhood of .337. If clutch hitting averages were computed it is probable that UMass would rank among the top five schools in the East in that catagory.

While Maine prides itself on its defense, UMass has been having its problems in the field as costly errors have put unneeded pressure on the pitching staff. Tom White, although lacking something as starter, has come on strong in relief to register three saves for UMass and has shown the ability to clean up some possible threats by coming out of the bullpen.

This weekend series with Maine whould prove to be a test of UMass' worthiness for the Conference crown and any possible post-season tourneys.

don't already know, became the first UMass runner ever to break nine minutes in the two mile, earlier this week. Dennis Boisvert should make things interesting in the discuss where despite a strained back, the school rcord holder is yet to be beaten this season. Bobby Adamson and Tom Gillams have been strong all season long in the triple jump, but this will be by far the strongest competition of the year.

One variable that'll have a profound and unpredictable effect will be the crowd. 37,000 people is about 37,800 more than the average dual meet audience, so a lot of people will be watching the Minutemen. Now, if they can only hold on to that baton. . .

Netmen in Defense of Crown at UConn

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Facing a dual nemesis in overconfidence and clay courts, the UMass netmen journey to Storrs, Conn. where they'll seek a repeat of their Yankee Conference title.

Both psychologically and statistically, the Minutemen figure to take their third title in their last four years. But worries surround their title defense.

Foremost of those worries is overconfidence, the roots of which lie in three inter-Conference matches in which UMass romped. The season's opener saw the Rams from Rhode Island fall 8-1. Vermont was next, going down 7-1. Last week UMass faced their stiffest competition in the Huskies from UConn (this year's conference hosts) and went on to defeat their Conference challengers 5-1, as all three doubles matches were rained out.

Speaking of rain, weather could be a tremendous factor this weekend. Three types of courts are available for use down Storrs. Given a choice UMass would opt for hard courts. Given a rain shower the move would be indoors, where four courts would serve the netmen from six state universities. Given clear skies and days of sunshine the Minutemen would compete on clay courts, the slower type surface upon which UMass fell to Amherst in their only dual match loss.

Not only will the weather affect the attitude of the netmen, it will also determine the lineup that UMass brings into the Conference. If clay is the choice, UMass' number one man Ted Donahue is likely to be sitting it out. His absence would stem from his ankle problems, severe enough to force Donahue to undergo operations on both ankles over the summer.

Confused is Coach Kosakowski, as he tries to decipher the results of his latest matches, and set up his lineup for the Championships. About the only thing of which he is certain is the Donahue and Don Douglas are playing first doubles, with Robert Schpeiser and Mike Philipp at second and Steve Ferber and Fred Braley at third. Gary Ney will fill a singles position for sure, but what slot is another matter.

UMass golfer Joe Artwell won a recent match with AIC and UConn with a one-over-par 73. Artwell and his teammates will be competing in the YanCon golfing championship today and tomorrow at the Pleasant Valley Country Club in Sutton, Mass. CHAPMAN

Having beaten B.C. last Wednesday 6-3, UMass enters the conferences with a win skein of two and an overall 6-1 record. None of the teams in the Conference come close to matching the depth of the Minutemen which is why even overconfident UMass netmen, playing on clay, should emerge victorious.

Linkmen Look Ahead to Shot at Nationals

By EARLE BARROLL

Here's another biggie for you "national calibre" freaks: did you realize that the UMass golf team—yes the anonymous team that hibernates during the spring at Hickory Ridge—is being considered for the NCAA's at Still Water, Oklahoma next month?

"It's only speculation right now," admitted coach Fan Gaudette, "but I know that we are being considered by the NCAA selection committee. It will probably come down to our performances at the Yankee Conference and New England championships."

In a year of UMass sports when the word regional has come under strong attack by athletes and coaches and fans who desire the logo "national", the rise of golf—of all sports to this lofty position is indeed interesting.

"The thing that is important here," points out Gaudette, "is that UMass does have a real good golf program and we cannot only be competitive with the Ivy Leagues and the Little Three where once we weren't, but they're now having all they can to just match us."

The Minutemen, who are currently a stunning 10-2 on the year will have their first major period of heavy scrutiny today and tomorrow when they compete in the Yankee Conference championships at Pleasant Valley in Sutton, Mass.—home of Paul Harney and an annual pro golf stopover.

If all goes well then the next and final test will be at the New Englands. "At that time," explains Gaudette "we'll be looked at by Joe Prisco of Providence College who was the first coach in New England (and also a committee selectee) to recognize us as a good team.

"We also had two exposures with Bill Johnson of Dartmouth College when we played against his team and he is also on the selection committee."

The Minutemen are being considered in two areas for the nationals: (1) as a team and (2) as individuals. The golfers who will have this opportunity today and at the N.E.'s are Joe Artman, Gary Russell, Dave Grygiel, Jim Duane, Dave Kern, Frank Agostino and Rick Olsen.

Not bad for a gold program that was once believed to have used U.S. Nobby golf balls.

WORCESTER, MASS. - Ah, yesterday was a beautiful day - for ducks, that is. However, in spite of the cold and rainy weather Garber's Gorillas battled the Holy Cross lacrosse team on a wet and sloppy field and emerged victorious, 13-5. Yesterday's contest bore a slight resemblance to a water polo game. A player attempting to pick up a loose ball would also come up with a scoopful of water and mud. The team bus was used as a covered bench.

However, despite the foul weather the UMass team rolled on. The Holy Cross defense, combined with the elements, was not even enough to contain the Gorillas' offense. With just fifty-three seconds elapsed in the game Jack Moran scored the first of the thirteen UMass goals with an assist from Peter Conolly. The Gorillas added three more scores within the first nine minutes of play. Frank Garahan scored the first of these on a nice pass from Fred Michels at 4:48. A few minutes later Hirsch Seidman and Jack Moran netted goals with assists going to Conolly and Garahan. A minute later Conolly got the ball behind the Crusader's net. Going one on one against the defenseman, he beat him cleanly and deposited the ball behind the goaltender. Fred Michaels assisted Frank Garahan on his second goal of the game seconds before the first quarter ended.

The Crusaders opened the scoring in the second period when John Moriarty scored at 0:57. This was the only tally by Holy Cross in the first half. The Gorillas retaliated with three goals of their own. Joe DeRiso made a quick shot on the surprised Holy Cross goalie after collecting a pass from Frank Garahan to start the scoring. That goal made the score 7-1. Michels and Garahan widened th Umass lead with unassisted goals within two minutes of each other to close the scoring in the first half. At that point the score stood; UMass -9, Holy Cross-1 as both teams retreated to their respective shelters.

The Gorilla's came back onto the field with goalie O. J. Rutledge being replaced by Jim Haddad. Their scoring attack continued where it had left off by netting three goals in the first seven minutes of the third quarter. Steve Crimmin beat the Holy Cross defense singlehandedly for the first, Bruce Sibson and freshman attackman Jim Curran followed with their lone goals of the game. Both of these scores were results of good passes by Conolly and Garahan. The game appeared to be over at this point with the score now 12-1 in favor of UMass. The Crusaders tallied three times before the end of that period and suddenly they seemed to have hopes of winning. These hopes were dashed in the fourth quarter and they could not even make the score respectable. Frank Garahan netted an unassisted goal at 3:00 of the final period and the Gorilla defense held the Crusaders scoreless for the rest of the way except for a single goal at 6:00.

Track n' Fielders Set Eyes on Penn Relays

By WALT POWERS

The sprinters will never forget it. It happened last year in the semi-finals of the 440 relay. Before 37,000 screaming spectators at Philadelphia's Franklin Field, an unheralded UMass quartet was running dead even with the fastest teams east of the Mississippi. Victory and national attention was waiting only 110 yards and a baton pass away. This was the Penn Relays.

It never came off. The baton was dropped, and outside of New England, UMass was forgotten. When the UMass New England Champion 440 relay team returns to the Penns today, the desire to prove themselves will be a powerful motivational incentive.

You'll have to go along way to find a collegiate track and field meet more prestigious than this five-day affair. Any event that can lure the best runners, throwers, and jumpers from Missouri to Maine into Philadelphia has to have a lot going for it. It does. Five Olympic gold medalists and a score of world and national record holders will be spotlighted.

Naturally the local interest will focus on the 440 relay. The team has been maligned by illness and injury all season long, but in their only outing as an intact squad, they beat a strong Northeastern team with almost dangerous ease. Captain Tony Pendleton and Tom Beland have had fine spring seasons so far, senior Dennis Busa has taken the past two weeks very lightly ("I wouldn't miss the Penns for anything") and his pulled calf muscle appears to be completely recovered. Anchor man Marshall Pendleton may have a touch of mono, if so, Co-Captain Steve Levine will replace him. Primarily a middle distance runner, Levine has done a more than adequate job in Dennis Busa's place. UMass has a lot of speed and handoffs have been their biggest problem this year.

In other events, Randy Thomas will be the only returning membersof a four mile relay team that ran to a stunning and totally unexpected third place finish in last years relays. Thomas, if you

The Victors Get Spoiled

There's no doubt about it, we've grown spoiled.

Ever since 1969, when the basketball team made its first appearance at the National Invitational Tournament, the baseball team has had the difficult task of following an already successful act. That year, they did top the cagers as they won their first game in the national tournament at Omaha, before being eliminated.

The pressure over the four year period nevertheless has mounted. The cagers were in the NIT three of four years and with the coaches of the basketball and baseball teams, Jack Leaman and Dick Bergquist being only two doors apart at Boyden, usually have a friendly wager as to whose team would win more games would ensue.

Add to that a national championship for the women gymnasts, a bowl victory for the pigskinners and the pucksters appearance in the Division II playoffs, among the many UMass sports accomplishments this year, you can see why the fickle fans naturally expect baseball to be in the same category.

It all started with UMass going to Omaha, Nebraska in 1969. John Kitchen blanked Southern Illinois, 2-0. Two days later NYU bombed UMass, 9-2 and then Arizona State applied the elimination punch, 4-2.

The next year was an off year, but respectability was restored in 1971, as the then-Redmen waltzed to the Yankee Conference crown with a 12-3 record. The expected return to Omaha was derailed in a playoff with Harvard, as the Crimson took two very tough games (2-1 and 4-2).

1972 was to be THE YEAR. One MDC writer even promised to eat his typewriter if the baseball team did not go to Omaha. The case for optimism was further strengthened as UMass ran off thirteen straight. While this was happening, UConn kept pace in the Yankee Conference, and one bad weekend with Maine (2-1 and 6-3 losses) put the emphasis on the last two games with the Huskies. A sweep of the two game home-and-home set was a must for the YanCon title and national hopes.

UConn-UMass was another classic match. After nine innings it was 2-2. Then 3-3. Finally in the top of the 23rd inning after something like five hours of evenly matched baseball, the Huskies scored six runs and that's where the game and, for all matters, the season ended. Record-wise it was 16-5 which is quite good, but the YanCon slate was 8-4.

This year after seeing what UConn did in the nationals (1 win and 2 losses by 1 and 2 runs) and with a schedule boasting the likes of Arizona State and Southern Col., two perennials of Omaha competition, the expectation on paper once again had the Minutemen at the top of the list. 5-4 on the west coast against some of the top teams strengthened hopes, but since returning home they've only won 9 of 12, with one being a tie with Amherst.

On paper and in many minds is the notion that UMass should walk away with the UanCon crown, but that will not be the case, as the conference is fairly well balanced. Since Vermont and BU do not have baseball teams, the loop is much tougher. URI is the only weak team, so that leaves the three others tied with UMass with 1 conference loss apiece. UConn is the defending District one champ, while Maine returns much of its 20-7 team of last year. Add that to New Hampshire which is off to a fine 7-4 start and it will be a four team race.

The pressure forces one to think ahead to the nationals, but first there is the Yankee Conference, which contrary to basketball does offer good competition for national tournaments. Maine this weekend and UConn May 11 and 12 will make or break national hopes. So, don't write off the Yankee Conference as we have a tendency to do in other sports.

Nixon Aides Urge Watergate 'Sweep'...

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is being strongly urged by White House aides just below the top level to sweep out all those involved in the Watergate scandal, according to a staff source.

These aides in private, and major Republican office holders in public, insisted the quick removal of such persons is one of the few steps open to the President who spent the weekend in guarded seclusion.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., announced he will introduce a resolution Monday calling on Nixon to take the case out of the hands of his appointees in the Justice Department and place it with apolitically independent special prosecutor of irreproachable reputation and "impeccable" integrity.

Percy said, however, he hopes Nixon will seize the initiative by making a full statement on the case and by firing all those members of his staff who have lost public confidence.

Robert W. Meserve, president of the American Bar Association, endorsed proposals for a special prosecutor in the Watergate investigation.

Stressing that he was speaking personally and not as ABA president, Meserve told newsmen there is good precedent for the move, particularly in President Calvin Coolidge's appointment of a special prosecutor in the Teapot Dome scandals of the 1920s.

A similar proposal was made by Sargent Shriver, the 1972 Democratic vice presidential candidate, who said five former Supreme Court justices should be asked by the President to appoint a special prosecutor with jurisdiction over "every aspect" of the affair.

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., said the White House may be putting out a deliberately false impression by implying L. Patrick Gray III was forced out of his job as acting FBI director.

The source of the White House staff said those aides uring Nixon to fire those implicated may be doing so at the risk of their own jobs if that advice is not taken.

"Their own positions may become untenable," the source said, because the men they are

Parking Hike Draws Flak

By STEPHEN FINE

An open meeting to discuss the proposed increased parking rates will start today at 1:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom today.

A panel made up of people who have played a role in recommending these new guidelines will be on hand to answer questions. Included on the panel will be Professor Alan Shuldiner, Head of the Parking and Transportation Council, the group responsible for the report. Other members will include Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage, Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion, and Elliot Sherman and Doug Tindal, two students on the council.

Shuldiner had said on Friday that it might cost resident students an extra $12 to park overnight on campus next year. He wasn't sure however at the time whether or not this would be just during the winter months or all through the semester.

At a meeting on Thursday night before the Professional Staff Association, Vice-Chancellor Campion said that there were 7,500 available parking spaces for students, faculty, and staff members and approximately 16,500 automobiles now registered on campus.

Campion blamed the situation on the failure of the state to provide funds to build more spaces and further expand the bus system.

The recommendations by the Parking and Transportation Council will be voted on by the Board of Trustees this Wednesday. On April 23, the proposal was approved by the Finance Committee of the Trustees.

Objections to the plan have come from both commuters and campus employees. A letter read at the Professional Staff Meeting expressed the commuter's opposition to the plan. On April 20, representatives of the Massachusetts State Employees Association also voiced their opposition to the plan. One MSEA member was quoted as saying the proposed parking fee hikes are discriminatory against the "little man."

The current proposals for Fall 1973 include making the present $5.00 fee applicable to people who park on the periphery of the campus area.

A series of concentric circles would then determine higher registration service fees for parking spaces which are more close to campus.

Ruckelshaus Will Follow Leads

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—William D. Ruckelshaus plans to take over as acting FBI director Monday with the intention of pursuing all leads turned up by the grand jury investigating the Watergate bugging raid, an aide says.

Press aide Jack Conmy told a newsman over the weekend that Ruckelshaus "is not simply going to be caretaker director," although he told President Nixon that he would serve only temporarily—perhaps for two months.

Ruckelshaus could not be reached personally.

Conmy said Ruckelshaus felt the FBI must "run down all leads turned up by the grand jury" in the Watergate case, which led to the abrupt resignation last Friday of Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray III.

Ruckelshaus, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, was appointed to the post less than two hours after Gray's resignation.

Asked whether Ruckelshaus would assume personal responsibility for the Watergate investigation, Conmy answered:

"He will be up to his neck in it."

Ruckelshaus moved over the weekend to spike reports that he will run for the U.S. Senate in his home state of Indiana next year. There had been increasing speculation that Ruckelshaus would run against old political foe Sen Birch Bayh, who defeated him in a 1968 Senate race.

Ruckelshaus said in a statement that he would not run because the FBI "must not in any way be compromised by political ambitions . . ."

It remained unsettled whether Ruckelshaus would be able to serve for more than 30 days without Senate confirmation, as claimed by Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis.

The table below shows relative expenses for undergraduate students from 1947-8 (first year as the University) to the present and the growth of these expenses over time.

The charges shown here exclude such items as lab fees, books, stationary, clothing, travel, etc., which are highly individual in nature. What fees are listed represent those charges universal to the student body—tuition, required fees, room, board, and insurance coverage. A description and detailed analysis of these charges is found on the attached pages.

English Majors Pick And Choose

By AVIS YUNI

The English Department is now offering an alternative set of requirements for majors.

Passed through a vote of English faculty on Wednesday, April 25th, majors will now have a choice of two sets of requirements to fulfill. Also, the 45 credit limit in English courses which may be counted towards graduation has been eliminated.

These alternatives require the major to be familiar with authors of British and World Literature.

Five specific courses are required: English 125 and 126—a two semester study of Masterpieces of Western Literature, English 201 and 202—a two semester study of Major British Writers, and a course in Shakespeare—English 221 or 222.

Besides these, the major will need enough English courses numbered 201 and above to have a minimum of 30 credits. English 125 and 126 may not be counted within the 30 credit hours since they are not 200-level courses.

Since this new alternative for fullfilling the major was just passed last week, the machinery for implementing it or for a major to choose which set of requirements he will fullfill has not yet been set-up.

Under the old requirements which may still be elected, majors were asked to look at literature from a number of different ways—periods, styles, etc.

Majors also had to choose three of the following: one course in the English Language (English 312, 321, or Linguistics 201); one course in Shakespeare (English 221 or 222 or an occasional undergraduate seminar in Shakespeare—390 or 391); one course in a single major British or American author (English 215, 216, 236, 268, 382, 384, 390, 391); or one course in an English genre (English 360-364).

From 30 to 45 credits in English courses numbered 201 and above was required.

As with the alternative major, students may count up to six hours of upperclass work in Comparative Literature, foreign literature, Journalistic Studies, Linguistics, or any upperlevel course in Speech concerned primarily with language or literature within their 30 credits.

In some cases, the chief advisor may permit the student to count other courses.

When passing the new requirements, the English faculty also eliminated the 45 credit limit in English courses which may be counted towards graduation. Students can now take and count towards graduation as many English courses as they wish.

When discussing careers for English majors Current cited that only 10% of the majors go to graduate school in English or teach secondary school. The other 90% get jobs unrelated to the courses they took.

"In a sense we're not geared to making a direct correlation between courses taken and jobs," Current said. He suggested that the Career Planning and Placement Office in Whitmore 239 can help majors looking for jobs or graduate schools.

At the meeting, Bill Hogan, an undergrad English major, explained that the department's grievance committee which handles complaints between English majors and professors needs new members for next year.

Interested majors, he explained, should leave their name with Irma Ford in the Undergraduate English Office in Bartlett 252. In September they should leave their address and phone number so that they can be contacted. Preference will be given to Seniors and those who apply first.

The Cost Of UMass: Up, Up And Away

By LARRY CARPMAN

The total cost of attending UMass (in-state tuition, fees, room and board) has, risen over 200% since 1947.

According to figures made available from the office of Institutional Studies the total cost of attending UMass in 1947 was $551 for the full year. Tuition was $100, required fees were $31 and room and board were $140 and $280 respectively.

Over the past 26 years tuition for in-state students has remained the most constant of the figures. From 1947 to 1959 tuition was steady at $100 per year. An increase of $100 caused tuition to rise to $200 in 1972.

This past year tuition has been set at $250 and students can look forward to an increase of $50 for the year 1973-1974.

From 1951 to 1960 board remained at $350. Remarkable as it seems there was a decrease in 1960 to $340 until 1962. Another decrease occurred in 1963 to $331. From 1964 to the present, however, board has been increasing at a steady rate to $613 per year in 1973. The largest rise was in 1968 when the rate went up by $50.

At a Board of Trustees meeting on April 10th, 1968, then Business Manager Grady was asked to defend the board increase proposal. Grady commented on the dining commons labor costs and the University policy to adapt to the needs and the wishes of the students. The minutes of the Trustees meeting refers to "the unlimited seconds policy and the optional weekend meal ticket offered" as influencing factors to the rise in board costs.

The most notable increase is in the dorm rents category. Rates remained under $201 until 1966 when the cost jumped to $375 per year. In 1968 there was $100 rise in dorm costs setting the rent at $475 per year. The average rent now stands at $678.

Bertha Auten, staff assistant to the Provost Office, said in an interview that the cost rises are "self evident across the board." She said the increase in the cost of living generally in the country is to blame for higher costs. "However," she said, "increases in tuition have not kept up with the rising costs of education." She gave as evidence the fact that many schools still, with their high tuition, must dip into their endowment funds.

The required fees for attending UMass have also been steadily on the rise since 1947. The Health Fee has gone up from $30 in 1961 to presently $77. The Athletic fee has been the most constant remaining at $20 from 1947 to 1961 when it increased by $10 and has been $30 since.

The Campus Center fee has gone up from $20 to $62 per year.

The total cost of attending UMass has risen every year since 1965.

seeking to oust include White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman and chief domestic adviser John Ehrlichman.

The Washington Post, in its Sunday editions, quoted an unnamed White House official as saying that presidential counsel John Dean III intends to swear under oath that he gave Haldeman and Ehrlichman regular progress reports on attempts to coverup the Watergate bugging.

The Post said at least two other high-level White House officials have concluded Haldeman and Ehrlichman supervised a coverup.

And it quoted one source as saying the President and his top advisers are aware of Dean's intentions and are planning a strategy to offset his charges.

Tick, Tick, Ticketron

By MARK B. CITRON

The teletype ticked off the greeting, "We are pleased to welcome University of Mass Campus Center at Amherst to our remote family," last Thursday at 9:08 a.m. hooking the UMass Campus Center into the Ticketron computer network.

Ticketron is a network of ticket agencies, each with its own computer terminal capable of recording a purchase and printing out the ticket on the spot.

A 35-50 cent service charge is added onto the cost of tickets by Ticketron. Russ Sobelman of Campus Center Travel (CCT) said that after 500 tickets are sold, the CCT will get 15¢ for each additional ticket sold.

The local Ticketron franchise, previously held by the now defunct Listening Post of Amherst, was picked up by CCT according to Sobelman to "compliment our other services". Sobelman spoke of the "compliments" as the Travel Agency and a planned auto rental service.

Sobelman emphasized that Ticketron is just a service, with all labor, lines, stock and advertising costs paid by Ticketron. The good news to Campus Center fee paying students is that Sobelman says that success will help reduce the fee.

Anyone can now use the Travel Agency to buy tickets for any airlines, reserve rooms in most hotels and obtain passport information. Ticketron will allow you to buy tickets for most events here for wherever you're going. This includes most rock concerts, Broadway shows and sporting events. Some of the more unusual events to be covered are reservations to National Parks campgrounds and Ski Lift tickets.

Arrangements are now being made to have students majoring in Hotel-Motel Management work at CCT for academic credit.

Nixon Approved 'Deceit" In '62

In 1962 in California, Gov. Pat Brown ran for re-election. It was a heavy and hot campaign; some say the dirtiest California has had.

Brown's opponent was Richard Nixon. And the Nixon campaign that year perpetrated a bit of political sabotage which ultimately the courts would expose as such. It involved this post card which was sent to half a million Democratic voters presumably from some kind of Democratic committee.

It began: "Dear Fellow Democrats." It spoke of "our party." It asked: Please send a contribution to "The Committee to Preserve a Democratic party in California." And it warned that terrible things would happen if voters elected the Democratic candidate. And, in fact, a court would later discover the whole thing, the half million post cards were all paid for, not by any Democrat, but by the Nixon for Governor campaign.

Two checks, each for $35,000, paid for the deception. It was a $70,000 bit of sabotage.

It took two years to get the case to court here in San Francisco, but when it got there the California Superior Court ruled that the Nixon campaign had indeed done it. Further, the judgment said the whole project of deceit had been "reviewed, amended and finally approved by Mr. Nixon personally."

It also found that involved in the project or aware of it were: Herb Klein, now White House communications director; Herbert Kalmbach, now Mr. Nixon's personal attorney; Caspar Weinberger, now Secretary of HEW; Maurice Stans, later secretary of Commerce, then the man in whose safe the Watergate payoff money was held; and the Nixon campaign director back in 1962 who approved the political sabotage was H. R. Haldeman. That was 11 years ago.

Baird Hassle Continues . . .

An End To S.W. Assembly?

By BILL BALLOU

Two Southwest students have initiated a petition drive to disband the Southwest Assembly and recall all Assemblymen.

The two students, John Harrington and Marc Halperin, both residents of Coolidge, said the drive originated in reaction to the Assembly's handling of last week's controversy surrounding the the appearance in Southwest of abortion advocate Bill Baird.

The Assembly had originally co-sponsored Baird's visit with the Pre-law Advising Board but dropped its support of Baird when he became involved in a controversy with the Southwest Women's Center.

Members of the Women's Center had reportedly said they opposed Baird's speaking on abortion and birth control because he was a man. Baird replied by calling Women's Liberation "one of the sickest movements that ever existed."

Baird said that the Assembly's action was the first time in ten years he had been attacked by any group other than the Catholic Church.

Baird is expected to come to the Assembly's next meeting Tuesday night to discuss their action.

The petition, according to Harrington, "publicly chastises the Southwest Assembly" and condemns the action of the Assembly as "deplorable and juvenile."

The petition also accuses the Assembly of capitulating to a "vocal and sexist fringe of the Women's Movement" and expresses support for Bill Baird.

Harrington said that he and Halperin had collected about 400 signatures from Southwest residents by late Sunday afternoon and that "only about three or four" of the students he had talked to had refused to sign the petition.

He estimated that by the time the drive is finished and the petition is presented to the Student Senate, which is expected to be sometime before Wednesday, it will have between 800 and 1,000 signatures.

Viet Fighting Ebbs

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - Fighting ebbed across South Vietnam on Sunday as the Saigon regime and the Viet Cong prepared for another round of civilian prisoner exchanges and the international truce force began a new investigation of the fatal April 7 crash of one of its helicopters.

In neighboring Cambodia, insurgent forces maintained their pressure around the capital city of Phnom Penh. President Lon Nol announced that he will head the newly created fourman political council designed to calm criticism from his opponents and allies that Cambodia is under one-man rule.

The Saigon command reported 74 cease-fire violations across Vietnam during the 24-hour period ended at 6 a.m. Sunday, the second lowest number since the truce went into effect three months ago.

Most of the alleged violations appeared to be small infantry attacks, shellings and terrorism. As in the past, most of the reported shelling attacks were concentrated at government positions on the western flanks of the northern city of Hue.

The Saigon command announced it will release another 400 civilian prisoners to the Viet Cong at Loc Ninh 75 miles north of Saigon on Monday. The Saigon government is scheduled to receive 294 of its civilian prisoners in Binh Dinh Province on the central coast and 28 at Quang Tri to the far north.

The first phase of the civilian prisoner exchange began Saturday. The Saigon government released 100 and received 63 in return. The exchange of civilian prisoners had been delayed since the cease-fire went into effect Jan. 28 in a dispute over the number each side holds. Under terms of the peace agreement, it was to have been completed Friday, but now the target date is still uncertain.

For the reinvestigation of the fatal helicopter crash that killed nine persons, including two American civilian pilots, a 19-man team moved into Communist territory by road to re-examine the site and dismantle a second helicopter that made a forced landing during the same incident. The team included one of two American civilian pilots who survived in the second helicopter. Both were carrying members of the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

The reinvestigation is aimed at settling a dispute over whether the second helicopter was moved by the Communists to back up their claim that the two aircraft strayed off an assigned safety corridor and met with an accident.

The Canadian delegation to the peacekeeping commission has charged that both helicopters were fired on and the first was shot down with a missile. The American survivors say the same and maintain that the helicopters were on course.

'His And Her' Steaks Rip Off Him And Her

By TERRY RYAN
Associated Press Writer

With meat prices clinging to the ceiling, consumer agencies around the country report a continuing skirmish over the misleading and sometimes fraudulent labeling of everything from chicken hearts to steak.

One problem is the widespread use of merchandising names such as "his and her steaks." Such names usually tell the customer little, but can add up to 40 cents a pound to the cost.

Some localities are also plagued by labels that flatly mis-identify the product being sold.

An Olympia, Wash., woman purchased chicken livers three times only to find the package contained chicken hearts that sell at 20 cents less a pound. She complained to a state agency, and now gets chicken livers when she pays for them.

Mislabeling is nothing new, but it has apparently become more common in some areas as meat prices climbed during the past year.

The Minnesota Department of Agriculture received 234 complaints about labeling in 1971. There were 534 complaints in 1972 and 1973 in the first three months of this year.

The Oregon Agriculture Department handled 22 complaints about labeling, packaging and advertising of meat during March. There were 13 complaints in March 1972.

Florida's consumer affairs chief, Robert Bishop, said he has detected increasing customer displeasure with meat labeling.

"There is unhappiness in the ranks of consumers about the proliferation of cuts," said Bishop. "They see a piece of meat labeled California roast or Miami roast and they don't know what they are buying. Fanciful names create a lot of confusion."

Several states have adopted stringent labeling regulations to cope with the name problem.

New Blasts Feared In Munitions Train

By CHARLES McFADDEN
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—Bomb experts prepared to remove an unknown number of bombs Sunday in an effort to prevent more of the explosions that ripped a munitions train and turned a rail yard into a square mile of flaming boxcars and flying shrapnel.

At least 52 persons were injured Saturday when the series of blasts rocked the yard, located near an isolated Sacramento suburb about 105 miles northeast of San Francisco. There were no immediate reports of critical injuries, deaths of missing persons, authorities said. There was also no word on what sparked the explosions, which caused damage estimated in the millions of dollars.

Forty-six Army and Air Force detonation experts were ready to move into the area of the Roseville Southern Pacific yard, taking trucks with them to remove the 250-pound bombs, a Department of Defense spokesman said.

"We haven't decided where to take these things," said Air Force Capt. Richard Sheffield. "We can desensitize a small part, but eventually they must be detonated."

Numerous 250-pound bombs were reported on the ground following the series of explosions that first rocked the yard, Southern Pacific's biggest switching point in California, early Saturday.

Authorities said the last explosion was heard at about 8:15 a.m. Sunday and the mushroom-shaped explosion clouds and smoke from fires was absent from the sky Sunday.

A Defense Department spokesman said authorities had to agree the danger to bomb squads was "minimal" before giving the go-ahead to send them into the area.

About 2,500 persons remained evacuated from homes in the area Sunday, according to the State Office of Emergency Services.

Wounded Knee Time Is Running Out

By TERRY DeVINE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) - An anticipated meeting between the government's chief negotiator and leaders of Indian militants occupying Wounded Knee failed to come off Sunday.

A federal spokesman said the government is losing patience with the insurgents.

"I think the clock is running out on how long the government will exercise patience and restraint in this manner," Interior Department Solicitor Kent Frizzell said after the Indians called off the planned meeting.

Sources close to the government officials have said for several days that the government would make once last attempt to negotiate before resorting to force.

Frizzell said he hoped to meet with the AIM leaders Monday afternoon to resume negotiations in the 63-day siege.

He said he believes that if a negotiated settlement isn't obtained in the near future, the government will conclude that the occupation force isn't interested in a peaceful resolution of the armed stalemate.

"Once that takes place," Frizzell said, "I think the government will be required to take a look at the harder choices."

At the same time, Oglala Sioux authorities were bracing themselves for a possible confrontation Monday with an American Indian Movement force.

The militant group said it will bring the body of one of its slain members to Wounded Knee for burial, despite a tribal court order prohibiting the burial.

The two sides talked for nearly two hours Saturday, the first negotiations in more than three weeks.

Government and AIM representatives have not held serious talks to end the siege since the signing of an April 5 peace agreement, which has not been implemented.

Frizzell did meet for an hour Sunday with traditional Oglala Sioux chiefs and headmen on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Frizzell said he discussed the same things with the Oglala leaders that he had covered with AIM leader Dennis Banks and AIM medicine man Leonard Crow Dog on Saturday.

Collegian Reporter Busted

By MDC STAFF

Nathan J. Gorenstein, Collegian reporter and UMass junior, was arrested Saturday by federal authorities in Wyoming while reportedly accompanying a group of persons traveling towards the Indian occupation at Wounded Knee, S.D.

Gorenstein, who had been travelling in the area as a reporter for the Collegian for over a week, was reportedly one of a group of persons attempting to cross the border from Colorado into Wyoming when they were arrested. While a number of UMass students have travelled to Wounded Knee to support the occupation, it was not known whether any others of those arrested were UMass students.

Sources at UMass say that they believe another four UMass students besides Gorenstein have been arrested since April 20.

According to a student at Colorado State University, Gorenstein, who comes from Medford, was charged with crossing a state line with intent to aid and abet a riot.

Bail has been set at $2,500, and a hearing has been scheduled in his case for Tuesday. He is currently in the Laramie County, Wyoming, jail, under arrest by federal authorities.

Gorenstein accompanied a group of eight UMass students who left to support the Indian occupation April 20. While many of the students returned to UMass, others left for the area and five to ten UMass students are now believed to be in the area.

Congress To Face Nixon On Wage-Price Control

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congress returns Monday from a week long Easter recess to face an immediate decision on extending the President's wage-price control authority. The authority expires at midnight Monday, and Congress is expected to extend it for one year.

However, there is a threatened snag in the Senate, which must act first on the legislation. Sen. Gale W. McGee, D—Wyo., has vowed to block it until he gets action on his postcard voting registration measure. McGee wants the Senate to limit debate on his bill.

Some Senate opponents of a series of provisions in the wage price bill reportedly hope to win a simple, unrestricted one-year extension by taking advantage of the McGee bill maneuvering to stall the vote until shortly before the midnight deadline.

In other action at the Capitol this week:

—An effort to prohibit $150 million for U.S. bombing in Cambodia and other Indochina expenses is pledged Thursday when the House Appropriations Committee marks up a supplemental money bill.

Mississippi Waters Waning

By LEE GOULD
Associated Press Writer

Flood levels on parts of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers dropped Sunday but more than 10 million acres of land remained under water and thousands of families were still out of their homes.

The Mississippi River reached its crest, or highest flood stage, at St. Louis and the National Weather Service said it "is beginning to fall slowly" at that point.

The river was still 13 feet above its flood stage at St. Louis and the weather service said it would be May 13 or 14 before it falls below flood levels—if there is no "additional appreciable rainfall."

Along the Mississippi's 1,500-mile length, however, more than 10 million of acres of land, much of it prime farmland, remained flooded. Even without more rain it will take weeks for the waters to recede.

Soviets Cracking Down On Religious Groups

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)—A Byelorussian people's court has imprisoned four Evangelical Baptists in a wide-ranging crackdown on small religious groups.

Other victims in recent months have been a Buddhist scholar who had followers from the Mongolian border to the Baltic and an underground group of Jehovah's Witnesses in Lithuania, Latvia and northwestern Russia.

The sentencing of the Baptists to varying terms of imprisonment was reported in the Friday issue of Sovietskaya Byelorussia.

A People Struggling,

The Nature Of Tribal Government

(This article on the nature of BIA tribal governments is part of a longer article, 'What Do the Indians Want' which appeared in the March 18, 1973, edition of the New York Times Magazine. Its author is Alvin Josephy, to whom we express our continuing gratitude.)

. . . Indian water rights have been won away by deceit; leases have been signed secretly; their terms have been unfair; and those terms have not been lived up to and are not enforced.

The method by which leases for Indian-owned resources are approved and signed has exposed another—and extremely serious—source of Indian anger. Prior to their military defeat by white men, all tribes had centuries-old methods for governing themselves, some by councils of wise and respected civil headmen and chiefs; others by hereditary religious or clan leaders. But in 1934, the Federal Government imposed on almost every tribe a uniform system of tribal councils—styled in the white man's way—that named the top tribal officers.

Council members were supposed to be elected democratically by the people, but in practice the new system was so alien to large numbers of Indians that majorities of them on many reservatious have refused consistently to vote in tribal elections and continue even today to regard the councils as institutions of the white man rather than of their own people.

The gap thus created between the tribal governments and the Indians who did not accept them was bad enough in the past—indeed it has been another inhibiting factor in Indian development for a long time—but the move to give Indians self-determination, together with the greatly increased funds that have been appropriated for Indians in recent years, have worsened the situation. That has increased the power and financial resources of the councils and tribal officers and in effect, creating small political and economic Indian "establishments" on many reservations.

The present administration, looking for leaders who will run a tribe's affairs, has encouraged this development. But the system has resulted in accelerating the growth of corrupt little tyrannies, composed sometimes of the tribal councils and their friends and relatives, sometimes simply of the tribal chairman and his treasurer. These, acting in collusion with Government officials, the white interests desiring to exploit the reservation resources and the tribal lawyers (usually white men, but in all cases persons who must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior) have come to serve almost as willing arms or accomplices of the Federal Government.

The people's antagonisms to their tribal governments (sometimes exacerbated by added irritations, such as white-oriented mixed bloods who do not speak the tribe's language but who rule high-handedly over full bloods) have split many reservations.

The Brule Sioux on South Dakota's Rosebud Reservation have seethed for many years over a series of allegedly corrupt tribal officials. On the neighboring Pine Ridge reservation, the frustrations of Oglala Sioux who tried unsuccessfully to oust their tribal chairman, Richard Wilson, a mixed blood charged with corruption, nepotism, and with being a puppet of white interests, were a major contributing cause of the outburst at Wounded Knee.

Crows, Northern Cheyennes, Hopis and Navajos have had serious internal divisions over the secretive leasing activities of their tribal leaders, and numerous other groups, including the Mohawks in New York State, the Cherokees and other tribes in Oklahoma, and Indians at Tesuque Pueblo in New Mexico and in Minnesota, Nebraska, the Northwest, and throughout the Dakotas, have been in conflict with their governments.

The truth is that on few reservations today are the tribal leaderships fully accountable, or responsive, to the people. (Few Hopis knew about the leases to strip-mine Black Mesa or even today can find out what happens to the lease money paid to the tribe by the Peabody Coal Company.) And the laws governing the Indians are still such that the people of few tribes possess the legal or political powers "to throw out the rascals' or reform their systems of government.

Yet, when they complain to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, they are told with utter hypocrisy that, because of the Indians' wish for self-determination, the Government will no longer interfere in internal tribal matters. But every Indian knows that the leases that threaten their reservations and are bringing them into conflict with white exploiters had to be approved by the Government, that in most cases it was the Government that first brought the white companies to the tribal chairman and lawyer, that the Government advised the chairman in the writing of the leases, and that it, finally, encouraged him to sign it.

The result of this—and of a number of allied developments—has been the growth of opposition, often sparked by activists, traditionalists, and Indian land owners, against the reservation power establishments, whose members are termed derisively 'Uncle Tomahawks' or 'apples' because they are viewed as tools of the white interests and betrayers of their own people.

The problem has become more serious as the white intrusions have increased and become more insensitive to Indians and their way of life, and as efforts by the Indians generally to bring them under control or stop them have been frustrated. Recognition of the Government role in directing the Indian power establishment, even while it talked of self-determination, took on the coloration of anger over betrayal. .

In Support Of The Struggle

The Six Nations Iroquois Confederacy stands in support of our brothers at Wounded Knee.

We find it deplorable that the Native Americans have to risk their very lives to focus attention on the terrible conditions of our people in this country. We cite the poor health conditions, education, welfare, illegal drafting of our people, and the utter disregard for the treaties that we have paid for with our lives as examples of these conditions.

The issues are national and international—the honor and credibility of the United States is at stake. You should be concerned. All of the people of the United States should be concerned. The President of the United States should be concerned, and further, he should make a statement to that effect. Native Americans should be the top priority of this nation. We number less than 1 per cent of this country's population: now why is it so hard to take care of the obligations to our people that have been promised and promised and promised.

The people at Wounded Knee are making a statement. The question is not what damage or destruction of property has occurred, but why it becomes necessary for our people to have to resort to such extremes to gain some recognition of our desperate situation.

We are a free people. The very dust of our ancestors is steeped in our tradition. This is the greatest gift we gave to you, the concept of freedom. You did not have this. Now that you have taken it and built a constitution and country around it, you deny freedom to us. There must be some one among you who is concerned for us, and if not for us, at least for the honor of your country. In 1976, you are going to have a birthday party proclaiming 200 years of democracy, a hypocritical action. The people of the world would find this laughable.

The solution is simple: be honest, be fair, honor the commitments made by the founding fathers of your country. We are an honorable people—can you say the same? You are concerned for the destruction of property at the BIA building and at Wounded Knee. Where is your concern for the destruction of our people, for human lives? Thousands of Pequots, Narragansetts, Mohicans, thousands of Cherokees on the Trail of Tears, Black Hawk's people, Chief Joseph's people, Captain Jack's people, the Navajos, the Apaches, Sand Creek Massacre (huddled under an American flag seeking the protection of a promise), Big Foot's people at Wounded Knee. When will you cease your violence against our people? Where is your concern for us?

What about the destruction of our properties? The thousands of acres of land, inundated by dams built on our properties, the raping of the Hopi and Navajo territories by the Peabody strip mining operations, timber cutting, power companies, water pollution, and on and on. Where is your concern for these properties?

The balance of the ledger is up to you. Compare the property damage of the BIA and Wounded Knee against the terrible record and tell us that we are wrong for wanting redress. We ask for justice, and not from the muzzle of an M-16 rifle. Now what is to occur?

Remove the marshalls and the FBI men. They are hostile, and eager to exercise the sanctions of the United States to subjugate the Indian people. Do not prosecute the Indians for the methods used to gain your attention, for the fault actually lies with the Government of the United States for ignoring Indians for so long.

Put your energies and money now being expended for the suppression of Indian people at Wounded Knee into a real effort to understand why they are there. And begin here in the capital through an investigation of the BIA, and of the government policies dealing with our most urgent needs.

Reaffirm and respect the treaties entered into between our two peoples.

Put your house in order with respect to our people, so that we may continue to coexist in peace and friendship as our grandfathers and their grandfathers tried so hard to do.

Show us you are sincere and remember the Creator loves all life and peoples and favors none above the other.

We have not asked you to give up your religions and beliefs for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your language for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your ways of life for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your government for ours.

We have not asked that you give up your territories to us.

Why can you not accord us the same respect? For your children learn from watching their elders, and if you want your children to do what is right, then it is up to you to set the example.

That is all that we have to say at this moment.

Onen.

Liberty And Justice For ALL?

We knew it would be heavy--but shit! ---we had all experienced the tenseness in college strikes and demonstrations, a feeling one is battering one's head against the most unpenetrable wall--the U. S. government. We had dealt with police brutality and the exhilaration one feels, knowing one is dead right. But never had any of us experienced the shock of knowing we were in a guerilla war zone and our rightness could mean death. This wasn't a weekend struggle, where the security of returning home was always in the back of one's mind. The knowledge of our rightful fear of being shot and killed by redneck vigilanties, B.I.A. squadrons, or Federal Marshals or getting busted for conspiracy or intent to aid and abet a riot pervaded every action.

Is it a riot that because our brothers and sisters are sick and starving inside Wounded Knee, we want to bring food and medical supplies to them? Is it a riot that when after 481 years of genocide by European settlers a people take the last recourse of action open to them? Or is it a riot when 600 Federal Marshals, armed with M-16s, armored personnel carriers, power rifles, and helicopters hold men, women, children captive on their own land?

The march which began on Rusebud Reservation was headed by a banner which declared "Liberty and Justice for All," a demand upon which this nation was founded, but which has been denied to Native Americans and other minority peoples. We felt full of strength and purpose when we were in S. Dakota; we were lending needed support to an ongoing struggle which is not limited to the battleground of Wounded Knee. This conflict is representative of continuing revolution which involves us all. The longer we were at Wounded Knee, the more clearly it was brought home to us that this was our struggle also. Why must we fear for our lives and our freedom because we are in support of a people trying to defend their just rights as human beings?

Even as we wondered at the surrealistic feeling that the situation imposed on us because of the underlying tensions and paranoia, we began to understand what it is like to be in the midst of the war--not in Vietnam this time, but right here at home. We realized the necessity of this strict security system devised for the marchers' camp Easter Sunday night; the gnawing fear penetrated the atmosphere and created the mood within the camp.

The intensity of this paranoia hit home one night as five of us were sitting in the field just outside the perimeter of the camp. A truck came by and as it slowed down just ten feet away from us, we all instinctively dropped flat to the ground. We had made the transition from the initial shock at the actuality of war to having it become an intrinsic part of our lives.

The degree of ludicrousness of our lives at UMass reaches new highs every day since we were compelled to return. We've been made to feel that we were wrong to support the crisis at Wounded Knee. We've been impressed with the feeling that no one here will admit than any type of warfare is going on at Wounded Knee, we've been confronted with the realization that people are still denying that the government is screwing people again and again.

We've been greeted with reactions like, "Oh-you're back--did you have a good time?" or "Well, I support the cause, but their tactics are wrong." to "You can't run off to fight when you're not dealing with what's here!"

How can we deal with what's here when people are caught up in the Blue Wall, the off-the-wall rhetoric of sympathy (which does nothing); people so strung out by the lack of any substantial meaning to their lives that they exist in terms of 10:10s, semesters, and intersessions.

Was the political activism and social concern of the 60's for real or just a temporary fad of spoiled children? The issues are the same, the need for change is real. What are you going to do when your support is called for?

"The Indian must conform to the White Man's ways. Peaceable, if they will, forcibly if they must. They must adjust themselves to their environment and conform their mode of living, substantial, to our civilization. This civilization may not be the best possible, but it is the best the Indians can get. They cannot escape it, and must either conform to it, or be crushed by it."

— Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 58th annual report of the Dept. of Interior, October 1, 1889.

A Worthy Cause

The situation at Wounded Knee has drastically changed in the last few weeks. There is now a crucial need for food and medical supplies within the village and for bail money for those Indians and supporters who were recently arrested trying to answer this need.

This week the Committee to Support Wounded Knee is going to be collecting money for food and medical supplies and to raise defense funds, including bail money for four UMass students.

A letter asking for funds has been sent out to the UMass faculty and there will be a door-to-door campaign in the dorms this week. The goal is to collect $5,000 during the week. PLEASE CONTRIBUTE!!!

There will be a meeting for any persons interested in helping the committee on Tues. at 7 P.M. in the Draft Counseling Office, S.U.

This Revolution Will Not Be Televised

This well-known quote has a timely relevance to the potential Wounded Knee Massacre, Round II.

So you think that because there has been nothing in the Collegian, or the Globe, or the New York Times about Wounded Knee today, or yesterday, that nothing is happening there? The absence of news coverage, on the East coast especially, is only indicative of, on the one hand, the effectiveness of the government in blacking out news from Wounded Knee, and on the other, the bias and superficiality of the coverage of the media.

The U.S. has apparently learned lessons from the successful manipulation of information brought to its quintessence by Nazi Germany . . . and the U.S. in Vietnam—remember that My Lai was not exposed by the media until two years after it happened.

Invitations to help stop the genocide of Native Americans will not come from CBS, NBC; ad nauseum. We will be judged not by what we say, but by what we do.

Pages six and seven of today's Collegian are a report on recent activities at Wounded Knee, South Dakota compiled by members of the Committee to Support Wounded Knee. Any opinions expressed on the pages are those of the authors and not necessarily those of the Collegian.

Parking Fee Protest

There will be an open meeting today at 1 pm in the Student Union Ballroom to discuss the proposed increased parking rates. A panel made up of people who have played a role in recommending these new guidelines will be on hand to answer questions.

The parking fee proposal includes a plan to raise the price of parking spaces on a graduated basis, ranging from $24 to $75, depending on the lot's proximity to campus. The increase would go into effect next semester.

Therefore, all students who are concerned about paying these unquestionably exorbitant rates should make a point of attending this discussion, to voice their objection to the proposal.

The parking fee hikes are discriminatory against students and University employees who were in no way responsible for the lack of foresight in planning the University parking lots.

Today at 1 pm in the Student Union Ballroom. Be there.

Pay Chairpeople

In a characteristic display of inconsistency, the Student Senate at a meeting last Thursday night decided to pay its committee chairpeople $20 a week for 30 weeks starting next fall, then reversed themselves later in the night, leaving the people who chair the committees in their present, payless state.

The decision not to pay is a serious error on the Senate's part. What they are asking chairpeople to do is work about forty hours a week defending student interests, in a job that takes so much time that a paying job cannot be considered (bear in mind that these people are students, too), and to do those jobs for no compensation.

The Senate should bear in mind that it will rarely get good work out of anyone for nothing. The pressures that are a fact of life in this university prohibit it. There has been a disturbing but understandable trend for people in Student Government to take jobs which relate to their Senate jobs with the people in Whitmore whom they work with closely. This presents the danger of the wrong people becoming chairpeople and selling out to the very people that they must of necessity oppose on occasion. The argument that committee heads have worked for nothing before now and thus should continue to do so does not hold water anymore, as more and more students are trying to make it on their own financially.

It is a disservice to the students they represent if the Senate does not reverse its decision. Good people will not do a tedious, thankless job for nothing. Even though $20 is so low as to border on insulting, it's a start in the right direction. The pay bill should get through by any means necessary·as soon as possible.

IN ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT it has been brought to our attention that the SGA president's pay has been changed from $200 dollars for nine months to $150 for nine and $300 during the summer. While this frees him from the threat of being co-opted during the summer, the pay cut during the winter is absurd for the same reasons stated above. Again, we urge a reversal of the decision by the Senate.

Women And The Economy

By The Radical Women's Council

We are women who want a revolutionary change in this society—a change that would allow everyone the freedom to control their lives, to develop their creative human potential and to have economic well being. We believe that most people in this capitalist society are denied that opportunity—because the vast majority of those who work have no control over what is produced or how it is produced, and certainly not in how the profits from producing it are distributed. We believe a socialist society is the only way to accomplish the goals we mentioned in a way that allows everyone an equal opportunity to achieve them.

The productive system of this country is not operated to benefit the people, but rather to make profit for corporations. Workers have to compete with each other for jobs, which keeps wages low and alienation from other workers high. Racism and sexism are used to divide blacks from whites and men from women on the job. By paying blacks and other Third World people less than whites and women less than men, or by denying them jobs altogether in preference to white men, workers are kept divided, fighting each other, and powerless to unite to fight the owners and administrators who control the job market. Blacks and women of all races are systematically paid less wages for the same work as white men. In 1969 the median income for all groups was as follows: white male $9900, black male, $5900, white female $5200, black female $4100. Furthermore the largest percent of blacks and women are in low status, low paid service jobs either in factories or as janitors, teachers, secretaries, nurses, policemen, social workers, waiters or waitresses. There are many more women than men who work part time, partly because they can't find full time jobs, and partly because of the abasnce of adequate child care for children. Women stabilize the economy by being a marginal work force which can be drawn into or driven out of jobs depending on what would increase profits to businesses. Because women view themselves (and men view women) as passive and as home-centered, they do not feel they have a right to complain, even when their income is essential to their families, and particularly when they are single women, with or without children to support, who are often forced to go on welfare when they are fired. Many women on welfare in urban areas also do not feel the right to complain, even though they are not paid enough to make ends meet and are constantly demeaned and hassled by their social worker and the welfare bureaucracy.

We feel that since racism and sexism in the economy play a crucial role in maintaining that economy, they will not be eliminated without a struggle. It certainly will not be done by placing some women and Third World people in middle management positions. Those in these jobs can do little to help their exploited brothers and sisters. Instead those people are just set up as false examples of how success to blacks and women, so those channeled into low paid jobs, unemployment or welfare by race and sex, background and inadequate education can feel their low status is simply due to their stupidity or inadequacy.

We feel a solidarity with all groups who identify their struggle as requiring the elimination of capitalism and imperialism, and we oppose those groups, including segments of the women's movement and the black movement, who feel that individuals or groups should have making it in the capitalist system as their goal. We feel at this historical moment it is necessary for women to have their own organizations within the revolutionary movement. This is not because we hate men—we reject that as a false media stereotype. However it is true that women have occupied social and economic positions subordinate to men—both on the job and in the family. Women and men have been trained to think of women as subordinate and not equal human beings. The woman's movement of the late 60's developed out of SDS and a pattern of heavy female oppression in that and other radical organizations which were dominated by men, and in which women were relegated to the role of coffee-makers secretaries, babysitters and sex objects. We feel that any successful revolutionary change in this country can only be accomplished by a movement which combats its own sexism, makes eliminating sexism in society a goal of that movement, and allows women equal positions in leadership positions in that movement, in the home and on the job. In order to accomplish this goal, many women need to develop a strong image of woman and themselves, and one way to do this is to work with other women. This does not at all preclude working in movement organizations with men—in fact these organizations need women to remind them constantly that solidarity requires equality.

We feel that working women play a vital role in the economy. We also feel that housewives play a role in educating the new work force and that their unpaid labor in the home as well as their role as house consumers are other ways the economy is stabilized.

The majority of Third World women and 50% of all women are working in addition to family duties they may have. 51% of women in the work force are single, with or without children, or married to men who make less than $3000 a year. These women do not have the luxury of choosing whether to work or to stay home. Most of them are not professionals in any kind of "career", but are simply working to survive.

Working women have got to start organizing at their jobs as well as in the home to demand an end to their economic exploitation by those who control the profits of this system—large corporations. As they do this, they will begin to see that they cannot accomplish this goal without solidarity with other workers, men and women, white and third world. All working people, men as well as women, can join in specific demands such as free community controlled child care and schooling, which would free women and benefit their children.

We do not agree with the belief of some in the women's movement that the family ought to be abolished. We realize the importance of the family as a base for resistance to the system, and as a social and economic unit for support in an increasingly alienated society. However, we feel that white women who are housewives in patriarchal family situations have special problems which must be dealt with before they can be strong independent people who could help in resistance against the system.

The family plays different functions for different groups. We realize that the third world community must decide for themselves how the family and alternate styles of living and bringing up children can best function to support their movement. In white culture, the patriarchal bourgeois nuclear family has clearly been opporessive for women. We feel it is important for white women, who have traditionally been expected to fit into the passive, feeble up-on-the-pedestal feminine mystique as wife and mother (although working women were never allowed to "live up" to this model), to redefine their roles, to feel free to choose alternate communal lifestyles, or to attempt to establish a new equal role in a new kind of life. This is especially important for single women and welfare women with or without children, who are social and economic outcasts in all classes of American society.

In order to make these decisions, women must have the right to control their bodies. This means birth control and abortion on demand. We recognize that this right of control has been denied to poor and minority women who have been the victims of forced sterilization, with genocidal implications. Decisions about reproduction should be placed in the hands of those who reproduce.

Letters To The Editor

Just Listen

To The Editor:

Re: Mr. James Michaelson's letter on the speech made by Stokely Carmichael.

Would it amuse you if I said that every time I read a letter from a Jew it amused me? That every time Israel is brought up by a speaker that certain people often times feel a need to respond in the negative, or feel that Jews are being purposefully attacked?

First of all, I do not propose to speak for Mr. Carmichael; rather I propose to speak what I heard, and what I know, rather than projecting my personal opinion on what Mr. Carmichael said.

He did not put the blame (or the credit) for the current condition of Israel on the Jews. Rather, it was Europe's guilt feelings, and also their feelings of superiority over the entire world. (Ah, okay, we're sorry for what we did to you, and we'll give you a chunk of land. It doesn't matter who's currently living there). These same feelings were manifest when a European Conference was called in the late 1800's to divide Africa along lines that had nothing to do with tribal heritage, but rather as to how well Europeans could capitalize on their colonies without stepping on each others toes.

And, if you're looking for proof of domination, check out Israel's control of Arab lands, lands which are seized with American arms in a war. Oh, it was claimed in a war, so that justifies it. Like hell it justifies it. Just as the slaughter of 6 million (and more Jews was justified because, after all, there was a World War going on, right? G

And, if you're looking for proof of domination, check out Isreal's control of Arab lands, lands which were seized with American arms in a war. Oh, it was claimed in a war, so that justifies it. Like hell it justifies it. Just as the slaughter of 6 million (and more) Jews was justified because, after all, there was a World War going on, right? Gotta have a few casualties, right? But right now, I'd rather have a stop in the attitudes that cause such things. Please, Mr. Michaelson, next time, please don't go to laugh -- go to listen. And I promise that I will listen to you.

I wish you realization.

Oppression

To The Editor:

Mr. Michaelson may be laughing at the division between victim and oppressor but from the rationale of his letter it seems appropriate to say at this point that often the oppressor fails to see his "victim". Oppression has a long history of creating rationalizations to obscure the view. The Jewish people have been victimized through much of history which makes their role of oppressor of the Palestinian Arabs now even more reprehensible. It's so much rhetoric to become involved in who's blacker than whom and clouds the fact that yesterday's victims can easily become tomorrow's oppressors as the world has witnessed happen in the Zionist state of Israel.

Where does Mr. Michaelson get his figures to support his statement that Palestinian guerillas kill more Palestinians than Israelis? I'd like to know how he arrived at this pronouncement.

"Inequalities" hardly describe the components of Israeli domestic and occupied territories policies. The Emergency Regulations enacted by the British under their Mandate to combat Zionist terroism were loudly condemned by the Jewish people as inhumane and repressive. Stangely and sadly enough not only are they still on the books after more than 25 years but they are enforced arbitrarily against the Arab population. It goes beyond oppression into the realm of terror. The Palestinian Arabs have been forced from their land through deceit, trickery, terror, and out right force. It's not past history - it's current. It goes on daily with the exile of Arab intellectuals and community leaders, the razing of Arab villages, the confiscation of Arab lands, the exploitation of the Arab labor force that Israel has reduced to the position of migrant workers. No matter how close you look, Mr. Michaelson, if you're blind you won't see.

You use "Munich" very flippantly, because of its emotional impact? Do you remember that it was the government of Israel which was willing to sacrfice the lives of the hostages so that at all costs the guerillas would not escape? That tells me something about the vaunted humanity of the state of Israel which puts "Munich" in a different light for me. The athletes held by the guerillas were infinitely more valuable to them alive than dead. It seems to me that "life" in Munich was held singularly cheap.

I know what a kibbutz can be - an enclave where you can surround yourself with idealism isolated from the awareness that within miles of you perhaps Arab prisoners and other "security threats" are brutalized physically and psychologically. Sarafand Camp is just one example.

You say that "in Israel oppression is a dirty word" but like many dirty words what it signifies isn't condoned in public but often indulged in in private.

The other face of Israel is there to see if you care to look but from the tone of your letter I don't really feel you are sincere in seeking out other sources of information. You've obviously found a crutch in your "Palestinian friend" and have made a point not to grasp the symbolisms of Mr. Carmichael.

It's very hypocritical to speak of your "going home" when the people who can honestly, without elaborate rationalizations, call occupied Palestine home are not allowed to go home.

I hope your illusions are the product of ignorance and not the product of indifference.

Special Students

To The Editor:

On March 6, 1973, approximately two months ago, in response to the grim prospects for admissions announced by the School of Education at the University, a group of interested students met and formed the Special Students for Action (SSA). The students who joined were willing to run any risk involved, and invest time and energy to publicize our plight. We began a telephone campaign to inform all Special Students and invite them to join our group at meetings. People who expressed an interest, but who missed a meeting because of other committments, were kept informed by telephone. We met with Dean Anderson (representing Dean Allen), Dean Appley, Provost Gluckstern, and the Admissions Committee of the School of Ed. We provided articles to the Collegian to keep the community informed. We contacted faculty and graduate students to explain our plight.

Through the efforts of SSA, 20 new graduate student slots were provided to the School of Ed by Dean Appley. He suggested that these be earmarked for Special Students, but he pointed out that this had to be done by the School of Ed. Members of SSA met again with the Admissions Committee and with Dean Anderson to urge that Dean Appley's recommendation be followed, and that the School of Ed demonstrate its alleged support for Special Students by matching Dean Appley's generosity. After three weeks of silence, SSA was informed that the 20 slots would be earmarked for Special Students. But additional slots were not provided, or even mentioned.

SSA was asked to make a recommendation as to where the 20 slots should be assigned by reviewing our members' applications and grouping by Clusters. With consideration to where students were applying, telephone conversations with people who were undecided, and another meeting of our group, we produced suggested proportions to allot the 20 slots to the clusters. At a later time, SSA was informed (contrary to what had originally been discussed) that these slots would be assigned by the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate, who paid little attention to our fair distribution of slots, and that clusters would decide to which Special Students they would go with no regard to the SSA members through whose sustained efforts the slots had been obtained. SSA could expect no support from the Administration. It seems that the School of Ed is delighted to receive 20 extra slots from the University, but unwilling to recognize the contribution we have made.

Inez Anderson, member SSA

Commuters' Money

To The Editor:

I belong to the silent minority on this campus known as the commuters. Like many commuters, I am forced to work 20 - 25 hours a week to meet rising food and housing costs, not to mention tuition and other school fee increases. I am unfortuante since the "free" bus service doesn't come near my place of residence and the late hours I work do not facilitate hitchhiking. I need a car and I need a place to park it while I'm at class. If the parking fee is increased, many commuters are going to get the shaft, myself included. As it stands now, dorm residents have higher priority than do commuters when it comes to parking assignments: a senior commuter ranks the same as, sometimes lower than, a junior dorm resident. This seems absurd-the dorm residents are already on campus, so why do they need cars? Sure some of them work, student teach, etc., but the majority of dorm residents who have cars on campus have them solely for the sake of convenience and pleasure. What about the commuter who needs a car to get on campus for classes? Under the newly proposed system of parking fees, it's the commuters who are going to feel the pinch. The lots dorm residents park in aren't going up, but the lots used by commuters, staff and faculty are going up to as high as $75. Is the administration trying to drive commuters, staff and faculty out of the university? Into the poor house? Mybe another solution can be found but to assume that raising the parking fee is the best solution is absurd. Maybe I'm being selfish, but I'm tired of paying for things on campus, which as a commuter, do not benefit me, the bus service included. I'd like to see my money do something for me for a change. I think it's time the commuters, committees, staff and faculty got together to stop the administration before it stops us. The money you save may be your own!

May Day Games

To The Editor:

We are announcing the First Universal Life Church "May Day Games," featuring: Maypole dances and songs, a pageant: Winter versus Summer, and games (like "Maybasket-chase-and-kiss") to take place on Tuesday at 3:30 P.M. at Amherst College upon the lovely green quad behind Johnson Chapel and in front of the Frost Library (not to be confused with the program of the Town Commons).

This is a primarily participatory, rather than spectator affair, a regenerative as opposed to degenerative occassion. Essential preparations: at least one flower from each celebrant including lush paper flowers, for the Common Bouquet.

Editorial Points

Too bad a lot of people couldn't get into the free concert Saturday in the Campus Center Auditorium. Too bad it had to be inside. One good thing, though. The concert committee did a good job of cleaning up afterwards.

Parking Fees

To The Editor:

It is time the students and employees on this campus recognized the collective in pact they have. There is to be an exorbitant increase in the parking fees on campus. The persons who have approved of this raise have shown little regard for the employee or commuting student who may be unable to use the bus system. This lack of concern is disheartening and appalling. Yet the members of he University community have the power to make their opinions known. There will be a table in the C.C. Concourse area today (Mon., Apr. 30), with a petition against the increase. Students, faculty, employees: LET YOURSEVES BE HEARD.

Military State?

To TheEditor:

Professor Bill Connolly and Larry Ladd should be commended for making the trip to Boston to oppose before a sub-committee of the Board of Trustees the granting of credit to ROTC. This sub-committee ruled against this 2-man contingent and in effect revolked all the energy and effort made last Spring to withdraw credit and to have ROTC moved off campus.

Personally I apologize for not taking the time to again oppose the moves to reinstate ROTC with credit. Last Spring after the take over of ROTC, hundreds of people supported that action (especially in the first few days) as a response to Nixon's bombing campaign in Cambodia and to the military presence on campus. Later during negotiations and meetings with the Board of Trustees, support fell away leaving a few to do the work for what was assumed to be the sentiment of many. It can be assumed that administrators will return to former policies that reintrench reactionary sectors of an institution, in this case UMass. Faddish concern and radicalism contribute nothing in the long run. Concerned people show a diligence and awareness that prevails even during the cycles of setbacks.

It is disappointing to notice that those participating in the ROTC takeover last Spring have abdicated to the pro-military forces in their community at a time when Cambodia is presently being bombed and when Wounded Knee is encircled by the military preventing entry of good and medicine to the Native Americans. The occupiers of ROTC demanded to work amidst an institution free from the overt military presence and wished not to interfere with the life of cadets as long as the sham of military education, managing the training of elitists in the air force (which does the bombing in Cambodia and the reconnaisance over Wounded Knee) was exposed and resettled outside the university. It is unlikely that occupiers of ROTC will ever face the genodice and Mylai-like action that the occupiers of Wounded Knee face, and this may be the reason why issues fade with the season for some university "radicals".

The case of ROTC is lost, but for educational purposes it may be worthwhile to document slightly that this society is giving the military more money (which provides deadly privilege and power) then is customary for a "democracy".

Between 1965 and 1971 the U. S. government collected $498.2 billion in personal income tax and between 1965 and 1972 more than $466.1 billion was spent by the Pentagon, or 50¢ per personal income tax dollar goes to the Pentagon, then to the profits of General Dynamics, Grumman, Lockheed, and Litton etc. While food prices have gone up 25.4% in that period, defense spending has gone up 56.6%. A concrete example of a Litton Industry project was the assault helicopter which cost $133 million apiece at the time of appropriation. Now before delivery, Litton is demanding $237 million each for a 78% increase in cost. Other examples are numerous.

Conscious concerned people cannot wait for a movement or demonstration or a leader to guide their behavior in times such as now. Does not the reinstatement of credit and status of ROTC; the passive attitude toward the bombing in Cambodia, the military encirclement of Wounded Knee, the para-military tactics used in the Watergate and the continued U. S. sponsored warfare against liberation movements imply to the more insulated and protected of this country that there is no peace? Does not this imply that we are paying for and living within a military state?

The ROTC case is closed. However there is a campaign on campus to aid Native Americans at Wounded Knee and there will be a demonstration at Westover, May 1. This demonstration will include leafleting, guerilla theatre, poetry reading. A protest now may save a "Hell!" later.

Design A Firefighter!

Last year's Urban Vehicle Design Competition provided an opportunity to become involved with, and attempt a solution to, a pressing national problem. It was a total success—from both the educational and experience viewpoints to the winning of the National Safety Award for innovative design in safety systems. All those involved felt it was an experience with many benefits.

For those who missed out, there is another chance. In March of 1974 there will be another student sponsored (student organized and student run) national competition having to do with another pressing national problem—fires. Entry into the competition can be in any or all of fifteen different categories ranging from high rise building rescue to detecting and extinguishing forest fires.

Students Against Fires is the name of it and we are trying to get those interested in working on it together before the end of the semester so that individuals and groups can begin work during the summer. For all those who are interested or who would like to find out more about it, there will be an open meeting on Wednesday, May 2 in Marston Hall, Rooms 132-4 at 8 p.m. If you are interested but cannot attend the meeting please leave your name and a number where you can be reached with Prof. Paul Tartaglia, Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering, ELab 316 either through campus mail or by phone (545-0989, or, if no answer, 545-2505 and leave message).

Ghanian To Speak On Minorities In Business

A Ghanaian graduate student from M.I.T. will speak at a minorities business lecture seminar tomorrow at 8 p.m., Brett Hse. Lobby. He is Mr. Sibie Appiah, a graduate student in Electrical Engineering and Business Administration. Mr. Appiah has studied at Univ. of Washington, Univ. of Mass., Amherst and is presently at M.I.T., Cambridge. He concerns himself with the topic of engineering, business, and other scientific professions in relation to minority problems in the United States and the development of nations in Africa.

Mr. Appiah feels that in an industrialized society such as this country socio-economic problems of African Americans are aggravated by the lack of skill, training, and education, however, in this country black skilled workers, highly trained engineers and businessmen would have yet still to encounter a good deal of blatant discrimination and prejudices in their fields, thus hindering true progress. Mr. Appiah will examine ways in which certain problems could possibly be solved in light of an increased awareness in developing African nations on an economic level.

The event is part of a lecture series in minorities business seminars sponsored by the minorities caucus in Central area.

Public Sculpture In A Big Way

Sculptor, John Raimondi will give a slide-lecture presentation on Public-Scale Art on Tuesday, May 1 at 175 Campus Center at 8:00 p.m.

24 year old Raimondi has done commissioned large scale sculptures for the Haystack-Hinkley School of Art in Maine, Bridgewater State College in Massachusetts, and a piece entitled "Peter-John" for the city of Boston.

He is well known for his insight and knowledge on public scale sculpture and has done slide-presentations on the subject extensively throughout the Northeast.

Like To Be A Naiad?

On Tuesday and Wednesday, May 1 and 2, the Naiads Aquatic Art Club will be sponsoring a workshop. All University men and women who are interested in learning more about aquatic art skills and composition, and who would like to become a Naiad are invited. The workshop will be held at the WoPE pool from 4-5:30 both days. For more information concerning the workshop contact Pat Griffin, 5-2324.

Following the Naiads successful spring performance, two compositions from the show were selected to be presented at the annual International Academy of Aquatic Art Festival in Winnipeg, Canada during the first weekend in May. "Contract" choreographed by Barbara Quinn and performed by Barbara Quinn and Marijo Guimond and "A Meditation", choreographed and performed by Barbara Quinn are the two compositions. Other compositions from all over the United States and Canada will be performed and critiqued by a group of experts in aquatic art.

May Day: Women Against War Return To Westover

"We regret that we must again return to Westover Air Force Base to demonstrate our commitment for peace in Indochina. We would have hoped that during the past year and with the signing of the cease fire, peace could truly have come to the lives of the people of Indochina."

With this statement, the Women Against War Action Group of the Valley Women's Center announced plans for anti-war demonstrations on May Day, May 1st in Chicopee, Massachusetts. The demonstrations will begin at 7:15 a.m. with leafletting at the Main Gate of Westover AFB. At 9:30, people will gather for guerilla theater, women's poetry reading and singing. Following this, the group will move its protest from Westover to the center of Chicopee for a 12 noon demonstration.

A year ago on May 1st, this same group held a demonstration at which 30 women and children were arrested for blocking the gates to the Base. In response to the charge of "disturbing the peace" arising from those arrests, a mock trial will be held in front of the Courthouse in Chicopee.

On Being Arrested: When, What And How

(First half was printed in Friday's Collegian)

When May You Be Searched?

There are specific rules regarding searches of your person, your home, and your car. Generally a police officer may search your person, home, or car only with your permission or with a search warrant or incidental to your arrest. A search warrant is a court order authorizing him to examine a certain area.

The search must be limited to the area described in the warrant. You may ask to see the warrant or the officer may read it to you. It is a court paper and he may retain custody of it. The affidavit listing the reasons for the search warrant is retained in Massachusetts by the court which issued the warrant and to which the warrant is returned. You may read the affidavit in court.

Read carefully any consent form you are asked to sign to see if it conforms to your understanding of what you are agreeing to consenting to let the officer search.

The law of search and seizure is very complex. It is important that you remember and tell your lawyer all possible details about any search of your person, property, or car.

Whenever a search is conducted, remember as many details as you can to tell your lawyer.

Your PERSON may be searched without your consent or without a warrant:

WHEN you have been arrested.

WHEN a policeman has reason to believe you have a weapon that might be used to harm him.

Your HOME may be searched without your consent or without a warrant:

WHEN you are arrested at home. The police may conduct a "limited" search of the area where you are arrested without a search warrant.

If a policeman wants to come in to search your home, you have a right to ask to see the search warrant to find out what parts of the home the officer is authorized to search. The officer may search only the areas of the home listed in the warrant unless he sees contraband in open view. CONTRABAND is any item possession of which is illegal.

What If You Are Questioned?

The law enforcement officer questioning you must tell you that anything you say can be held against you in a court of law.

You may refuse to answer questions and remain silent.

You may consult with a lawyer BEFORE you are questioned.

If you cannot afford a lawyer, the court must provide one for you before you are questioned if you so desire.

You may stop talking at any time if you change your mind after you have started answering questions.

You should consider carefully whether to answer questions. Oral statements are as admissible as written statements in a court.

What May You Be Required To Do?

You may be asked to participate in a line-up, to prepare a sample of your penmanship, or to speak phrases associated with the offense you are charged with. You have a right to have a lawyer present to advise you in respect to these matters.

If someone promises you something if you sign a document or if you are threatened or forced to sign something, tell your lawyer and the police official in charge.

May You Be Physically Examined?

The police may take your fingerprints and photograph. If you are arrested for a felony, the police have a right and a duty to photograph and fingerprint you. You may ask to be examined by your own doctor at your own expense, and the police must give you a reasonable opportunity to have this done.

What Happens to Money or Property You May Have With You?

The police may take money and property from you to keep in a safe place until it can be returned to you or used as evidence.

The police will list the items on an envelope, and they may ask you to sign the list. You should make sure that the list includes all the items taken from you.

Yaacov Eshet, a 27 year old Israeli artist, is exhibiting his work in the Campus Center's Music Library April 30 through May 10.

Growing up on Kibbutz Sarid near Nazareth in Israel, Yaacov's ability as an artist was recognized and his Kibbutz sponsored his passage to the United States and study in Boston at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts. Yaacov is regarded by his teachers and fellow artists throughout Israel and the Northeastern United States as a "visionary artist." Minister To Discuss Military Prisoners

Rev. Robert Horton, a retired Methodist minister and a Visitor for Prisoner Visitation and Support (PVS) will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center, Rm. 904-908. His topic will be prisoners in military prisons throughout the U.S.

The Rev. Robert Horton will speak tonight on the subject of military prisoners in the United States.

Rev. Horton has worked for the American Friends Service Committee conducting community peace education programs in New York, Pennsylvania, and other eastern states. For 10 years he was chairman of the Conference Board of World Peace and of the Rochester Fellowship for Reconciliation.

For the past 4 years he has been a Visitor for PVS, an organization which has supported war resisters for periods originally founded to help conscientious objectors, PVS helps prisoners to receive books and other supplies from outside, discovers and publicizes conditions in prisons and jails, and helps prisoners to keep in contact with family, friends, and other supporters in the outside world.

Rev. Horton shares the concern of conscientious objectors in prison, who have tried to make the public aware of the plight of their less fortunate fellow prisoners.

He said in a letter of February, 1973: "The POW's will soon be home. But war objectors in U.S. prisons will not—Many war resisters as yet untried for their "crimes" still face imprisonment.

It could easily be 3 years after war's end before the last Vietnam War resister is finally released."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries can appear preoccupied with personal problems, more so than the average individual. These natives are basically pioneers, positive that new and better ways can be found to achieve desired results. Many Aries women appear to be frowning when, in actuality, they are squinting in order to "get a better look." Financial position improves in May for many born under this zodiacal sign. Where Aries men are concerned, Casanova and W. C. Fields serve as examples.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get ready for the "end and the beginning." You are on the precipice of opportunity. But some agreements, partnerships, relationships are precarious. Keep guard up—take only calculated risks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Moderate pace. Avoid extremes. Don't ask for too much, too soon. Aquarian could be featured. One who requests favor can do a great service in return. Know it and respond accordingly. You will get something for something.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Social activity accelerates. You do more things, have more opportunities in the wings. Friends who have disputes could attempt to involve you. Maintain neutral stance. Otherwise, you could be "fall guy."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Speak frankly. If honest, you gain. What appears an obstacle could actually be a healthy challenge. One you regard as holding opposite view may actually become your close ally. Roll with the tide. Circumstances favor ultimate achievement.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Review plans, especially those which involve travel. Check stops, reservations and accommodations. Messages could be garbled. Be sure your needs are understood and that you are being quoted correctly. Time now saves inconvenience, money.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Diplomacy is required in money discussion with mate, close associate. Intelligent concession should be order of day. Make peace at home. Smoldering family dispute should be eradicated. Don't compound original error.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Unorthodox procedures will best serve your purpose. Take course which rids you of unnecessary burdens. Create your own traditions. Means don't feel wedded to what others think or do. Be your own person—hear your own voice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Heavier workload indicated. Nothing is apt to come easy but efforts will prove fruitful. Older individual displays confidence. Prestige rises as result. Offer could come which is hard to refuse. Be firm where terms are concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You receive attention from worthwhile sources. More persons are interested in what you plan and do. Aries could play prominent role. Friend who advocates direct action is working in your behalf. Respond accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Strike independent stance—let others know what you want and odds are that you will get what is needed. One in authority is willing to change procedures in manner favorable to you. Know it and deal from position of strength.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20—Feb. 18): Avoid writing letters while angry. Measure words, deeds. Some around you would be pleased if you make a slip based on impulse. Be mature. Rise above the petty. One who taught you in past is available for consultation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check tendency to spread efforts too thin. Finish what you start. Refuse to be tempted into concept that grass must be greener elsewhere. You have plenty that is of value. No need to sell yourself short.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fine sense of humor—and a tendency to put on weight. You are artistic, have great curiosity about the world and will probably do your share of traveling. August could be your most important month of 1973. You are finishing a cycle, completing lessons, perhaps ending a relationship.

Knicks Win Series

Celt's Offense Stalls 94-78

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The New York Knicks, sparked by young Dean Meminger and old pro Walt Frazier, came alive after a slow start and rolled to a 94-78 victory over the Boston Celtics Sunday, advancing to the National Basketball Association's championship finals.

Meminger came off the bench to help rally the New York offense and Frazier took complete charge of the second half as the Knicks won the deciding game of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference championship series.

The Knicks will meet the Los Angeles Lakers for the title in a best-of-seven series starting Tuesday night in Los Angeles. Both the Knicks and Celtics were ice cold at the outset of their decisive meeting before a packed crowd of 15,320 and a national television audience.

The Celtics moved to a 22-19 first-period lead, but then the Knicks warmed up as Meminger replaced ailing Earl Monroe. New York finally pulled away late in the first half, taking a 45-40 lead at the intermission.

The Knicks then turned it into a rout as Boston lost its poise completely in the third period. With Frazier scoring nine points, the Knicks charged to a 72-57 lead after three periods and crushed Boston's hopes for its first NBA title since Bill Russell's retirement in 1969.

Frazier, who had only two points in the opening period, finished with 23 as the Knicks continued their quest to recapture the NBA title they won two years ago.

Dave Cowens and Jo Jo White topped the Boston scoring with 24 and 22 points respectively.

Sox Blanked...

BOSTON (AP) - Wilbur Wood fired a seven-hitter for his second straight shutout and Bill Melton and Dick Allen each hit home runs and drove in two runs as the Chicago White Sox beat the Boston Red Sox 5-0 Sunday.

Wood, who blanked the New York Yankees 3-0 with a five-hitter in his last appearance, notched his fifth victory of the season against two defeats. He outdueled Marty Pattin, 1-4.

After Allen knocked in the White Sox' first run with a force-out bouncer, Melton hit a two-run homer to cap a three-run third inning.

Ed Herrmann slugged a homer in the Chicago fourth and Allen hit a sole shot in the fifth for Chicago's final run.

Women Rowers 2nd, 3rd, In First Two Races

By JOHN BOCK

The UMass Women's Crew team opened their Spring competition with a quadrangular meet at Wesleyan University Saturday April 21. The women rowers placed third in the meet with a 4:31 time, which was ten seconds off the winning time posted by Connecticut College. Other teams in the field included MIT, second with a 4:28 time, and Weslayan who finished last with a 4:37. The conditions on the river were less than good that day and the overall slow times were a result of this.

In Boston, over the weekend, the crew was involved in a quintangular hosted by MIT, and participants were Radcliffe, Wellesley, Middletown High School, and UMass. The women rowed a little better and came home with a second place ribbon and a time of 3:59.9. Winners were perennneial powerhouse Radcliffe with a 3:56 down-the-river finish. Middletown High is the National Junior Champion team and they finished a strong third, being right behind UMass. MIT was fourth and Wellesley, fifth.

Spokeswoman Debbie Kirchmer said "Our program during the week between the two races got alot harder and when we got to Boston the coach only said two words 'Row hard', and I guess we found out what it was like to row hard."

French Crush UMass Gymnasts; Whelan Finishes 8th In AAU's

By JOHN BOCK

It was quite a weekend for the UMass Gymnastics organization. Three representatives of the men's team joined three members of the University of New Hampshire team to meet the French Olympic team. It was an All-UMass team in women, though, that met the French Women's team. And if that isn't enough for those gymnastics lovers, Gene Whelen finished eighth in the National AAU's.

Neither the men's or women's team was able to beat the French Olympians, but they gave them some good competition.

For the women it was the first time that UMass had participated in an international meet under international rules. Jennine Burger copped top honors by taking the All-Around title with a 35.75 score. Close behind was Anna Vexler with a 35.70. For Jeannine it was her highest all around score on the season. She went on to tie for second place in the uneven bars while Anne was fifth in the same event.

It was on the bars that UMass' Margie Combs received a hip injury that resulted in her being pulled out of the rest of the meet. As it was, her finish on the bars was an 8.1 with the one point deducted from her dismount she would have had a 9.1 and that would have put her in there for third place honors in the All-Around. Coach Virginia Evans had Ms. Combs pulled from the lineup for Friday's performance, fearing further competition might make the relatively small injury more serious.

The women had good beam and good floor scores and it was a real credit to some of the performers who were specialists during the season and came on to be a part of the all-around team. They were Marion Kulick, Heidi Armstrong, and Candy Gross. It was the best the French team looked in competition during the tour. The women exchanged gifts as international etiquette requires and there will be several French gymnasts running around in UMass T—shirts. The final meet score was 174 to 166.

The men's team was a lot less than successful even though the three UMass men on the team were some of the top scorers for the Americans. Steve Scuderi was the highest scorer for the American team as he finished seventh in the All Around (The French took first through sixth) Bill Broullet was third high scorer for the men, with Richie Seikunas fourth. It was Broullet's highest career score that earned him that place.

Said Tom Dunn, UMass coach and coach of the American team, "We might have had a chance if we had only counted the three men (instead) of five. It was their depth that hurt us." The French as far as the Olympics, were the thirteenth place finishers and their best all-around man finished fifty-ninth.

Sophomore Gene Whelan competed and placed eighth in the All-Around event and sixth in the parallel bars and rings at the National AAU Gymnastics competition held in Buffalo, New York over the weekend. He was edged out by .7 for sixth in the All-Around by Mel Hill of Temple. He was the fourth best American in the meet as four of the top ten competitors were Japanese. Gene was among a field of sixty competitors and scored his highest career scores. He was invited to the United States Gymnastics Federation's Elite Meet which will decide who will compete for the U.S. in the World University Games to be held this Summer in Moscow.

Flanagan's 3 HR's Win Pair

UMass catcher John Healy, has possibly hit himself into the starting lineup. Tom McDermott is coming off the injured list but will have to work hard to get his job back as the No. 1 man behind the plate.

By MIKE BROPHY

The games were originally scheduled to be played on Friday and Saturday and the Black Bears would be home to Pats' for the Saturday night fun and games. The rain had something else in mind, however, and the two Yankee Conference teams ended up with a twin bill on Sunday. UMass won both contests behind strong pitching, 10-1 and 6-5.

Mike Flanagan collected his seventh victory of the season while pitching six innings of shutout ball before surrendering the lone Maine run of the game in seventh when UMass committed their lone error of the game. Throughout the nine innings he allowed only five men to reach base, two on singles and three on walks.

Of the ten runs scored by UMass, Flanagan was personally responsible for seven of them as he stroked three home runs in four at bats on the day. In the second frame he put UMass at bats on the day. In the second frame he put UMass into the lead with a solo shot over the left center fence. He returned to the plate in the third frame with two runners on base and put a line shot over the right center fence. The score was UMass on top 5-0 with Flanagan performing the bulk of the power.

His third shot of the day came in the eighth frame with two men on and this bolt catapaulted the Minuteman's lead to 9-1.

By the time the first game was over most people at Earl Lorden Field were frozen and for those who stayed until the 5:30 conclusion of game two. . . it was indeed a long but rewarding afternoon. The second game saw UMass and Maine battle through six scoreless innings before John Olson began to show signs of tiring. He walked the first man to face him in the sixth and gave up a line single to the second batter which set the stage for Len Larabee's three run homer that sailed over the left field fence near the scoreboard.

Tom White then came on to retire the uprising Bears and worked two good innings in relief before being lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth.

It was in the bottom of the eighth when the hometowners rallied to tie the score at three. Ron Beauriwage led it all off with a walk and stole second to get in scoring position. John Healy then proceed to rip a shot into right field to deliver the initial run.

Steve Newell walked to fill the vacancy at first and then Dan Kelly delivered the triple that tied it allup. He died on third, however, as the UMass were unable to spot another hit

Maine rallied in the top of the ninth frame in a final effort to put the game away as UMass' fielding broke down behind Craig Allegrezza. Two fielding errors, the first on a routine sacrifice bunt, set up the rally that seemed to render UMass helpless.

The UMass guns came to life again as they rallied for three runs in the last of the ninth to put the screws to Maine. It was Kelly who singled in the tying and winning runs.

Tracksters Run Cold At Penn.

By MDC STAFF

Sloppy handoffs, and a cold, windy rain that magnified the incohesiveness of a team that hadn't run together as a unit in over three weeks were given as the reasons for the failure of UMass 440 and 880 relay teams in the Penn relays.

"We missed qualifying in both events by one tenth of a second", said a disappointed Captain Tony Pendleton. "We were tied for the lead until the third leg of our 440 relay heat, but then our passes hurt us. Our time of 43.3 was by far our worst of the year, but the bad weather hurt everybody, and a lot of teams did bad. Three teams we had beaten earlier in the B.C. relays, Dartmouth, UConn, and Northeastern, made it to the finals ahead of UMass. In both the 440 and 880 heats we finished third out of eight teams, but we had a bad day, and it wasn't enough," he added.

The Minutemen were blanked in the other events, a combination of below average performances and tough competition.

Golfers, Netsters Conquor YanCons

Netsters Gain No. 1 Status . . .

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

STORRS, Conn.—As if the pressure of being the overwhelming favorites wasn't enough, the UMass netmen heaped upon themselves one ulcer-producing situation after another—all of which they responded to superbly in collecting their third Yankee Conference Championships in a row. By amassing 21 points (to that of 15 for URI and 13 for UConn) UMass captured five of the nine brackets, winning three singles and two doubles positions.

With rain forcing the tournament inside, the YanCon's were held on three indoor courts, the surface of which was lightning fast. Ironically, the netmen feared playing at UConn because of their clay, the slowest of tennis surface. The Minutemen were hopeful of playing on hard surfaces, but hard doesn't mean lightning; after all, it's difficult to return bullet serves, no less see them.

With the courts accentuating everyone's serve and volley game, the lack of courts cast a different light on the championships.

For 16 hours on Friday, the tournament trudged on, as the unusual court limitations allowed each team to view the matches of their teammates. For UMass this was a towel-eating, nail-biting predicament. All six UMass singles men had three-set matches, the closest of which was Robert Schpeiser's at second singles (he went down to the final tiebreaker point before winning 6-7, 6-2, 7-6).

First singles man Ted Donahue lost 6-7, before winning 6-3, in his semifinal match while Captain Steve Ferber, playing at three, returned his teammates to their anxious states, by getting blown off the court 6-2 in the opening set, before recovering 6-3, 6-4.

Fourth, fifth and sixth singles hardly had a tranquilizing effect upon the netmen. Gary Ney at four lost a third set heartbreaker 7-5, as an untimely thunder storm produced a power failure that broke Ney's momentum and quite possibly cost him the match. At singles, Don Douglas staged a tremendous comeback, against the powerfully eratic Robert Norton of UConn. This time Norton was hot and Douglas thought it was "bye now". But Douglas played brilliantly in turning the tide after dropping set number one. His three set ordeal looked more like a first singles final than a fifth singles semis.

Fred Braley, UMass' number six man waited 10 1/2 hours to give his followers all kinds of grief. Capturing the first set easily, Braley pulled his now famous "I'll-fall-asleep-in-the-second-set" trick, and finally rebounded to take an ever-tight third set 6-4.

With five players in the finals of the singles, UMass was pretty well set. The pressure had been real though. Jokingly called, "The UCLA of the Yankee Conference" the Minutemen knew that all five teams were fighting madly to knock them off. Everyone was "up" for a match with UMass. They expected to lose, and thus had everything to gain. Add to this the fact that five of Kosakowski's boys were playing for two points instead of one, and you would have needed a razor sharpened axe, not a knife, to cut through the tension in the air. Friday's matches had served the netmen well, and by night's end not one had avoided a total emotional draining.

The victors in the singles brackets were Ferber, Douglas and Braley, at third, fifth and sixth (all winning easily in two sets). Doubl winner Douglas teamed with Donahue for the Conference doubles crown, as Mike Philipp joined Schpeiser for a win at second doubles and a UMass grand total of 21 points. At third doubles, Ferber and Braley clinched the match hours before the tournament's end, by winning their crucial match against U.R.I. 7-5, 6-1.

Junior Don Douglas, in his first year with the UMass netmen, was the sole double winner in last week's Yankee Conference championships. Douglas won the fifth singles final 6-1, 6-3, and teamed with Ted Donahue for the Yankee Conference doubles crown.

Nixon Accepts Watergate Blame

Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Kleindienst Resign; Dean Fired

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon told the nation last night that he accepts final responsibility for the Watergate scandal that led him to accept the resignations of H. R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst.

In a solemn address to the nation, hours after a major shakeup in his administration, the President said the blame belongs at the top. "I accept it," he said in a nationally broadcast and televised address.

In the shakeup, Nixon fired presidential counsel John W. Dean III and nominated Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson to be attorney general.

The President gave Richardson the job of overseeing the administration's Watergate investigation and of naming a special prosecutor to probe the incident if Richardson deems one necessary.

Until late March, Nixon said, he had been assured by those around him that no one in the administration was involved in the bugging and wiretapping.

"However, new information then came to me which persuaded me that there was a real possibility some of these charges were true, and suggested further that there had been an effort to conceal these facts both from the public, from you, and from me," Nixon said.

Thus did Nixon disclaim any advance knowledge of the June 17 break-in at Democratic national headquarters.

The President said he ordered an intensive new inquiry with the results to be reported directly to him.

He said he was determined that the truth be brought out, no matter who was involved.

The resignations of Haldeman and Ehrlichman as top White House aides, Nixon said, did not imply their guilt. He called them two of the finest public servants he had ever known.

"I wanted to be fair, but I knew that in the final analysis the integrity of this office and public faith in the integrity of this office would have to take priority over all personal consideration," Nixon said.

The drama of the address recalled another moment of crisis, 21 years ago, when as vice presidential nominee, Nixon delivered his "Checkers speech" defending the $18,235 trust fund that helped pay his political expenses as a U.S. senator from California. Now, in a new time of political trauma, Nixon vowed that he would not place the blame on subordinates to whom he delegated responsibility for his 1972 campaign.

Indeed, he praised the federal judge and the free press that discovered the intrigue behind the June 17 incident at Democratic Party headquarters in the Watergate office building.

He said the case represented a series of illegal acts, bad judgments, over zealousness by a number of individuals.

"America is its political campaigns must never again fall into the trap of letting the end, no matter how great that end is, justify the means," Nixon said.

With that he called for political reforms, "a new set of standards," to ensure that future campaigns be as free of abuses as possible.

He made no specific proposals, but he has assigned Richardson the task of determining what specific changes in federal campaign laws are necessary.

Earlier in the day, Nixon had said that Haldeman and Ehrlichman "were two of my closest friends and trusted assistants . . ."

He said Kleindienst believed he could not continue as attorney general because it appears close associates may be implicated in the Watergate inquiry.

Kleindienst already had withdrawn from the case, on the same grounds.

Senate sources have accused Haldeman and Ehrlichman of involvement in an alleged White House attempt to cover up the Watergate wiretapping affair.

Nixon said the resignations should not be interpreted as evidence of wrongdoing by either one.

Monday night, Gordon Strachan, who reportedly testified before a federal grand jury that Haldeman kept $350,000 in his White House safe during the re-election campaign, resigned as general counsel to the U.S. Information Agency. There have been published reports that the money was used to silence some of the seven Watergate defendants.

The USIA said Strachan had learned "that persons with whom he had worked closely while at the White House had submitted their resignations today . . .

USIA released a statement saying: "Mr. Strachan stressed that he had no complicity in the Democratic National Committee break-in or in any alleged attempt to cover it up . . ."

Haldeman and Ehrlichman told the President in their letters of resignation they will meet this week, at their request, with federal prosecutors and lawyers for the special Senate committee on Watergate.

The President said he had asked for the resignation of Dean, who reportedly has been accused of helping to plan the wiretapping raid on Democratic headquarters.

Nixon said that pending Richardson's confirmation by the Senate to become attorney general, "I have asked him to involve himself immediately in the investigative processes surrounding the Watergate matter."

As attorney general, Nixon said, Richardson will have full responsibility for coordinating "all federal agencies in uncovering the whole truth about this matter," and recommending changes in federal law to prevent future campaign abuses.

Kleindienst is to remain at the Justice Department and Richardson at the Pentagon until the Defense secretary is confirmed as attorney general.

The announcement of the personnel shakeup, at the pinnacle of government, followed a weekend of seclusion for the President in which he talked at Camp David, Md., with Haldeman and Ehrlichman, respectively his chief of staff and assistant for domestic affairs.

Haldeman, 46, regarded as the most powerful man on the White House staff, said in a statement that it had become "virtually impossible . . . for me to carry on my regular responsibilities in the White House" because of what he called allegations, innuendos and a "flood of stories arising every day from all sorts of sources."

Ehrlichman, 48, has remained relatively untouched by recent Watergate disclosures until last week when it was disclosed acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray III destroyed sensitive documents given him by Ehrlichman and Dean. Gray resigned last Friday, hours after that report was published.

The documents were said to include forged cables linking the late President John F. Kennedy to the 1963 assassination of South Vietnamese chief of state Ngo Dinh Diem.

In his letter to the President, Ehrlichman wrote of "repeated rumor, unfounded charges or implications or whatever the media carries."

He denied reports linking him to intervention on behalf of accused financial swindler Robert L. Vesco in a Lebanese banking deal and said, "Regardless of the actual facts, I have been a target of public attack."

Such attacks, he wrote Nixon, have impaired "my present usefulness to you and ability to discharge my duties."

Dean's dismissal was covered in one Nixon sentence:

"I have today requested and accepted the resignation of John W. Dean III from his position on the staff as White House counsel."

Richardson issued a statement saying he was accepting the new appointment "because I believe I have an overriding duty to do so." He said he will have no further comment until the Senate confirms

1500 Protest Parking Hike

By STEPHEN FINE

Students, faculty, and professional and non-professional staff voiced their objections to the new proposed parking hike in a heated meeting yesterday afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom.

A panel of students, faculty and administrators, who had played some part in formulating the new fees were on hand to answer questions about the plan.

The three hour meeting which was held before a crowd of 1,500 produced two possible threats of legal action by employee unions on campus and numerous complaints by students.

Augustus J. Camillo, an attorney for AFL-CIO Local 1776, said in a speech that he would file an unfair labor practice suit against the University for not bargaining in good faith.

This same threat was issued by Bernard Turner, President of the Massachusetts State Employees Association, (MSEA), in a statement which said, "If the University served any parking fees on employees an unfair labor practice charge would be filed by the State Labor Commission.

Camillo said that a plan similar to the proposed one was revoked by the University during collective bargaining with Local 1776 after the union rejected it.

He also indicated that he would pursue "other action" as well because "he thought the fees were unfair and discriminatory." When asked later what type of action would be taken he said, "We'll tell you when we take it."

Turner, President of the MSEA, said the fees were an issue that caused an impasse during the negotiations for a new contract.

"In order to prevent any further breaches of good faith in collective bargaining, we request that you postpone any action on the parking proposals," he said in a written statement.

Turner later said that parking was a collective bargaining issue, since it was a condition of employment.

Dorothy Murray, an executive board member of the MSEA blamed the State legislature for not providing enough money for parking spaces on campus.

"The administration has built buildings but not provided parking spaces for people who work in them," she said.

State Rep. Jim Collins (D-Amherst) said yesterday that he would be "happy to" sponsor a bill requesting state aid for parking improvements at UMass if a majority of the campus community wants such aid.

"It might be time to reassess the arising problem and maybe make a higher priority," he said, adding that no state funds have gone to the University since 1967.

Collins said that the University has an obligation to provide a parking place for its employees, "if possible at no cost."

This type of opinion seemed to be voiced throughout the Ballroom during the course of the meeting, from all segments of the campus community. Students, faculty, and non-professional people went to the microphone and voiced their opposition to the proposed plan.

An irate commuter spoke on his inability to afford the fees to be imposed.

"Where am I going to get the money to pay for a space. The only two things I see as necessary to pray for here are tuition and books", he said.

To this Vice-Chancellor Gage suggested he move into a car pool, and buy a parking space collectively.

This the commuter said was impossible due to schools conflicts.

A man who identifies himself as a member of the non-professional work force queried the panel as to what would happen if nobody payed the fee next year.

To this Campion said, "We'll just have to fact that when we come to it."

Numerous times during the meeting Campion assured the audience the money from parking would go into off campus buses but would rather be restricted to funding an on-campus shuttle which would run to and from parking lots.

Paul Shaffner, Chairman of the Parking and Transportation Council, the group that formulated the plan, said that this shuttle system could be expected to run every ten minutes from the lot.

When a commuter asked the panel what would happen after the present bus system ceased to run to areas like South Deerfield, Shaffner said discussions had begun with the five college area to acquire further funds. Campion added that a meeting had been held with two town selectmen to solicit additional support for the system.

The only other support for the plan besides that from the panel came from one student in the audience. He said the University of Wisconsin had been faced with a similar parking problem, and had limited the number of cars on campus by ticketing.

After he was done speaking, he was repeatedly hissed and booed, as he walked out.

Governor Francis Sargent expresses his opinions on the problems of mental institutions in the state of Massachusetts in a talk with UMass student Thomas Blanchette.

Student Bicycles To Boston

By MARK VOGLER

A University of Massachusetts student believes that not only talk, but action is of vital importance in solving social problems.

Thomas Blanchette, 25, of Sudbury, discussed with Gov. Francis W. Sargent Thursday the existing conditions of mental institutions in the Commonwealth.

Sunday, Blanchette set out on the 100 mile journey on his 100-speed racer from Belchertown State School at 5 a.m. with his destination being a rally to be held at the Boston Commons to help raise funds for the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens.

It was Ride-A-Bike-For-The-Retarded Day as thousands of bicyclists from across the state participated in the event.

The trip was a work-out for the UMass senior and turned out to be the longest-known ride of the day. He said he hadn't ridden a bike since the fall.

"It wasn't really that bad. I've ridden further before. One time I rode 200 miles in 17 hours with a five-hour rest period," he said.

"I hope this ride will help to create an awareness among the public that there are those who care for the well being of the mentally retarded in Massachusetts. I'm sure it will alert the legislature as to the resident's plight. The Governor knew of my bike ride."

Blanchette is a political science major concerned with social change. He serves as a volunteer at the Belchertown State School and is also President of Students Offering Support (S.O.S.), a student agency established to help the retarded.

Town Selectmen Hear Sewer Plan

By ED FOGARTY

A proposal to alleviate the present sewer ban by lifting the sewer restrictions on a priority basis was presented to the Amherst Selectmen by Town Manager Allen Torrey last night.

The proposal was aired at last night's meeting before a roomful of private developers in the Amherst area.

In other business, the Selectmen discussed the public's right to know and one-day wine and beer licenses.

"I think what we have here is a pretty restrictive code," said Torrey.

The priority system Torrey suggested would allow construction to continue according to what construction is needed by the town.

The present sewer extension ban has been imposed by the State Water Pollution Control Board since Feb. 16, and is all inclusive.

Alice Epstein, Chairwoman of the Planning Board, said, "Mr. Torrey's proposal is a significant lifting of the ban, but I do not think it is a priority system."

Epstein proposed that the Board take action to restrict permits to construct septic tanks in non-sewage line areas. She said that under the present ban the pressure would be to construct septic tanks in the non-banned areas. She also felt that priority system should receive attention only after a ban had been placed upon septic tank construction.

A number of small developers asked the Board if it were not possible to allow them to continue construction. Robert Glass, a local retail store builder, asked if it wouldn't be all right for him to continue construction if he stripped one of his stores of a sewer connection and replaced it with another sewer connection in another store.

Selectman Merle H. Howes replied that he saw no reason for Glass not to continue construction.

The Board decided that it could not take any action because it was a state imposed ban.

John Darby, a spokesman for the Amherst Fields Development housing project on Belchertown Road, told the Selectmen that he thought the state should not have any right to interfere in Amherst's business.

Darby said Torrey called for a return to home rule.

In other business the Selectmen voted to send to each Board and Committee of the Town, a letter reminding them of the law in regard to executive session.

The letter is to be sent in response to last week's meeting with the Planning Board which was called into executive session "for no good reason", according to Chairman of the Selectmen Michael Sullivan.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy noted that there has been little trouble with abuse of the Executive session law other than this one time, and asked that the language of the letter be kept lenient.

A member of the press pointed out that this was only the first "abuse that we know about, what goes on in the other executive sessions we don't know."

The Selectmen refused to allow the UMass Food Service to have a one day beer and wine license because the UMass Trustee policy is not to allow any liquor to be sold on UMass property.

The Selectmen asked that the University review its policy in light of the new eighteen year old drinking law.

Fraternities are excepted under this ruling, and Phi Sigma Kappa was granted a one day beer and wine license retroactive for April 29.

Watergate Shakes White House him for the Justice Department job.

Kleindienst is a close friend of former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell, who has acknowledged bugging plans were discussed in his presence—although he said he had not approved them.

The Watergate affair unfolded by stages—the latest beginning with President Nixon's announcement April 17 that there were major developments in the case.

The first stage concluded Jan. 30 with the conviction of James W. McCord Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy on charges of conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping. Five men had pleaded guilty earlier to the same charges.

On March 23, when he sentenced Liddy to a prison term of 6-20 years, Federal Judge John J. Sirica disclosed a letter by McCord that claimed political pressure had been applied to keep the seven defendants silent, that there were perjury at the trial and that others were involved.

McCord then began testifying—before a Senate committee, a federal grand jury and in depositions for civil suits stemming from Watergate break-in.

Acting on his disclosures, federal prosecutors called Jeb Stuart Magruder, the No. 2 man in the Committee for the Re-election of the President. He reportedly said that he, Dean and Mitchell were involved in planning the bugging and, later, payoffs to buy silence from the Watergate seven.

On the say of Nixon's announcement, Haldeman and Ehrlichman retained an attorney, John J. Wilson, who since has met twice with the President and also with the federal prosecutors in the case.

On April 19, Dean bypassed regular White House channels and announced he would not be made a scapegoat in the case.

The following day Nixon met with his Cabinet, vowing, sources said, "to get to the bottom" of the scandal.

Easter Sunday he telephoned Dean, Haldeman and Ehrlichman and wished them happy Easter. He reportedly told Dean "you're still counsel to the President."

Two major resignations preceded those announced Monday. Gray resigned last Friday. So did Magruder, Mitchell's deputy in the campaign and later director of the inaugural committee, who quit a $36,000-a-year job at the Commerce Department.

In other Watergate developments:

—McCord spent the day giving a deposition in civil suits growing out of the Watergate affair.

—In Los Angeles, at the Pentagon Papers trial, Daniel Ellsberg's chief attorney asked that Gray, Dean and convicted conspirators E. Howard Hunt and Liddy testify about an alleged burglary of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office. The judge indicated he would prefer to take sworn affidavits.

—The White House confirmed that the trial judge, William Mathew Byrne, has been sounded out as a possible candidate for director of the FBI.

"...give me hell..."

WASHINGTON (AP)—After addressing the nation on Watergate, President Nixon stepped into the White House press room Monday night and told newsmen, "just continued to give me hell when you think I'm wrong."

Without advance notice, the President stepped behind a rostrum in the press briefing room and began talking into microphones that were not connected.

Looking rather grim, Nixon began by saying he and the press had had differences in the past but added: "Just case continue to give me hell when you think I'm wrong. I hope I'm worthy of your trust."

With that, Nixon left the room.

The White House stuck to a decision not to permit customary post-speech photos of Nixon behind his desk in the Oval Office.

However, photographers snapped off some quick pictures during his appearance in the briefing room.
